workplace shootings

By Amy Aldridge Lantern staff writer

Ohioans might need to pay more attention to potential violent behavior from their fellow employees. Ohio ranks fifth in the United States in workplace shootings in the past decade, according to a report compiled by Handgun Free America.

Leading the list were California, Florida, Pennsylvania and Texas, with 21, 20, 11 and 10 workplace shootings, respectively. Ohio followed with 10 shootings — 13 people died and 10 were wounded. All five of these states have, on some level, laws allowing concealed carry. With the recent passage of such a law in Ohio, some are speculating these incidents may increase.

The new concealed carry law will certainly be a problem for businesses," said Chris McGrath, executive director of Handgun Free America. "They will need to make

Ohio trying to limit number of errors in death penalty cases

In the midst of the subtle activism there was a group whose primary concern stood out because it directly involved the concert and the reasons why the venue was changed from the South Oval to the Schottenstein.

The biggest concern (for changing the venue) was the the large turnout of black people and this was just the spark to enrage students enough to voice their concerns," said Besarat Habtesian, a volunteer for Students for United Front and junior in mathematics.

You invest your money and your time to better yourself only to feel like the school doesn't trust you, and thinks you're danger-

Habtesian and Austin Black, another volunteer, handed out fliers that said, "As black students we understand there may have been logistical reasons for the change of venue for the concert, many students still feel the change may have racial undertones."

The fliers asked students who supported the issues listed on the flier to wear a black ribbon with a yellow 'V' during the Big Free Concert to symbolize unity among the violated victims. They made 200 ribbons and planned on distributing them at the concert but could not for security reasons.

Another student felt the venue change was

I think if it was a general concert it would be different," said Anoa Changa, a graduate student in city regional planning. "It has more to do with who's performing rather than policy."

There were no large purses or backpacks allowed and each person was patted down upon entering the Schottenstein.

LaToya Grate, also a graduate student in city regional planning, said she agreed that there should be more concern for stereotypical and discriminatory practices and that minorities are slighted more often than people realize.

The girl behind us has a purse and we couldn't have one, is that uniform procedure?" Grate said. "It's interesting to say the least." Craig Boner, an employee for ECM security said the security practices were standard procedure, like the prohibition of large bags, mainly because artists do not want fans taking pictures.

"I'm almost positive that the patting down is the artist's choice," Boner said.

Another claim of standard procedure is the reason for the change of venue by the Ohio Union Aactivities Board.

The main reason that we moved was because there were rumors that buses from Cincinatti and Cleveland we're coming because radio stations we're bringing people so we wanted to protect our students and make sure that they had the first priority in coming since we couldn't ticket outside," said Alicia Corabi, lecture chair for OUAB. "I think the people who thought it was discriminatory didn't know why we changed it."

Outside of underlying controversy, students still went to enjoy the show. About 8,000 of the

Some black students did not feel the change of venue was discriminatory but was the direct result of a safety concern.

'To be honest, it's not discriminatory with race, I understand whey they would set a limit like this," said Brandi Richardson, a senior in English as she hurried to the doors of the Schottenstein. "I'm pretty excited. We have some good things here at OSU."

Play features murderously insane family

By Stacey Runion Lantern arts writer

The Contemporary Ameri-Theatre Company, CATCO, performed its last play for the 2003-2004 season Sunday at Vern Riffe Center.

'Arsenic and Old Lace" gave the packed studio a steady dose of comedy and irony; however, "Arsenic and Old Lace" may not be of interest for those under the age of 30. With a cast of 14 members, this murder mystery story is easy to follow, but it focuses heavily on the older crowd.

The story tells of two sweet old ladies, Abby and Martha Brewster — played by Linda Dorff and Ionia Zelenka, respectively - who have a rather large, dirty secret hid-ing in their cellar: 12 dead bodies. Their nephew Teddy - played by Dudley Swetland - truly believes he is President Roosevelt, and has titled his cellar the "Panama Canal." Another nephew, Jonathan played by Ken Erney - adds trouble and an equal amount of dead bodies that he has accumulated while on the run.

Mortimer learns theater first hand through his murderous family and its secrets, which leads him to The sole sane character is think he is also going to be irra-Mortimer Brewster — played by tional like the rest of them.

As for talent, Putnam and Dorff gave a phenomenal performance and brought the stage to life.

The set is focused entirely inside the home of the Brewsters but holds the realistic quality of a historic house that has withstood many years in

Overall, the performance is somewhat dry in spots, leaving something to be desired in its plot and storyline, but the humor keeps the play alive.

Arsenic and Old Lace will be showing at Studio One in Vern Riffe Center through June 13. Tickets range from $25-$35 and show times vary.

ALEJANDRO

RAMIREZ How iPod changed my life

For Christmas I was given the greatest present I have ever received in my short 21 years of existence — a 20-gigabyte iPod made by Apple. Since then my life has turned around. If you recognize me from my terrible picture in the top right-hand corner, either from my workplace on High Street or because I am constantly meandering around campus, then you might have seen me with my white headphones, bobbing my head, humming or mouthing the words to some of my favorite songs. Do I look like a fool? Probably. Do I care? Not really. Will I change? I said I didn't care, so most likely not.

My iPod has revolutionized my life. I take it everywhere — I mean everywhere. I have it when I walk to class, to work, to get some lunch, even if I'm only going two blocks and I only get a chance to listen to a few songs. I have even tried to listen to it while taking midterms and exams, with mixed success. It is handy for long road trips and for studying at my favorite café or the library. I take it everywhere. I am not the only one. If you are like me, then you see others walking around campus with their white headphones and iPod attached at the hip. The iPod users are out there and because of constant propaganda and marketing there are many out there who want to be a part of this craze.

But why? Well it is more than propaganda and it is more than keeping up with the latest technology. It is the simple fact that peo-ple love music and CD players do not cut the mustard and the traditional mp3 player does not hold as many songs. Sure there is an uphill battle with the cost of today's technology and these puppies are expensive, especially to many young folks, but despite the cost some will argue the comfort is Alongside the iPod comes the Internet software iTunes, which if you did not know is the 99-cent download software available not only for Apple but for the PC as well. It is considered to be one of the strongest attempts to have a customer and record-label-friendly downloading service. A criticism of Apple's new venture is iTunes is killing the music album, making a music-single friendly world. Some people scoff at the fact others are still paying for a song, but I scoff at those who download without consideration of the industry they are hurting and the artists that are losing more than gaining.

The most revolutionary thing about my iPod is how it has changed my CD purchasing. I used to buy two to four new CDs a month, but since the emergence of the iPod my average has been cut in half. This could mean many things, which may have nothing to do with my iPod. I could simply be refining my tastes, limiting what I feel is necessary to purchase or it could mean many of the new releases in music this year are just crap and I wouldn't waste my money on them. Either way, I am not sure how the recording industry is benefiting from my dwindling interest in purchasing music. When I buy a CD I ask myself — is it iPod worthy? I am still waiting to see how this is benefiting the industry.

The iPod only upsets me when the battery runs out — but it's rechargeable, so I deal with it. Does this make me superficial only impressed with the advancements of technology? No, not really, but I am in love with this little gadget as it brings my life a little comfort. Is it essential for life? No, not at all, even though I would utterly hate to lose or damage it.

I fear for the music industry because if a hardcore music buyer like myself is buying fewer and fewer CDs, then what can the industry do next to save itself? Again, maybe it is not me, maybe it is them for not making records worth purchasing. I know Apple is making a fortune on its product, and iTunes is splitting profits with the labels from its downloads, so does all of this really matter? In the music business one has to ask: What matters most, the bling bling or the art? The answer seems to be the bling bling, with an exception here and there.

Technician

Battelle's Environmental Restoration Product Line seeks a technician to assist the Laboratory Manager and other scientists in conducting laboratory experiments in support of research projects at our Columbus, Ohio office. Laboratory experiments are generally geared towards developing new treatments for environmental pollutants. Candidate also will be expected to provide support for associated tasks, such as maintaining an inventory of chemicals and glassware, laboratory housekeeping, data handling, and providing home support for field instrumentation and projects.

Incumbent must possess, at a minimum, an associate's degree with chemistry- and laboratoryoriented coursework. 1-2 years of laboratory experience is preferred. In general, the candidate should demonstrate an ability to provide laboratory support in a precise, consistent manner, with attention to detail. Prior working experience in a laboratory environment is a definite plus. Basic computer spreadsheet and word processing skills are desirable. Qualified candidates should visit www.battelle.org/careers to create a candidate profile and apply on-line. Type "Technician 8738" under the keyword search. Battelle is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action employer.

Students enjoy Bexley's versatility, convenience

Close location, popular dining, relaxation allure folks into city

By Chauntelle Folds Lantern staff writer

After going to all the malls, movie theaters and clubs in Columbus, students can experience a change of venue by visiting the city of Bexley. The small city is located 20 minutes from campus and offers a sometimesneeded reprieve from the heavily frequented Downtown, Easton and Polaris areas

Just east of Alum Creek, Bexley is a city-within-a-city, occuping only 2.5 square miles. This quaint region is home to Capital Univerand has the feel of a little town.

"It's nice to have the closeness small community," said Kara Mek, a senior in biology at Capital.

"It's really small and convenient. Everything is in walking distance," said Nita Ampato, a senior in English literature at Capital.

Students agree that the atmosphere is beautiful and the people are nice, but most importantly, they agree Bexley has a great selection of food.

'There's a lot of places to eat. You're never really hungry," Ampato said.

Fine Dining

Despite the area's petite size, Bexley is lined with restaurants, ranging from fine dining establishments to ice cream shops. Numerous upscale locales, with mid-toupper price ranges, are perfect for a date or just an enjoyable evening.

Fisherman's Wharf, 2143 E. Main St., is the first restaurant to greet people as they enter the ley resident Chris Elmore. city limits, and Bexley has been its home for six years.

'A lot of people don't know what they're getting into," said Manager Rolf Westermann about first time customers.

The restaurant specializes in seafood, quality meats and what warned — it closes after lunch Westermann says are the best clams in town. The extensive menu hosts more than 12 fish Low-cost Dining dishes, as well as crab, scallops, pasta, lamb and steak. The guests are free to make special requests.

"We cater to people who really like to eat well," Westermann said

Fisherman's Wharf is not only acclaimed for its food, but also for its wine. It is the only place in America with a substantial inventory of French Riesling, and connoisseurs buy it by the crate. The restaurant also has a bar and a banquet hall. Reservations are usually needed, especially on weekends.

Bexley's Monk, originally named the "Blind Monk," 2232 E. Main St., has resided in the Bexlev Square for more than 30 years and is known for having one of the first wood-fired ovens in Columbus. The restaurant can be described as half fine dining and half bistro, with a bar. Chief Operating Officer Christian Hattemer sity, more than 13,000 residents, said the Monk is an American restaurant focused on diversity.

"There is no rule — we serve of the city but the sheltering of a French food, Spanish food; we will serve anything," Hattemer said.

The restaurant's management Students at Capital enjoy the is committed to diversity, and many attractions Bexley has to they take cues from trends across the country to format their seasonal menus. The new spring menu will debut soon.

The Bexley's Monk is undergoing many changes to enhance the restaurant's overall ambiance, including the addition of a new baby grand piano, which will be played Tuesday through Saturday, and a jazz trio, which will perform on Thursdays. A casual bar menu is also in the works.

We're able to build and get nothing but better," Hattemer said. "It's going to be, probably, one of the best places in Columbus to come and eat."

The restaurant's patrons agree the Bexley's Monk deserves praise.

"It's very inviting, comfortable, friendly, (and) the food's outstanding. On the East Side, this is the best place," said Bex-Giuseppe's Ritrovo, 2268 E. Main St., which is located down the street from the Drexel Theater. The restaurant specializes in Italian cuisine and is a lunch until the dinner rush at 5 p.m.

If a a diner's preference is quick and inexpensive food, there are many chain restaurants in the area, such as Cosi, Chipotle, Cup O Joe, Starbucks Coffee, W.G. Grinders and Boston Mar-

But Bexley's main eatery competition is between pizza places and ice cream shops. There are three homegrown pizzerias: Anthony's Pizza (602 Pleasant Ridge), Bexley Pizza Plus (2540 E. Main St.) and Rubino's Pizza (2643 E. Main St.). Each brings its own distinctive taste to the art of pizza making, and the debate over which is best is ongoing.

Graeter's Ice Cream, 2282 E. Main St., and Johnson's Real Ice Cream, 2728 E. Main St., may be within four blocks of each other but they are still worlds apart. Customers flock to Graeter's for its famous chocolate chip ice cream, which is created by pouring melted chocolate directly into the cold ice cream. The result is chocolate chunks the size of golf balls. On the other hand, Johnson's ice cream is renowned for being homemade. Customers can watch through the window as the owner makes the daily batch. Johnson's many art galleries in the city. also offers more flavors than Graeter's. Both shops are hangouts for the locals - especially the teenage crowd - and each has a friendly, family feeling.

One of the major attractions in Bexley is the Drexel Theater located at 2256 E. Main St. It is known for showing primarily independent and foreign films and has been called a cultural mecca for the thoughtful crowd. Assistant Manager Monica Seitz said the theater caters to people who enjoy branching out from the popular media.

I think people rely on us to bring certain types of movies to town, and if they can't see them here, there's a good chance they can't see them anywhere," Seitz said. "We've always tried to Another fine dining locale is bring in off-kilter, non-tradition-

The Drexel was built in the 1930's as a one-screen theater. It now has three screens and sponsors annual movie events, such favorite for the locals. But be as the Kids Movie Festival and Casablanca Night. Prices are $5.50 for students and matinee shows, $7.50 for adults, and $4.25 for all tickets on Mondays.

Students from both Capital University and Ohio State frequent the theater.

They show the kind of movies I want to see — the smaller, less mainstream films," said Gina Christofani, a student at Capital.

The Drexel appeals to the artistically and academically inclined and can be a tool for broadening

Students should come to the Drexel to get a different perspective of what film is supposed to be and break free of the Hollywood mold," Seitz said.

Students also flock to the Bexley has a concentration of galleries, and there are three on Drexel Avenue alone.

I'm attracted to the art and alleries," said artist Michael Sherman. "There are densities or areas in Columbus where there's art, but there's not a lot of it; in Bexley, there is," he said.

Capital University also has its own gallery, called The Schumacher. Its permanent collection is divided into four mini-galleries: 16th-19th Century, Asian, contemporary, and ethnic. The Schumacher is notorious for its Inuit art collection, which is one of the largest in the Midwest.

As with galleries, there is also a concentration of antique stores in Bexley. Many store owners think Bexley is a prime location because of the affluence of the neighborhood. Property in the area is relatively expensive, and the neighborhoods are littered with large stately homes. Michael Tom, manager of Joseph M. Hayes Antiques, 2270 E. Main St., said Bexley embraces high-quality merchandise.

Also interesting are the small specialty shops in the area. One of such is Etc...Gifts, an eclectic acces-

Besides gifts, the shop has a jewelry room and an infamous handbag room. The purses range from $19 to $400 and include seatbelt bags, license plate purses, travel totes and even dog bags from France. And of course, her collection includes some of the top names in purses.

Spring and summer are chocked full of events and things to do. During June, Bexley celebrates Summerfest, which is a carnival that stretches down Main Street. From July to October, Bexley City Hall is the site of the Farmers Market. Every Saturday during the market, from 10 a.m. to l p.m., produce can be purchased
