Section 8 housing takes a hit

Dilapidated houses in Weinland Park and campus area will be sold to private sector

By Jessica Herzfeld Lantern staff writer

Columbus will lose 122 units of low-income housing and may lose another 137 units in the near future.

The low-income housing, known as Section 8 housing, are homes for the impoverished, which are meant to be safe, clean and affordable.

Originally, there were 1,335 Section 8 units in Columbus. Managed by Broad Street Management, Inc., the units were scattered around the city, with the greatest concentration in the Weinland Park region. The units were owned by several private owners, but were recently sold to Ohio Capital Corporation for Housing and put into The Broad Street Portfolio.

"We got involved because contracts on the Section 8 housing were expiring," said Steve Sterrett, spokesman for Campus Partners.

Campus Partners worked with OCC to develop a plan to improve the houses, which will stay in the portfolio as Section 8 homes. Under prior ownership, owners would only receive $1,500 for much-needed renovations.

"We felt the housing would only deteriorate further," Sterrett said. "It would negate every positive thing we are trying to do.

With the help of a $750,000 appropriation from Sen. Mike DeWine and Rep. Deborah Pryce, Campus Partners and OCC will put $30,000 per unit into restructuring repairs into each unit remaining in the portfolio.

"This will improve the curb appeal of the units," Sterrett said. "If we improve the quality of housing you will improve the interior.

Sterrett said he hopes to have a higher turnover of tenants remaining in the houses after they have been restructured.

"About 50 percent of the residents moved each year, which reflected the fact that this was housing of last resort," he said.

The investment in the Section 8 units will allow more careful screening of tenants, which in turn will add stability to the neighborhood.

Former president values service

By Rhiannon Mehring Lantern staff writer

Former President George H.W. Bush emphasized the importance of values in business and community service during yesterday's Ohio Chamber of Commerce 110th annual meeting at the Ohio Theatre.

Bush said he was delighted to be back in the state of Ohio, the birthplace of his grandfather, who previously served on the board of directors for the Chamber of Commerce.

"The theme of this chamber is not only ethical business, but service, and one American helping another," Bush said.

Bush referred to his grandfather as a champion of public service who taught him the importance of serving the community and instilled the values he stands by today.

"The government can't do what a sensitive heart can do," Bush said. "Some place in some community, volunteers are continually helping one another."

Bush said lately people seem to beat up the business community, and it isn't fair.

You (the business community) are the professionals, and I'm not here to give you advice," Bush said. "However, if I violated this and did offer one piece of advice, it would be not to judge the entire U.S. economy based on a few greedy corporations cutting corners."

Bush said the economy is showing good signs even though many people are hurting. He commended President George W. Bush's tax cut, at which point the audience applauded.

"I have no doubt the economy is poised to pick up pace," Bush said.

Bush kept an upbeat mood throughout the speech and often joked with the audience. He impersonated the infamous Dana Carvey parody on Saturday Night Live of himself, and referred to George W. Bush as "No. 43" and himself as "No. 41."

ROTC grads ready to serve

With recent impending conflicts, many Ohio State grads may head off to fight

By Mike White Lantern staff writer

For many students, graduation from Ohio State represents a new beginning that offers uncertainties and new situations. Nowhere is this uncertainty more evident than in the lives of ROTC students who, after commencement, will serve their country in a new, active and dangerous military world.

When they joined the OSU ROTC program they, like anyone else, did not anticipate the Sept. 11 attacks and the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq. However, ROTC students said they understood when they signed up for the program the military can be called on to do anything without much warning.

"I realized when I joined the ROTC that it was the Army," said Tom Hardy, a senior in electrical engineering. "That's the Army's job, to fight the United States' wars. I knew that would come into play at some point." Phil Sautter, a senior in aeronautical engineering said the conflicts gave him mixed emotions about the dangers he might face, but he is willing to do whatever the military asks him to do.

"It's kind of a grim reminder of the business that I chose to be in." Sautter said. "But it didn't bother me one bit. I'm very optimistic about going over there because I know that I'm doing everything for the right reasons. I'm excited to get out there, but nervous as well."

Now that the world has changed, ROTC students, like all military personnel, will almost certainly be called on for duty, said Army Maj. Ralph Locke.

"The Army has changed drastically recently," Locke said. "The number of major deployments has drastically increased. A soldier coming into the Army today will be deployed somewhere around the world. He knows that he will be, whether it is in Bosnia or Afghanistan or Iraq or somewhere else.'

Locke said his students are ready and willing to face the danger.

"We will respond to whatever our civilian leaders call us to do," he said. "It's a very exciting time in the Army. I think our students are looking for the challenges and want to serve our country.

a sign of their college career's end. Marine, Air Force and Army ROTC students will become second lieutenants, and Navy ROTC students will become ensigns as a signal of their completion of the ROTC leadership program. Most will then go off to basic officer training programs across the country to learn more about how to be an officer in their respective branches of the military. After that they can either choose to enter active duty orjoin the Reserve and enter the private sector.

Although the number fluctuates, about 75 percent of all ROTC students will choose active duty. Those who choose active duty will be assigned a leadership position in the military somewhere across the globe. Their deployment usually takes at least nine months fol-

Ohio State received more than $11 million in research grant funding yesterday as part of Gov. Bob Taft's Third Frontier Project.

Taft presented two checks to leaders from the College of Medicine and Public Health and the College of Engineering at a ceremony yesterday morning. The funding is designed to support state-of-the-art research projects and create a new center for biomedical research. Taft said the research will help make Ohio a long-term competitor in the "battleground" of the global economy. These projects have the potential to touch the lives of every Ohioan," he said.

In her opening remarks, OSU President Karen A. Holbrook said the grants will further the work of some of OSU's leading researchers.

"The results and innovations of their work are saving lives and improving the quality of life for people everywhere," she said.

OSU is the site of the first Wright Center for Innovation in biosciences, made possible by a $9.1 million check. The grant will allow for the development of a new MRI scanner. Using an imaging process, doctors will be able to observe patient response to medications and adjust treatments on an individual level.

The project entails a collaborative

Of the 122 units taken out of the portfolio, 34 will be demolished, and the remaining will be restructured and sold as private entities, said Hal Keller, president of OCC.

"Overall, I can say more than 100 (units) are in the Weinland Park and campus area," Keller said of the Section 8 homes that were taken out of the portfolio. Keller was unable to name the specific addresses of the homes.

'Most of the units (were taken out) because of physical conditions," said Preston Pace, director of Ohio Multi-family

Hub for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. "They would take quite a bit to rebuild."

Difficulties in management because crime and drugs were also reasons units were taken out of the Section 8 portfolio, Sterrett said.

Losing the units of lowincome Section 8 housing is part of the process known as deconcentration, which is designed to create an economically diverse community by diffusing the number of low-income homes in one area. The deconcentration process creates balance, Keller said. "If we are able to do a modest level of deconcentration we would prefer to do that," Sterrett said

HUD has permitted 10 percent of the units to be taken out of the portfolio and OCC along with Campus Partners are working with Congressman Pat Tiberi to remove more in a "legislative fix," Keller said.

The original proposal was to remove 300 to 500 units of the Section 8 housing. The renovations of the remaining units will take between three to four years. However, there is no rush to complete the project sooner, because of the possibility of removing more units with Tiberi's help,

Trash pick-up hits campus

By Elisa Miller Lantern staff writer

Several OSU organizations and community groups will participate in a campus litter pick-up and community cleanup event on Saturday.

At noon, on the corner of 15th Avenue and High Street, Mayor Michael B. Coleman, Archie Griffin and city council member Patsy Thomas will meet with groups from Off-Campus Student Services and Keep Columbus Beautiful. They plan to film a public service announcement about neighborhood litter cleanups and recycling, which will run on Fox.

KCB will supply the organizations with trash bags, gloves and tools as they proceed to the residential areas east of campus to pick up trash, said Jim Robinson, spokesman for KCB. They also arranged for the Columbus Division of Refuse Collection to pick up the trash bags and take them to a landfill, he said.

"We promote recycling, city beautification and litter and graffiti prevention," Robinson said.

KCB relies on civic and community organizations to volunteer for the neighborhood cleanups, Robinson said. "Mayor Coleman often helps pick up too," Robinson said. "He's really into volunteering." The event will also highlight the Adopt-A-Street program, which operates through Off-Campus Student Services.

There are 15 student organizations that have adopted streets from Oakland to 12th Avenue, between Summit and High Streets. Among the groups participating in the Adopt-A-Street program are several fraternities, sororities, scholars groups and the Undergraduate Student Government.

"We will present each group with a sign designating their adopted street," McLaughlin said. "It's sort of an acknowledgment of the students for their work and dedication to the community."

This neighborhood cleanup wraps up the Great American Cleanup, which is sponsored every year from March through May, by Keep America Beautiful, Robinson said

"It's great to see all these organizations throughout the city trying to look out for their community's welfare," Robinson said.

Stewart's interest in social work specifically focuses on adoption and foster care. Her mother was a mentor at an orphanage and influenced Stewart to come with her to help mentor children.

'My mother made me volunteer. I didn't understand why I couldn't go out and play but now I appreciate all that," Stewart said.

Stewart continued working with children when her parents opened a day care center. She acted as a substitute teacher, and still works at the center during her breaks and holidays.

'She was very involved at the day care center," said her father, Raymond Stewart. "We had interracial kids there who did not have both parents. She paid more attention to them, and showed sympathy for those kids."

Stewart has made it her goal to ensure that children receive the love, attention and adoration they deserve from their families. Her voice becomes more solemn when she speaks about finding families for children in foster care.

Stewart has taken a firm stand on transracial placement, which involves placing foster children with permanent families of another race.

"I would rather see a child grow up in a family than a foster home," Stewart said.

She advocates for transracial placement at the epicenter of opposition. The National Association of Black Social Workers is against the issue. Stewart attended its annual conference in Jacksonville, Fla. in April as a firsttime observer, and returned to Columbus as the national secretary of the organization.

"I didn't think she'd run for office her very first year. I was even more surprised when she won," said Traci Lewis, Mwanafunzi advisor.

Stewart joined as part of her personal crusade to make a difference.

"I joined because I didn't agree with their stand," Stewart said. She is also involved in the local chapter of NABSW.

If she is as committed nationally as she is locally, she'll do an excellent job," Lewis said.

Stewart's accomplishments do not stop there. She recently received the Thelma Goodman Scholarship, an award presented to a student with an interest in adoption and foster care.

"It bothers me more than anything when I see a baby without sracial families.

socks," she said.

Stewart may never put socks on the feet of her own child. She was diagnosed last August with Leiomyoma, a uterine disease. The genetic disease has created non-cancerous tumors inside of Stewart.

"I knew I had it at 19, but doctors said I was too young. I had it for four years before I was diagnosed," Stewart said. Stewart has had three procedures in which doctors have removed the tumors. Each removal attempt leaves scar tissue in Stewart's uterus, making it less and less likely for her to have children.

'I want a lot of kids so I'd probably adopt a newborn, a threeyear-old, and a seven-year-old,"

She also said she would raise her children just like her parents

Stewart is working with children at the Ohio Department of Health, and is enrolled as a fulltime student. She will begin a training program with Franklin County Children's Services in the fall, and one day hopes to implement a program for children who are placed with tran-

An F-14 is launched off the deck of the USS Harry S. Truman in the Atlantic Ocean. Navy ROTC student Phil Sautter said he hopes to fly a jet similar to this one.

OSU ROTC students have aspirations to do many different jobs once they are deployed. From flying fighter jets to being a lawyer in post-war areas to coordinating medical missions, there will be many OSU alumni serving the United States in various aspects of the military.

Adam Weitzel, who received his law degree from OSU's Moritz College of Law on May 9, sees himself as a judge advocate general. He will enter Georgetown Law School to receive an advanced law degree while serving in the National Guard and will then enter JAG corps to learn more about military law.

"They need attorneys everywhere over there," Weitzel said. "While I won't be out there driving a tank or carrying a rifle, I will be out there doing some important things. Right now in Afghanistan and Iraq, lawyers are going to be a big part of rebuilding. They need lots of judges and lawyers. In the next three years, I'm sure I'll be a part of it."

Sautter will go to Pensacola Fla. for flight school for two years after graduation to learn how to become a fighter pilot in the Navy.

Sautter said while the ROTC program didn't teach him how to fly a multi-million dollar aircraft, it did prepare him for the mental situations he will have to deal with in combat.

"They put you under a lot of cal-culated stress," Sautter said. "They teach you how to deal with stress. They throw you into the fire and take you out and tell you what you did wrong, and you learn a lot from those situations.

ROTC's mission is to develop the future military leaders of America,

"I'm very optimistic about going over there because I know that I'm doing everything for the right reasons. I'm excited to get out there, but nervous as well."

said Marine Maj. Todd Hunt.

"The mission of the ROTC program is to develop the future leaders of the military — mentally, physically and morally," Hunt said.

The students said they are prepared to be those leaders.

"We are going to have a lot of responsibilities," said Neil Copenhaver, a senior in aviation flight systems. "A lot of the ROTC is based on leadership and learning how to deal with subordinates."

"The ROTC is pretty much the best leadership course there is," Hardy said.

Hardy will be in charge of deploying medical staff and equipment to soldiers who are in need.

"Someone higher than me will say that I need medical support here," he said. "And I will have to get my people

While their deployment could prove to be in a hostile area, many in the ROTC program are cautiously optimistic that they will end up safe.

"I have a lot of faith if you do your best, things will work out," said Kyle Whitehair, a senior in aviation management. "Any normal person would be a little worried, but I have faith and confidence that things will work out."

The students said their families are concerned about their futures but are also confident that things will work out.

They're worried, of course, as any family would be," Sautter said. "But mostly they're very supportive. They're more proud then they are worried."

Often times the conversations with their families tend to stay off the topic of war, said Erik Graham, a senior in history.

"Sure, there's some concern," Graham said. "But we never really talk about it. We just keep it light and don't ROTC students will be officially done with the program on June 13, when they are commissioned at Mirror Lake after commencement.

Group turns up heat on mercury disposal

By Benjamin Hickey Lantern staff writer

The Ohio Mercury Reduction Group is stepping up efforts to dispose of mercury and educate people about the health issues it poses to Ohio residents.

The group includes representatives from the Ohio Environmental Protection Agency, the Ohio Department of Health, the Ohio Department of Education, the Ohio Public Utilities Commission and Bowling Green State University.

"The group was spearheaded by the U.S. EPA. We are working to put comprehensive information in the hands of emergency responders," said Linda Oros, spokeswoman for the Ohio EPA.

Mercury is a naturally occurring element most have seen in its liquid metal form. Also known as quicksilver, mercury is typically found in the form of an ore containing mercuric sulfide. The mercury is vaporized from the ore by heating it at a high temperature, and the vapors are captured and cooled.

The metal has a high toxicity to humans and can cause damage the cury poisoning include nervousness, numbness, dizziness and mental instability.

"It is a bioaccumulative, so over time it will build up in someone's system." Oros said

Mercury can also be found in household items and automotive parts. Thermometers, thermostats, propellants and electronics are common items that contain mercury.

The OMRG, created in May 2000, has a goal to help reduce the presence of mercury in the state of Ohio. Organizations involved have created five programs to reduce mercury use and exposure. They have distributed comprehensive fact sheets and guidelines to businesses, such as auto salvage yards, where mercury is a common issue.

Kristopher Weiss, spokesman for the Ohio Department of Health, said the departments assist state and county agencies in handling mercury spills and contamination.

"Our role is to help with cleanup and to advise on cleanup," he said.

Mike Dalton is the emergency response on-scene coordinator for Division of Hazardous Waste Materials, a part of the Ohio EPA. He assists nervous system. Symptoms of mer-state and county agencies in cleanup, their collecting," Oros said.

collection and disposal.

Iurisdiction on mercury cleanup depends on setting and circumstance, he said. In a private business or residence, Dalton usually works with OSHA or the homeowners to advise in proper disposal. When mercury spills outdoors, however, it becomes the jurisdiction of the DHWM.

In that situation there is not too much change in the health issue, but it is an environmental issue at that point," he said. "There is not anybody who has specific authority over mercury."

Many states regulate the sale of thermometers, he said. Mercury spilled down sinks can reach sewage systems and leak into soil that would have otherwise been used for agricultural purposes. Some agencies are giving out digital thermometers to replace the mercury ones they collect.

Bowling Green has a mercury collection program at its Environmental Health and Safety Office. The university has utilized its hazardous waste storage facility to properly dispose of mercury-containing devices.

"They are a clearinghouse for thermometers and will go out and collect if needed. They are very proactive in

Kaufmann's adds two stores

There is strength in numbers — at least Kaufmann's thinks so. Kaufmann's department stores opened their two new locations on May 21. The new stores are located in the Columbus City Center and Tuttle Crossing malls. They form a trio with the Kaufmann's department store that has existed at Polaris Fashion Place since October of 2001.

Kaufmann's replaced the locations held by Marshall Field's department stores after May Department Stores announced on Feb. 5 a signed agreement had been completed acquiring the locations from Target Corporation.

Kaufmann's operates as part of the Filene/Kaufmann's department store division, which is headquartered in Boston and is May's largest division.

The new stores went beyond our expectations in regards to presentation and customers," said Erika Kirwin, spokeswoman for Kaufmann's department store. "We are very proud of our new stores."

Kaufmann's grand opening celebration started at 8 a.m. on May 21 and concluded at 9 p.m. on Saturday. Activities held included hourly shopping sprees, wardrobe prizes, clowns and mannequin modeling.

Appearances and performances during the celebration included those of SpongeBob SquarePants, the Midwest Gymnastics and Cheerleading team, The Phoenix Theatre, the Columbus Zoo and the YouthMet Ballet.

We were greeted by a beautiful balloon presentation when we entered the store," said Cindy Ufferman, a frequent City Center ed to the store," he said.

Architect's love for Columbus built over many years Pasquale Grado moved to the city from

Brooklyn in 1966 and hasn't looked back

By Caroline Soltesz Lantern staff writer

Imagine arriving in 1966 to Ohio for the first time to begin a college education from the great metropolitan New York City. Flying into Port Columbus Airport, the initial view of the city of Columbus is only two major highways and little suburban development.

This was the case for Brooklyn-born Pasquale Grado, who came to Ohio State to study architecture.

'Seventeenth Avenue was the only way into the city. All you saw was corn fields to your right and left — it was definitely a culture shock," Grado said. "Columbus was just starting to grow."

He recalls walking down the street and not seeing anyone who resembled him. 'Everyone had more of a Midwestern look," he said. Upon graduating, he stayed in Columbus because of lack of money, but as time went on he began to see what Columbus had to offer.

Grado ended up living in the same apartment for the next 27 years because he enjoyed it so much.

"When I graduated I continued to live in the area because of all the older buildings. The apartment was above where Progressive Audio is now," he said referring to the location on High Street between 13th and 14th avenues. "I loved the building — it's been around since 1911," he said.

School of Architecture both part and full-time over the next 15 years, focusing his studio classes on communityrelated work, like a planning overlay guiding urban development. Outside the classroom, his interest in design, development and planning grew.

In the late 1970s, the growing population of the University District resulted in housing shortages. Developers were rapidly building large, dense housing structures to compensate. This lead to a lack of parking and flooding, among other problems within the community's infrastructure.

Grado's love of not only architecture, but Columbus and the University District, culminated in his current profession, executive director of the University Community Business Association.

"In 1984, myself and seven other High Street businesses creat-He went on to teach at OSU's ed the University Community Business Association," he said.

The organization became an advocate for capital improvement money that lead to several other interest groups Grado lobbied for.

"He's been involved with the community since he was a professor," said Brad Shimp, executive director of Community Capital Development Corporation. He has known Grado since 1985, when he served on the board of UCBA.

Shimp said Grado's dedication to the community is crucial for the students.

"He has a vision of what we can give students - a safe and fun area,"

Grado stressed his love of teaching and said it was key to help individuals explore their full potential. Now he feels he is still teaching but on another level.

"It's the same thing now but a matter of taking talents and gearing them to another," he said.

Teaching on a high school level is something Grado is considering in the future. He also has a modest architecture firm doing "what one man can handle on his own," he said.

Though most of his blood family remains in Brooklyn and Manhattan, Grado has developed quite an extended family here and keeps busy with his other hobbies.

"I love to garden — I recently bought a house in the Tuttle Park neighborhood and have been doing some horticultural archeology," he said. "I'm slowly fixing up an elderly woman's yard that had become very overgrown.

Grado also enjoys cooking and not surprisingly traveling to other cities, counting Philadelphia, San Francisco and Seattle among his favorites.

Time in his permanent residence is spent remodeling.

"An architect's house is never done," Grado said.

Despite staying behind the scenes, many don't realize the impact he has had on community, said Kathy Eshelman, president of Grade A Notes and the University Community Business Association.

"I think Pasquale has had a huge impact on the university community
— it's been far reaching," Eshelman said. "He's had a love for the area both personally and professionally.

Eshelman said the 20th anniversary of the UCBA is an event they are both looking forward to next year.

Though Grado remains modest about his influence on the community, he is not shy about his love for it.

There is not a better place to live in the entire city," Grado said.

Poverty populations decrease in Columbus

By Greg W. Moore Lantern staff writer

A national study released by the Brookings Institution reveals a steep decline in the concentration of poverty in Columbus and other metropolitan areas.

Columbus ranked No. 9 in the country in the decline of people living in high-poverty neighborhoods, according to the analysis. Between 1990 and 2000, the capital of Franklin County's number of people living in poverty-stricken areas decreased by 48,020 people - 55.4 percent of the total population.

"Based on the trend of prior decades, one might have reasonably assumed that high-poverty neighborhoods were an unavoidable aspect of urban life and would continue to grow inexorably in size and population," said Paul A. Jargowsky, author of the report titled Stunning Progress, Hidden Problems. "The latest evidence contradicts this gloomy assessment."

Jargowsky is also the director of the Bruton Center for Development Studies at the University of Texas at Dallas.

The analysis was based on data from Census 2000 and indicated the number of people living in high-poverty neighborhoods — those with a poverty rate of 40 percent or higher — declined by 24 percent, or 2.5 million people.

Metropolitan areas in the Midwest, especially Columbus and Detroit, experienced the biggest turnaround. Regionally, the Midwest experienced a decrease of 45.6 percent in the population of poor neighborhoods.

The decline in concentrated poverty represents, in part, the triumph of smart federal policies that demolished failed public housing, rewarded work and overhauled welfare," said Bruce Katz, director of the Brookings Institution Center on Urban and Metropolitan Policy.

Mike Brown, spokesman for Mayor Michael Coleman, said he hopes the findings are a sign the city is bucking the national trend of urban-outward migration.

'The report seems to show that Columbus is actually taking a step in the opposite direction," Brown said. "The deconstruction of poverty is happening much faster than outward migration, which is really the positive here.

The city of Columbus attributes the progress to an effort to reinvent areas east of Main Street - like Hamilton, Westland and Linden so there are businesses to serve the neighbors living there," said Dan Trevas, spokesman for the Columbus City Council.

The city created an affordable-housing program to improve lowincome neighborhoods and provide several imperatives for continuing the

"We spend a good deal of money on services that help families, workforce development, child and elderly care so that people can get self sufficient," Trevas said. "It's paying off in respect that there's people having a chance to get out of poverty."

"Too many families and children still live in profoundly poor communities, cut off from economic and social opportunities," Turner said.

trend of dispersing poverty

However, evidence does not justify complacency, said Margery Turner, the director of the Metropolitan Housing and Communities Policy Center at the Urban Institute. A 26 percent increase in the population of impoverished neighborhoods occurred in the West; and although the national poverty rate did decrease, the number of persons classified as poor actually rose from 31.7 million to 33.9 million.

In his report, Jargowsky said the issue of the concentrations of poor people in a geographic area has several effects. He said the spatial organization of poverty magnifies the issues faced by the poor and leads to social problems like low-performing school districts and hostile environments that

Officials for the city of Columbus plan to continue reducing the concentration of poverty through a two-fold effort. The agenda aims to put people of the lower-end of the working level further out of bad neighborhoods and closer to working areas while providing more job

USG uses mural to spice up area

By Caroline Soltesz Lantern staff writer

Hoping to beautify the University District, Undergraduate Student Government is adding a little art to the area.

On Saturday members of the USG Off-Campus Committee began work on a colorful mural, painted on the side of Smoker's Haven at 2106 N. High St.

"We wanted to give students an idea of off-campus unity," said Audrey Walton, co-chairwoman of the event. "Just something to be proud of and clean the neighborhood up."

About 40 volunteers came out, despite cool weather and a holiday

The supplies were bought with USG off-campus funds and grants from Student Affairs and Coke. Planning began for the event in November.

Leah Dixon, a junior majoring in art, won the design contest that USG held to find a mural.

"I saw a sign up in the art school that advertised it and I thought it would be really cool," Dixon said. "I had a piece in mind that was already done, I just needed to change it a lit-

About half of the mural has been completed, and it will be finished Saturday. Interested students are welcome to come help.

Iraqi government may have destroyed weapons

By Richard Pyle Associated Press

NEW YORK — Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said Iraq's weapons of mass destruction may have been destroyed prior to the war.

While he asserted Tuesday "we don't know what happened," Rumsfeld said, "It is also possible that they (Saddam Hussein's government) decided that they would destroy them prior to a conflict."

Rumsfeld made the remark in response to a question following a speech to the Council on Foreign Relations. He was asked to explain why allied forces have not found the weapons of mass destruction that were President Bush's initial rationale for invading Iraq.

Rumsfeld said it was known that Iraq had sizable chemical warfare programs and had used chemical weapons on the Iranians and its own people. He said evidence may yet turn up as the search moves farther afield.

Senior American officials in Iraq in recent weeks had also raised the possibility that chemical and biological weapons had been destroyed prior to the conflict.

Rumsfeld said the United States intends to maintain a tight grip in Baghdad to "fill the vacuum of authority" while helping Iraq to create its own version of democracy.

"We are committed to helping the Iraqi people get on the path to a free society," he said. "The Iraqi people have this historic opportunity.

He said other countries, the United Nations and non-government organizations were welcome to participate in the effort, and 39 countries have offered their help.

Rumsfeld cited no recovery timetable but listed a set of "broad principles" he said the Bush administration considers critical, "if Iraq's transition from tyranny is to succeed.'

He said the administration envisions a country that does not support terrorism, threaten its neighbors or repress its diverse population. It also should provide marketbased economic opportunity and an independent judiciary. He added those "are not solely American principles, nor are they exclusively

The allied coalition will "seek out those Iraqis who support those principles" and are interested in carrying them out, Rumsfeld said.

Some U.S. officials expressed concern that Shiite extremists in neighboring Iran would try to stir unrest amid Iraq's own Shiite majority, in a campaign to install an Iran-like theocracy in Baghdad.

Rumsfeld said the allies would not permit some "new form of tyranny" to replace Saddam's.

Convict's appeal rejected again

Claiming innocence, to have won a key victory when 75-year-old sexual offender waits, still behind bars

By David B. Caruso Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Calling him an "unrepentant, dangerous sexual offender," the state parole board rejected another appeal for release by a 75-year-old murder convict who remains imprisoned even though his life sentence was commuted in 1995.

The decision, issued last week, marks the fourth time the state has denied parole for Louis Mickens-Thomas, a cobbler sentenced for the 1964 rape and murder of 12-year-old Edith Connor, whose battered body was found in an alley behind Mick-ens-Thomas' shop.

For decades, Mickens-Thomas has insisted he is innocent.

The decision of the Board of Probation and Parole was a setback for activists fighting on behalf of prisoners they believe are innocent. In February, activists appeared the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled the parole board treated Mickens-Thomas unfairly in earlier considerations and ordered it to reconsider his case within 45 days.

Shortly before the deadline expired Sunday, the board sent Mickens-Thomas a scathing sevenpage memo stating it had again denied him parole, in part because he had refused to admit guilt.

"Your anger and resentment toward women was evident in your recent interview," the board said. "You have consistently refused to accept responsibility for your crimes and shown no remorse.'

Leonard Sosnov, Mickens-Thomas' attorney, said he would appeal again.

Jim McCloskey, founder of Centurion Ministries, the New Jersey group fighting to free Mickens-Thomas, said his claim of innocence was no surprise.

"For 40 years, he has been telling anyone who is interested that he is innocent, and he isn't going to change that, even if it means spending the rest of his life in prison," McCloskey said.

The original conviction was overturned after the prosecution's star witness, a forensic technician, was revealed to have falsified her academic credentials. Mickens-Thomas was convicted again after a retrial in 1969.

In 1995, during his last days in office, Gov. Robert Casey shortened Mickens-Thomas' term after reviewing recommendations by the Board of Pardons and Commutation. Under that decision, Mickens-Thomas was to have gone free in Casey's successor, Tom Ridge, who rode into office on a get-toughon-crime platform, enacted stricter parole rules and the Board of Probation and Parole repeatedly refused all appeals for release.

Mickens-Thomas is the only person in Pennsylvania history to remain in prison after a governor commuted his life sentence, his attorney said.

Last year, a federal judge ruled the state had punished Mickens-Thomas retroactively and thus violated his constitutional rights. The 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals agreed, ordering the latest parole hearing for Mickens-Thomas.

Strike leads to state of emergency

Associated Press

Lima, Peru — Army troops backed by armored personnel carriers began clearing blocked highways yesterday after President Alejandro Toledo declared a national state of emergency to control spreading protests.

But the country's 1500-mile Pan American Highway remained blocked in dozens of places by rocks and smoldering tires placed by angry farmers.

Thousands of travelers, including children and the ill, have been stranded since Monday as farmers sought to stop farm produce from getting to Lima and other cities.

Toledo went on national television late Tuesday night to announce: "Tolerance has its limit.'

"We have the responsibility to govern for 26 million Peruvians. We have the responsibility to protect citizens and the public order," Toledo said.

The 30-day state of emergency gives police and the military authority to use force to clear the highways, restore order, detain strikers and enter homes without warrants. It also limits freedom of movement and prohibits public assembly.

Tens of thousands of farmers had joined striking teachers, government health workers and judiciary employees in spreading protests that turned increasingly violent. In the central Andes near the city of Jauja, some 2000 farmers on Tuesday stoned a contingent of 30 policemen trying to clear a highway, injuring seven of them.

The farmers are demanding lower taxes on their crops and protection from imports. The other groups are seeking wage increases.

Toledo, who took office in July 2001, is viewed as a weak, indecisive leader by most Peruvians, according to public opinion surveys. In recent months his popularity has tumbled, with some polls showing his support as low as 14 percent.

Political opponents and analysts wants to compensate for his weakness say the image of weakness is encouraging protests by groups that believe they can force him to accept demands for higher pay and other benefits that the government cannot afford.

He shows very weak leadership, which has caused problems to get out of control, to the point that he now

MOUNT AIRY, N.C. (AP) - A small-town chiropractor bent on keeping fees low for the uninsured is relying on an honor system to get paid.

Dr. Samuel Jeffrey Ray, owner of Affordable Walk N Chiropractic clinic, doesn't bill his patients. He simply asks that they put a low fee — $30 for a first visit and $20 for follow-ups in a milk can before they leave.

"I have a fee schedule that I ask for," he said this week. "But if you can't afford that, nobody watches you put the money in the milk can. If you are a little bit short, nobody is watching you but yourself. It's an honor system."

'Hall of Striptease' struggles to dance

HELENDALE, Calif. (AP) — A museum dedicated to burlesque memorabilia is struggling financially after spending thousands of dollars to fix a string of code violations.

The Exotic World Museum of Burlesque and Striptease Hall of Fame features photographs, tattered gowns, faded G-strings and pasties from the golden age of burlesque, which was popular in American theater from the 1930s to the 1950s.

The museum opened in 1991, but doesn't have a permit to operate, according to San Bernardino County code enforcement officials. It also has been given notice of inadequate or hazardous wiring, substandard conditions and running an illegal mobile home park.

Exotic World can stay open as long as it gets a land-use permit, said Randy Rogers, code enforcement supervisor.

The museum has begun to fix the violations, but the costs have cut into profits, which were $12,000 last year. So far it has spent $10,000 to tear down two illegal trailers, fix the wiring, remove nearly nine tons of trash and apply for a conditional use permit. The museum halfway between Los Angeles and Las Vegas gets about 15 visitors a day.

"This is going to cost everything I've got," said owner Charles

'Stomp' marches on the Palace

> By Brian Duff Lantern arts writer

Sitting agape among a sold-out crowd in the Palace Theater, watching the award-winning percussion troupe "Stomp," one is struck with a single pervasive thought: "I could never, ever do this."

Several generations removed from its humble beginnings as the street band "Pookiesnackenburger," "Stomp" has evolved into a tightly synchronized octet of talented mimes. Created in 1991 by co-producers Luke Cresswell and Steve McNicholas, "Stomp" grew as large as 30 performers backed by a full orchestra before being tapered back down to its current format.

The show is essentially a vehicle for its performers to make music out of everyday items. They bang on trashcans, washtubs and dustpans, all while dancing feverishly across the stage.

Each member of the group moves with extraordinary precision as every move is calculated for its percussion value as well as its visual appeal. Essentially an amalgamation of performance art

Jong falls flat with 'Sappho's Leap'

By R.H. Aly Lantern campus editor

Erica Jong decided to take a leap in her new novel, taking readers into the past to the times of ancient Egyptians and Romans. In the book, "Sappho's Leap," Jong tries to bring the life of Sappho, one of history's greatest poets to life for her audience.

Jong takes Sappho's still existing poetic phrases and weaves them into her writing, as she attempts to narrate Sappho's life. Readers learn of Sappho's childhood, her marriage and her lovers. They receive an intimate glance at what could have been Sappho's life, mixed with a sprinkling of Egyptian and Greek mythology.

The story begins with Sappho climbing to the top of a mountain. She has only one goal in mind — she wants to commit suicide. According to legend, Sappho did commit suicide while calling out for the man she truly loves. Then Jong takes her audience back to Sappho's childhood, where starts her fictional narrolice of the legent suits of the legent ration of the legendary poet.

Although Jong uses all kinds of scenic vocabulary and beautiful words to create ancient images of the past, some of the scenes she is creating can be nauseating. The sex scenes Sappho has with her partners, Plants grown organically use only natural fertilizers. In the last few years it has become much more than a new-age fad, but the concept is still blossoming.

"My job as a chef is to serve food that is good for the body, (and) in addition, good to taste," Wolmark said.

When eating his food, people sometimes say "'I didn't know food tasted like that'," Wolmark said. He speaks with a vibrant energy about how his customers' spirits have an intense experience as they enjoy foods for the first time that they previously didn't like or were allergic to.

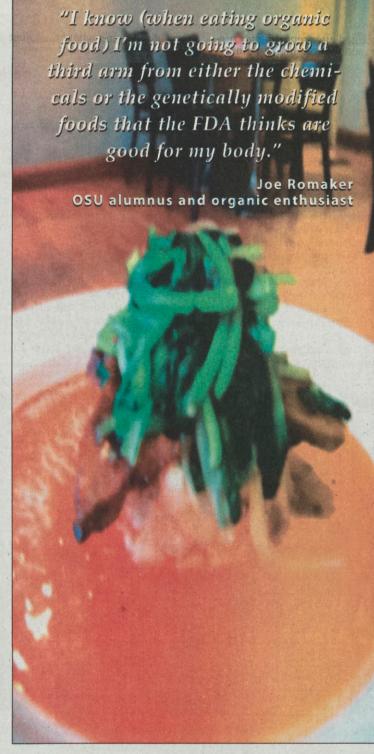

Dragonfly located at 247 King Ave., doesn't use cheese because it doesn't have to. They have better things to do and other things they would rather make, Wolmark said. The chef has the skill and desire to create any meal from local organic products; even a soy vegan milkshake if he wanted.

The organic food movement is growing as fast as the tomato plants in the small garden behind the restaurant. "Fossil fuels are on the way out; sustainable is on the way in," Wolmark said. "The technology's ripe for harvesting."

Wolmark said there is a myth that genetically modified foods are needed to feed countries. Third World nations then become deficient in vital resources like Vitamin A because they don't have access to local food sources, Wolmark said.

"Contamination has already happened, and happened in the worst way," he said.

With the exception of a few spirits and wines, Dragonfly serves, to the best of Wolmark's knowledge, no genetically modified foods and only 100 percent organic produce.

Much of what is served at Dragonfly comes from Central Ohio farms.

The process from farm to plate is art, an ongoing poetry in motion. Wolmark sees Columbus as an urban, progressive, visionary city. A reflection of that is Dragonfly's presence. However, no other establishment is taking the first steps to support superior, artisan produced, locally grown food and farms.

"If Cameron Mitchell just bought (organic) basil for his pesto, he could support an entire farm," Wolmark said. In June, Wolmark is open-

In June, Wolmark is opening a bakery next door to Dragonfly that will sell only local organic produce, bread, muffins and other organic variations. His restaurant also offers cooking classes, at a $10 discount to students, including a course oriented to dorm life for those with little more than a hot plate.

"Why not organic? Put simply, organic agriculture is good for the Earth and the people who live on it," said

Betsy McNair, spokeswoman for Organic Crop Improvement Association International, one of the world's largest private organic certification agencies. The organization certifies premium organic foods that compete on the international market.

"Chemical agriculture depletes the soil and puts hazardous materials on our food," McNair said. "If a farmer must wear special clothing to protect his or her health while spraying fields, why would a consumer want to eat that chemical-covered food?"

According to McNair, the U.S. and international organic industry is growing by nearly 20 percent a year. This is due in part to an increased interest in healthy living and to the recent implementation of the USDA's National Organic Program late last October.

More and more people like Joe Romaker are gradually switching to organic food. The OSU alumnus began picking up a few organic fruits and vegetables at the grocery store, then started shopping at stores like Wild Oats and going to places like the Clintonville Co-op while in college.

Water heals all ailments

There are therapists who have said that living by water is the key to mental health.

Maybe it's true. When you live your life by a body of water like Lake Erie, as I have, the water becomes a part of your life.

I have felt claustrophobic and landlocked living in Columbus — after spending my entire childhood and my adolescent life in and around Cleveland's section of Lake Erie — from the urban shores of Erie — from the urban shores of North Collinwood to the woody suburbs of Chesterland, just driving distance away.

True, Lake Erie, even for some who live along its banks, is the butt of thousands of jokes about filth. It is connected at one seam — through the downtown Flats — to a river that has borne the bulk of the same jibes and criticisms, since it caught fire back in

June 1969 because of industrial and commercial pollution.

Dirty or not, I swam and walked in it long before I or anyone else I knew began to notice large-scale effects of any improvement. My parents moved back from San Francisco early in 1981, with more than a healthy dose of holistic naturalism. They baptized me in it when I was six months old, and I have loved it desperately ever since
I have come to its defense when others defined it solely by the unfortunate run-off and trash that sensationalized it to everyone who doesn't know it personally.

I have fallen asleep by it, lulled peacefully by the rhythmic metronome of its tide. I have dreamt of the lake, swam in it naked with friends at night. It has been cleaned up monumentally, and for the most part, it is a calm lake — its glassy surface lapping the shores of the beaches and state parks that dot its coasts.

But it can turn to a dangerous, angry water. There is a special term for the snow that comes across the lake. "Lake effect" storms coming south from Canada can blanket every suburb east of Cleveland with masses of snow, incapacitating entire towns for days.

Also, the maritime maps are littered with wrecks and crashes, sunken remnants of misdirections mixed with tragic storms, fog and whitecaps. There are hundreds of lost recreational, commercial and military ships — enough for countless books — mysteriously hugging the weeded and silted bottom depths.

Its danger is well-known. The abandoned houses — hanging desperately over muddy cliffs — are a testament to the lust the lake has for reclaiming land, for taking back violently the coast its waters lap against.

And the coast is punctuated with lighthouses, foretelling the lake's infamous ability to rise from glassy calm to chaos in minutes. Many are still active, still helping to guide the lake's thick boat traffic away from the rocky coast.

As the white beacon at Mentor Headlands is, many are now abandoned, left standing proud and lonely. Many are now only tall, mythical locales of rumored ghosts and memories and history. Some, like in Mentor, have been boarded up — empty rooms waiting patiently on top of huge cement platforms for my friends and I to dive the 30 or so feet down into the dark Erie waters late in summer evenings.

I have felt its absence lately — especially as nicer weather has been slowly unfolding. I felt its absence before I went home last weekend to celebrate the holiday in a small lake-side cottage with family.

I am not sure why I felt its pull. In May, the lake is too cold for swimming, many times too cold for even casually walking along the tide-line with bare feet. I knew the weather would be bleak and gray, and even the sand of the beach would seem tired, as would the water itself:

But there are times I need routine, consistency. There are times when I need, passionately, that grand, gray sky fading into a distance blurred by clouds, a cold, windy beach and the peaceful rhythms I can always go back and listen to while watching the sturdy oar boats slowly pull themselves across the horizon.

Bruce backers campaign for legal reprieve years after comic's death

By Larry McShane Associated Press

NEW YORK - Here's a six-letter word rarely associated with the late comedian Lenny Bruce: Pardon.

Supporters of Bruce, the foul-mouthed comic convicted of obscenity charges in 1964, have launched a campaign to win him a legal reprieve — 37 years after his tragic death.

The goal is to "correct a grave injustice — the prosecution and persecution of comedian Lenny Bruce for nothing more than speaking his mind," said Ron Collins, coauthor of "The Trials of Lenny Bruce: The Fall and Rise of an American Icon.'

The movement to win Bruce a pardon boasts an impressive roster of backers, from 25 First Amendment lawyers (including Floyd ers (including Robin Williams, the Smothers Brothers and Penn and Teller).

'A pardon now is too late to save Lenny Bruce," read the artists' letter to Gov. George Pataki. "But a posthumous pardon would set the record straight and thereby demonstrate New York's commitment to freedom - free speech, free press, free thinking.

Pataki would have to sign off on a Bruce pardon, and a gubernatorial spokeswoman did not return a call for comment. New York state has never granted a posthumous pardon, although nine other states have, said Robert Corn-Revere, the lead attorney for the Bruce forces.

Bruce's daughter, Kitty, and his former wife, Honey Bruce Friedman, both sent along letters of support for Abrams) to 10 artists and writ- the campaign which was launched last week.

"I truly believe my father's soul can rest in peace with this," Kitty Bruce said.

In life, her father became a troubled soul. His last years were consumed by legal and financial problems. In August 1966, the 39-year-old Bruce died of a drug overdose.

While Bruce was considered a pariah by some in the '60s, he's generally viewed now as a groundbreaking performer who totally changed the standup comedy business.

"Every night when I get onstage, I thank God or whoever's up there for Lenny Bruce," said comedian Lisa Lampanelli, who joined Collins at a recent news conference. "He has become my hero."

During a November 1964 performance at Cafe Au Go Go in Greenwich Village, Bruce used more than 100 "obscene" words - most of four-letter variety, although one contained a dozen letters. Undercover police detectives attended the show, and later testified against Bruce.

"The cops did the act for the grand jury and it stunk, and I got busted," Bruce observed wryly at the time. He was convicted following a six-month trial. Bruce mishandled his own appeal, and died with the conviction still in the books.

The owner, Howard Solomon, was convicted along with Bruce - although his conviction was eventually reversed.

Any pardon for Bruce would be as much a symbolic victory as a legal win.

"By posthumously pardoning Lenny Bruce, the state of New York declares to the world that it is a safe harbor for creative minds," said Corn-Revere. "It would serve as a public monument to liberty."

including the love of her life Alcaeus, an Egyptian priestess, and other mythological gods and legends are more detailed then they need to be. In fact, with every other page displaying a sex scene, it seems Jong thought the only way to sell her book was by emphasizing sex as much as possible.

Many already know of Sappho's lesbian pleasures, but long does not need to go into every intricate aspect of lesbian sex. In fact, many don't even want to read about the ins and outs of hetero-sex either.

Jong also needs to work on making the novel more exciting. Instead of going from one sexual scene to the next, Jong could try to concentrate on other angles of Sappho's life. Readers might be more interested in the adventures of Sappho's life — for instance, how she lived during the ancient Greek and Roman times. Although Jong does touch on such areas, she places such a strong focus on Sappho's sexual life that people are too preoccupied with the love scenes to think about anything else.

However, Jong should be given credit for one thing. She does at least stimulate an individual's mind. For those readers who know nothing about Sappho or her life, Jong does a wonderful job in displaying the known facts about Sappho's life.

It is obvious through Jong's writings she spent much time researching Sappho. Not much is known about Sappho, other than the fact she was probably the first celebrated lesbian poet. No one knows much about the poet, who was born in about 600 B.C. No one knows what the orator looked like. Her images come from figments of people's imaginations. Not to mention, only one of her poems has lasted throughout the years in its complete version.

This novel is not the only time Jong has tried to recapture history and spring it alive through the words of a book. Two of her previous novels, "Fanny" and "Shylock's Daughter," have also been historical narratives. In fact, Jong has received many awards for her work, including the United Nations Award for Excellence. With all the praise she has received, it is surprising her novel is such a disappointment.

'Sappho's Leap" is not the kind of novel people will be raving about for years to come. Instead, it will be one of those lying in the attic with dust and spiders crawling across the cover of the torn book.

icals or the genetically modified foods that the FDA thinks are good for my body," he said.

"Dragonfly and other restaurants like Alana's are on a mission to create great food," said Tim Patrick who owns Toad Hill Organic Farm in Danville. "Dragonfly is committed to organic and has sought out what he (Wolmark) considers some of the best local food products. He has done a lot by his commitment to farmers, and has rewarded them by buying from them consistently and asked them to grow the items which he is interested in."

Patrick, who also heads a local chapter of the Ohio Ecological Food and Farming Association, said organic and local establishments should go hand in hand.

"The less time food spends traveling, the fewer nutrients that are lost," he said.

Huge corporate grocery stores like Wild Oats sell organic produce of varying standards to a large group of customers, but do not always support the local farmer.

'Recently they have had a policy of buying only through their regional headquarters and they also have a minimum order, which pretty much excludes most small growers," Patrick said.

'It the only goal of the organic movement is to get organic into McDonald's, then we all have missed the point," he said. "Organic is about local, nutrition, water quality, soil quality, wildlife and human habitat preservation, regional economic stability (and) supporting farms so they and their families can afford to farm for generations to come. Otherwise, we lose the simple beauty of farmland which has no price, which is and music. The show intends to amaze — and does.

Throughout the dozen or so "songs" the group performed, an undulating current of energy ran through the audience, it was dancing vic-ariously through their onstage counterparts. Constantly tapping their feet and clapping their hands, the audience proved to be a ninth performer. This added a special appeal to the show.

On-stage, dancers traded percussion solos in a strange version of musical brinkmanship, each offering the audience something more than the one before.

In one extraordinary song, three performers dug in a trash bag, finding plastic bags, soda cans and other assorted garbage to "play" by banging, stretching and crumbling them.

The show alternates between understated and relatively quiet acts — like the garbage bag - and staggering ensemble numbers that seem to shake the foundation of the building.

While the larger, louder songs were impressive by the sheer massiveness of sound, the more subtle ones better demonstrated the difficulty in making music out of every day objects.

In one of the most restrained acts, a half dozen performers appeared on stage together with rolled up newspapers and created a song out of the pounding, crumpling and tearing of the paper. By using this rather gentle instrument, the dancers required the audience's full attention, thus engaging them further in Central to "Stomp's" sound - and success — are the pervasive tribal elements evident in the music. The ultimate simplicity of the music, combined with the lack of harmony accompaniment, creates a sound that is stripped down to its core. By breaking down the music to its most basic level, "Stomp" is able to rebuild it using astonishingly complex rhythms.

More than simply sounding tribal, certain songs took visual cues from traditional dances and mock battles. These songs grew into an eerie cross-cultural creation, featuring modern street dancers as ancient medicine men.

The show is decidedly more than the music, as elements encompass comedic theater, betraying "Stomp's" mime heritage. Each per-former plays a character onstage, including a surly troupe leader, a puckish troublemaker, a jolly buffoon and a rakish

By adding superb character acting to an already impressive list of performer abilities, "Stomp" is able to further engage the audience by luring them to play favorites among the dancers. Without words, characters with both each other and the audience with surprising ease and accuracy.

In the end, "Stomp" is a world-class show, entertaining for audiences of all ages and temperaments: It is actually impossible to watch the show without a smile on your face.

The show will run through Sunday at the Palace Theater.

Women's rowing set to take on best in Indianapolis

By Melanie Watkins Lantern sports writer

When the start signal sounds on tomorrow, the No. 8 Ohio State women's rowing team will make every stroke count as it faces off against some of the toughest competition in the country.

For the fourth consecutive year, the Buckeyes are making an appearance at the NCAA Rowing Championships. They will need to push their boats faster than 11 other teams at the Eagle Creek Reservoir in Indianapolis if they plan to bring home the title.

"We want to have the best race we have had all year," said coach Andy Teitelbaum. "If we row as fast as we can and have our best performance but there is someone who goes faster, there is nothing we can do. We can't control how other teams perform; we can only control what we do and how we perform."

For OSU, the best race would be one that equals or surpasses its performance at the South/Central Regional Championships May 17-18. At that regatta the Buckeyes beat out the rest of the competition, being named the overall regional champions for the first time in program history.

The top competition at the NCAA Championships will be No. 1 Stanford and No. 2 Harvard. OSU defeated Stanford earlier this season in the second varsity 8 and first varsity 4 at the Stanford Invitational.

Also competing will be Washington, Princeton, Virginia, Brown, Washington State, California, Michigan, Yale and Michigan

Ohio State has seen No. 4 Virginia, No. 9 California, No. 10 Michigan and No. 16 Michigan State all on the water in various regattas this season. California was a competitor at the Stanford Invitational, beating

The Buckeyes compiled four undefeated dual races against Virginia at the ACC/Big Ten Double Duals and beat out Virginia, Michigan and Michigan State at the regional championships. They fell to Michigan and Michigan State at the Big Ten championships earlier this season after recording a winning record against both at the Big Ten Invitational.

There are 12 of the best teams in the country that will be competing this weekend," Teitelbaum said. "The competition is wide open this year. No team is undefeated, putting us in a position to finish anywhere between first and

OSU had its best NCAA performance at the Championships in 2001, when it placed fourth overall. Last year, the Buckeyes placed fifth as No. 3 Washington walked away the NCAA First Varsity 8 senior Maxi Meissner and junior Karla Fiserova, who were both named to the 2003 First Team All-Central Region and awarded All-Big Ten honors. Joining them in the first varsity 8 boat will be sophomore Franziska Schubert, also a Central Region first-team member, and junior Natalie Legge, a second-

Along with the rest of the team, the women have been using practice and experience to prepare themselves for the stiff competition.

"We have focused on continuing the rowing that enabled us to do our best at regionals," Teitelbaum said. "We have rested up and worked hard to prepare ourselves."

MORGAN WONORSKI/THE LANTERN

The Ohio State women's rowing team travels to Indianapolis tomorrow to compete in the NCAA Championships. The Buckeyes are ranked No. 8 in the nation and will have stiff competition from No. 1 Stanford and No. 2 Harvard. OSU is coming off the school's first regional championship.

Tiger back on PGA green after break

By Matt Duval Lantern sports editor

Maybe he's been missing in action. Or perhaps he's just been on vacation. Whatever he's been doing, Tiger Woods has not played a PGA Tour event in the United States since April 13, when he failed to win his thirdstraight Masters Tournament. Woods hadn't even played outside the country until last week's Deutsche Bank-SAP Open in Germany.

However, despite having played only seven events in the first five months of the golf season, Woods still sits atop the Official World Golf Rankings, a spot he's held since Aug. 15, 1999.

After his lengthy break, Woods is ready to get back into the full swing of the summer schedule, starting with this week's Memorial Tournament at the Muirfield Village Golf Club in Dublin.

"This is a great tournament," Woods said yesterday after his morning practice round. "I always enjoy coming here."

While extended breaks between major tournaments are nothing new for Woods, he has spent more time off the course this season than ever before. Woods missed all of January and the first two weeks of February recovering from off-season knee surgery. At any rate, in just six PGA events, Woods already has three wins - the Buick Invitational, the Accenture Match Play Championship and the Bay Hill Invitational. He is ranked No. 3 on the money list with over $3 million earned.

But having played only one tournament in the past month is something that doesn't worry Woods. Instead, he feels he is more ready than ever to continue his dominance on tour.

"I wasn't able to unwind from Augusta as much as I needed to,' Woods said. "I needed some time off to prepare; I was ready for Germany. I'm glad I took the time off.

Since his win at Bay Hill, Woods has struggled in tournaments that he has historically dominated. After finishing 11th at the Players Championship, Woods missed a shot at history when he finished 2-over-par and tied for 15th in the Masters. Last week, Woods came in 25th in Germany at a tournament where he was the defending champion.

"My swing feels pretty good," Woods said. "I hit the ball pretty well in Germany. My game feels real solid; I'm happy where I'm at."

Woods seemed upbeat when he hit the course yesterday at 5:30 a.m. for his practice round. While most players elect to play their rounds in the afternoon, Woods said he likes being one of the first players on the course.

"It's a little bit easier on me and my playing partners," Woods said. "There's less distractions and I can get some actual work done. I know we're trying to entertain the fans, but I'm trying to get ready to play the tournament and win this thing.

After his first practice round, Woods said he feels he is ready to take a shot at winning his fourth

"My practice sessions have been really well," Woods said. "The way I'm striking the ball right now, I'm very pleased."

Dublin draws world's best golfers

By Matt Duval Lantern sports editor

One look at the field assembled this week at Muirfield Village Golf Club, and many would believe it was the host of a major tournament like the U.S. Open. However, while the PGA's second major of the year is not for another month, a star-studded field is in Dublin for this week's Memorial Tournament.

This may be one of the toughest fields I've seen here in a long time," said 1989 Memorial winner Bob Tway, who is playing for the 19th time at Muirfield. "This is always special because I won here, but even if I hadn't won here, it would be special."

Eight of the top 10 golfers in the Official World Golf Rankings will be competing in the Memorial, highlighted by the world's No. 1 Tiger Woods. Phil Mickelson and David Toms are the only two top 10 players who didn't make the trip to Muirfield.

This year's field also has a strong international flavor. Six of the top 10 on the European PGA's Volvo Order of Merit will tee it up tomorrow. Ernie Els, who sits atop the Order of Merit, has had perhaps the most success this season. He has already won two tournaments — the Heineken Classic and Johnnie Walker Classic - and finished sixth in the Masters.

Els' main competition overseas this season has been Padraig Harrington, who sits second in the Order of Merit. Harrington had overtaken Els on the money list before Els' fourth-place finish in the Volvo PGA Championship. Harrington is also coming off a win last week at the Deutsche Bank - SAP Open where he shot 19-under par.

Els is paired with Bob Burns and Charles Powell III for a 9:20 a.m. tee time. Harrington tees off a 1:20 p.m. with Tim Clark and Jay Haas.

"I think that's what makes this a huge attraction," said Tiger Woods, who is scheduled to start at 12:30 p.m. "You get a strong international field and get Jack (Nicklaus), and it's a great tournament."

One player whom few were looking at two weeks ago was Kenny Perry. Before last week's Bank of America Colonial, Penny sat 40th on the money list and had missed two cuts this season.

But thanks in large part to a third-round 61, Perry dominated the field in Texas — finishing with a 19-under 261.

"I really didn't have any nerves last week," Perry said. "My hands felt good, and it was just my time."
