Republicans were breathing a slight sigh of relief last night as two out of the three major networks were projecting George Bush as emerging victorious and securing another four years in the White House.

At the time of publication, NBC and ABC were predicting a victory for Bush saying Ohio and New Mexico were states the president would carry, locking up the necessary 270 votes in the electoral college to win.

The Kerry campaign, however, was not willing to concede a victory to Bush. Campaign spokeswoman Mary Beth Cahill said 250,000 votes still needed to be counted in Ohio and said they were confident that once these votes were counted Kerry would secure Ohio's 20 electoral votes.

Throughout the night College Democrats and College Republicans gathered at state political parties at hotels in downtown Columbus, eagerly anticipating the results and remaining Republican George Voinovich, well-known and well-funded, was easily re-elected to a second term in the U.S. Senate yesterday, defeating a Democratic state lawmaker and former congressman.

Voinovich's win in Ohio was based on a statistical analysis of the vote from voter interviews conducted for the AP by Edison Media Research and Mitofsky International. The exit poll of 1,389 Ohio voters was subject to sampling error of plus or minus 4 percentage points, higher for sub-

Arts, sciences will give research awards

The Colleges of Arts and Sciences are accepting applications for the Undergraduate Research Scholarship competition for fall quarter.

Twice a year, during fall and spring quarters, the colleges hold a competition for graduation with distinction or have other evidence of work on a significant research pro-

The scholarships, which range from $750 to about $5,000, are allocated over winter and spring quarters, with funding applied automatically toward the payment of university tuition and fees.

The scholarship is meant to recognize both the high quality of undergraduate research and the willingness of the arts and sciences faculty to assist students with their first research experience, said Mary Ellen Jenkins, assistant dean of the college's honors program.

To be eligible for a scholar-

"One of the most beneficial aspects of the competition was working with my research adviser to compile the research proposal," Bogan said. "I was able to learn about and craft a research proposal similar to the ones that researchers actually submit in the process of applying for grants, and it provided me with an even deeper understanding and appreciation of academic research."

Bogan said the benefits of the scholarship competition are still evident in his life today.

"Through the experience that I gained conducting undergraduate research, I was well prepared to continue my research this past summer, and currently at the OSU College of Dentistry," Bogan said.

Applications for the 2004-2005 fall competition are available in the honors office in 207 Enarson Hall. The deadline is Nov. 14.

Machines malfunctioned, tempers flared and edgy voters often waited hours yesterday to pick the president in a contentious race watched by thousands of monitors who expected the worst.

By the close of East Coast polls, only scattered local snafus had been reported in an election turnout that was shaping up to be the heaviest in years.

order of the day, and in some states it prompted poll closures and unfounded complaints.

In New Jersey, a suspicious substance later determined to be spilled salt prompted the two-hour closure of a Mount Laurel precinct. In Pennsylvania, GOP election monitors complained that some Philadelphia voting machines already had thousands of recorded votes when the polls opened at 7 a.m.

Local election officials quickly explained that voting machines registered every vote ever cast on them and that did not constitute evidence of Hyper vigilance appeared to be the including Iowa and Michigan, the liberal trict of Columbia. Only Nevada has sites. A Democratic official in Cleveland group MoveOn.org was accused of disrupting local precincts. In Ohio, a woman filed a lawsuit on behalf of voters who did not receive absentee ballots on time, asking they be allowed to cast provisional ballots. Later a Toledo federal judge granted her request.

Also in Michigan, the NAACP filed a Justice Department complaint saying it received 35 complaints that GOP poll watchers were harassing voters in

In Wisconsin, Republicans said vandals spray painted "Illegitimate Democracy" across state party headquarters. In Milwaukee, police said tires were slashed on about 20 get-out-the-vote vehicles leased by the GOP.

New touch-screen voting machines, criticized by computer scientists and several elections officials as susceptible to hacking and malfunction, were used Tuesday in 29 states and the Dis-

In Florida, two Bush supporters filed a lawsuit seeking at least $15,000 in damages, claiming they were punched, pushed, shoved and spat on when they showed up at a Halloween rally for Democratic candidate John Kerry, dressed as giant flip-flops. In a separate lawsuit, the ACLU asked that absentee ballots mailed within the United States be subject to the same deadline, Nov. 12., as overseas ballots.

Provisional ballots, new this election, also prompted disaster fears because they could delay recount efforts. Any voter whose name does not appear on precinct rolls is entitled to cast a provisional ballot. # Tearing up OU

Students' actions inexcusable

The annual Halloween block party in Athens, Ohio, near Ohio University has come and gone, much to the relief of Athens officials and police. Despite lower attendance this year than the past two and rioting erupting in various parts of the city, arrest numbers were still up.

This year, 98 people were arrested, 63 of whom were college students. Of those 63, seven were from Ohio State, according to OU and Athens police reports. One of those OSU students was arrested for assaulting a police officer and was subdued by a taser after pepper spray failed to bring him down.

Seven might sound like a small number, but the OSU arrests are symbolic of the general attitude OSU has toward the Athens and OU communities during the Halloween celebration. The attitude of Sean Bevan, quoted in Monday's Lantern story about the OU arrests, is typical of the indifference OSU students have toward the problems caused by crowds of people outnumbering the city population coming to Athens.

"OSU always comes down here and runs this place," he said. "This is our stomping grounds for tonight. You get to leave home and if you don't get arrested no one even knows you were here."

This is a poor attitude for OSU students to have when leaving the campus area and visiting other locations. It is precisely this way of thinking among students at other universities that led to much of the trouble during the OSU-Michigan riot two years ago, the Chitfest riots during spring quarter 2002 and traffic issues with past African-American Heritage Festivals before the festival was moved up a month in 2003. Students from other universities came down and stirred up trouble throughout the campus area, knowing full well that once the damage was done that they could leave behind the chaos they helped create and return to their college communities. Afterward, many media sources criticized OSU students severely for their behavior, failing to realize that not every rioter was a student at OSU.

OSU students, in turn, have a responsibility when they go out into other communities, whether it's traveling and attending sporting events at other universities or attending parties at other colleges. This all boils down to the Golden Rule: "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." If OSU students do not want students from other universities to visit and cause trouble at big university events, then they need to behave themselves when they are traveling to other communities

Dead voters haunt election

As if the country needed more complications in the tight presidential race, another anomaly has sprung up that could sway the election, this one from beyond the grave: Voters who have passed away will, for the most part, still have their ballots counted in Ohio and a handful of other key states.

The early voting options this year are plentiful, which include in-person options and absentee ballots. According to an Associated Press story, in Flordia at least 1.8 million absentee ballots have been cast, and about 400 people in the state die everyday. In 2000, Florida went to Bush by 537 votes. This presents a real threat of invalid votes affecting the election.

Implementing electronic machines was a positive step to minimize these kinds of problems, but the machines have created new issues. The touch-screen voting machines, which have been implemented in many states and in Columbus, keep no paper records. Consequently, all early votes are lumped together, and the casters' names lost.

Sentimentalists might say that voting might amount to a person's dying wish, and depriving them of their political voice would be cruel. Also, keeping track of who has died in each precinct is impossible, some election officials have said — lists of the dead are often not updated for officials in time for Election Day.

Because of the close presidential election in 2000 and the dead heat this year's candidates are facing, election officials need to take as many steps as possible to make sure only eligible votes are counted. Counting votes from dead voters is a mistake made by areas that resign themselves to thinking it cannot be helped in

If the 2000 election taught the country anything, it is that small pockets of votes can foul up an election. Despite all the attention this year to challenging provisional ballots, ineligible voters and wrong voting precincts, the issue of dead voters is still a blight on the process. Their votes should count no more than a person who permanantly moves out of the country before Election Day.

Invalid votes are difficult to track, but the election officials are charged with ensuring the most pure election count possible. It is completely arbitrary on officials' part to fail to enforce this, especially when considering the heat the country's vote counters are in for once the election is over. The eyes of the world will be watching closely, and America does not need any extra voices, supernatural or not, adding to the sure-to-be-contested poll count.

Take polling lines in stride

I'm coming to you live from the line at the New Albany Precinct A poll. I've been in line for an hour, and there looks to be another hour ahead of me. I'm going to miss my 11:30 class, and might end up being late for work. It's the price I pay for democracy, and I'm willing to fork it over.

I don't believe I have ever been so inconvenienced in all my life. Children are whining at their parents, curmudgeons complaining about the wait and business people are making conference calls on their cells phones. In a strange way it is like music to my ears. They are all here to vote — how incredible!

However, it does annoy me that so many people are lamenting the slow process. They impatiently ask the underpaid, elderly poll workers how much longer it will take, and then glare at them when the answer "I don't know" is all they can return.

"Why are they so unprepared?" they ask among themselves. That is a very simple question to answer, actually. It's because most of the people in these lines usually don't care enough to vote, and now that this presidential election has come around and they suddenly realize the need, the voters are there but the poll workers and equipment to support them

It's like fair-weather fans at a football game. The stadium is small because there usually aren't very many supporters, but once the team is in a big game, droves of people claim to be fans and then groan when there is no room for them. Politics are just as fair-weather as sports are in America, and that is pretty sad.

The pundits are expecting an 80 percent turnout at the polls this year. Holy gerrymandering, Batman!

One could hope this sudden spark of patriotic involvement would last a bit longer than Nov. 2, but I'm not holding my breath. Americans tend to show up when they think it's really important and I'm coming to you live from the line at not bother with the hassle of the rest of the New Albany Precinct A poll. I've the elections.

From P. Diddy's "Vote or Die" campaign to MTV's "Rock the Vote," it has become fabulously hip to vote this year. More young people have registered to vote than ever before, and we are a massively important demographic. Let's hope this will create life-long participants out of these first-time voters.

As Americans, we truly take for granted this awesome power we are granted every time we go to the polls. Most of the time we blow it off or give it little consideration.

I remember my first vote with pride, and while sometimes I have to miss class or be late to work to make my vote count, it is worth it.

Imagine what the Afghanis must have felt when they recently got to vote for the first time a few weeks back. In America, all we have to do is turn 18 and fill out a form. Some of these first-time Afghani voters are generations older than I am, and it took decades of war, strife and oppression for them to gain this incredible right. We have it good here.

I don't care who you voted for, as long as you voted. I urge you to keep it up next year and the year after that, too. Every election will affect you and those you care about in some way, so take the few minutes out of your day

So, my fellow Americans, this long and arduous process of a presidential election is almost over — though the next campaign will begin within a year. Hopefully the end will not be as messy as the last one, but we'll just have to wait and see. Nevertheless, thank you to everyone who made this campaign season one of the most involved and interesting in modern American politics. Democracy looks to have paid off, so let's keep it up.

If you voted yesterday, I thank and applaud you.

Oh, and I hope you enjoy your sticker.

Election finally over Wow, what an election night, huh? All ... the apocalypse is coming.

BENJAMIN COX

is a junior in music history. He can be reached for comment at benny083002@yahoo. Wow, what an election night, huh? All the drama, buildup, campaigning, dirty tricks, Swift Boat Veterans for Horse Crap — it all came to a head last night. I don't have an opinion on last night's debacle because when I wrote this I hadn't seen it yet. That being said, I think I've found a way to comment on last night's action, choose-your-own-adventure style.

What an election night. All the ballots are in, and it's so crazy that ...

... Kerry won. Yes! It's finally over; all the hard work college students and progressives did paid off. We can rest easy — Bush and his cronies will be gone in a few months.

... Bush won. That's it, I've lost faith in mankind. Four more years, great, I'm sure he'll take great strides to mend the huge divide we have in our country right now. He wouldn't just keep taking the country far to the right, would ... Nader won. But Nader did not win. I might not have seen the results, but I know that much.

... They haven't announced a winner yet because many votes are in question. Is anyone surprised? Is anyone who has lived in this country for the last four years shocked? Anyone? Bueller?

It's so weird that the Red Sox World Series win combined with the Redskins loss predicted ...

... Kerry's strong finish. 2004 is the year for Massachusetts; all the karma from the Sox and the Patriots rubbed off on Kerry and he finished the campaign strong. Since 1936, after a Redskins loss before the election the challenger won the White House, while a win correlated with the incumbent party's victory. The trend held in 2004 with the Packers defeating the 'Skins and Kerry taking down Bush.

... the apocalypse is coming. Only in a year that the Red Sox win the Series could a president with this track record keep his job. Bush screwed up so bad; he angered a huge portion of his country and the world. In turn, the voters showed that stupid world we weren't about to elect a wussy Democrat. I mean, if we would have elected Kerry we could have gotten attacked by terrorists or he could have gotten us into an unwinnable war. Stay with Bush, he has experience.

Also, isn't it odd that the new Osama Bin Laden video ...

... reminded people Bush hasn't captured him yet but that we do have Saddam (and a huge mess in Iraq). People decided they gave Bush enough time to capture the mastermind behind the Sept. 11 attacks and decided to give Kerry a shot.

... reminded people that the world is a scary place and Kerry (and his 20 years in the Senate) is just too inexperienced to be president. Bush (and his six years as Governor of Texas and four years as President) is a much more experienced choice to defend our country.

... really didn't affect the election at all. Anyone who would try to spin that Bin Laden actually cared which candidate won is stupid. He hates America, not Bush's America or Kerry's America, but our America. It's not a plus for either candidate that this guy is still making more movies per year than Chris 'Waiting for Rush Hour 3' Tucker.

Well, last night sure was nuts. I'm glad this election is over (except for the lawsuit-recount part) At least I don't have to see another misleading political ad anytime soon. I get to look forward to the next four years with president ...?

YOUR VIEWS

Bias still found in

Lantern articles

I am especially surprised at how The Lantern has been handling things. I don't understand how a daily paper can call itself "The Student Voice of Ohio Sate University" and be so biased. I have picked up your paper this entire quarter and almost everyday you have something in about Sen. John Kerry and how his campaign is doing, yet you neglect to mention almost anything about President Bush. I should remind you that Ohio State has approximately 55,000 students and not all of them are voting for Kerry. You, as the representative of the student body, have done a poor job of presenting both candidates fairly.

Other than a few opinion columns that I have read, time and time again, you have only published your biased views. For example, just this past week Kerry was here with Bruce Springsteen. No one could miss it — this concert interrupted any type of normalcy on our entire campus. The buses were not running their regular routes, classes were interrupted because of the music outside and sidewalks were blocked off. So whether anyone was in support of what was going on or not, we were forced to deal with thousands of people filtering onto our campus

And guess what the cover story on The Lantern was the very next morning? Yes, a large picture of Kerry embracing Springsteen. Yet not many people even knew Jenna and Barbara Bush were at the Ohio Union Oct. 26. I scanned through The Lantern and not one word was mentioned about the Bush twins' visit.

Or take Monday, for example. I scanned the papers to see if you had mentioned or had a picture of President Bush's visit on Friday to Nationwide, but once again I was disappointed to find that I was right; nothing was said.

I am not writing this to tell anyone who to vote for because regardless of what happened yesterday I know that God is in control, but I just want to inform you that there are people who actually want to see both candidates are fairly presented in what should be the "voice" of all students at OSU.

Voters should be proud of turnout

As a 21-year-old independent, undecided, swing-state voter who didn't decide until Election Day who he was voting for, I only hope that the American people will realize the positive impact the 2004 election should have on our country.

Regardless who wins the race for president, Americans should be proud. I went to the Kerry rally on the South Oval and the Bush rally at Nationwide Arena. From the supporters to the protesters, three things were evident: patriotism, passion and pride. Yes, our country is almost evenly divided based on who it supports. But our country was not divided on how much they love America or the fact that they were willing to get out there and show they cared.

From "Rock The Vote" to P.Diddy's "Vote or Die," campaigns to get out the vote were abundant, and they worked. Anyone who saw the line winding through the student union would know the young voters were voicing their opinion Nov. 2.

At the polls, there were signs of

At the polls, there were signs of Americans coming together. Because of the weather, I saw Democrats sharing their umbrellas with Republicans. On a local radio station, a listener called in to say that tears were brought to her eyes just by seeing all the young people voting at the local school where she votes.

So congratulations, America, and congratulations especially to young voters. In a time where we often hear how America's youth doesn't do enough, America's youth stood up on Nov. 2, 2004. Whether your candidate wins or loses the election this year, remain patriotic, remain passionate and remain proud. And don't forget about 2008.

, Minnesota poisons lakes to control fish populations

(U-WIRE) MINNEAPOLIS — Last week, the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources went ahead with its plan to poison two lakes near Forest Lake, Minn., in an attempt to rid them of unwanted rough fish, including carp and bullhead, to make way for game fish, like northern pike, to take

The department used a mixture containing rotenone, a common garden pesticide and potent fish toxin, to kill the fish. The department said this strategy is effective against shallow lake invaders that stir up the lake bottom, making the water cloudy and limiting grasses that waterfowl use for food. The department, Ducks Unlimited and the Minnesota Waterfowl Association all say ducks and geese will become more abundant at the lakes by Rotenone has been used in Minnesota lakes since 1945 without much controversy, but the chemical does have disadvantages. It has been experimentally linked with diseases similar to Parkinson's in high doses, although it is not proven as a carcinogen. Low doses seem to be relatively harmless, if those involved take the proper safety precautions.

Rotenone's most detrimental effects appear to be on biodiversity. As a pesticide, it eliminates a large percentage of a lake's aquatic insects,

U.N. urges North Korea, Iran to halt nuclear programs

By Edith M. Lederer Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS - Challenged by the U.N. nuclear chief to prove its atomic programs are peaceful, North Korea said it would scrap its "nuclear deterrence" if the United States ended its hostile policy and Iran said negotiations with three European countries might "bring fruit."

Monday, North Korea's deputy U.N. ambassador Kim Chang Guk rejected the International Atomic Energy Agency, calling it "a political tool of the superpower." He also accused Japan of allowing U.S. nuclear weapons on its soil and South Korea of nuclear ambitions.

Iran's deputy U.N. ambassador Mehdi Danesh-Yazdi was less strident, but stressed that Tehran "is determined to pursue its inalienable rights to develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes." He also criticized the international community for targeting Iran's nuclear program while saying nothing about Israel's.

International Atomic Energy Agency chief Mohamed ElBaradei challenged both countries in his annual report to the U.N. General Assembly, urging Iran to suspend its uranium enrichment program "as a confidence-building measure" and North Korea to dismantle its nuclear weapons program or at least allow inspections to ensure it is "exclusively

He expressed hope that Iran will decide to suspend enrichment before the International Atomic Energy Agency board meets in Vienna, Austria on Nov. 25. Britain, Germany and France have warned that most European countries would back the United States' call to refer Iran to the U.N. Security Council if the Iranian government does not abandon all enrichment activities before the board Danesh-Yazdi said Iran has a right "to develop, research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes." But he told the General Assembly Tehran has voluntarily suspended enrichment activities since last November.

Iranian President Mohammad Khatami delivered the same message vesterday in Tehran, telling reporters it was possible Iran would continue suspension of uranium enrichment and that he was hopeful of a compromise with Europe over its nuclear program.

The talks with the Europeans are aimed at averting a standoff over Iran's nuclear weapons program at the Nov. 25 meeting of the U.N. nuclear watchdog. The third round of talks is to be held on Friday. The Europeans have offered Iran a trade deal and peaceful nuclear technology in return for ly," Kim said, stressing his counassurances Iran would stop enriching uranium indefinitely.

Earth to Crew: Nix Andrulis, adjust roster

What an unbelievable choke! That's all I can say. This was supposed to be the season when the Crew finally played up to expectations in the Major League Soccer playoffs.

Well, the Crew didn't do that on Saturday night, tying New England 1-1 at home at Crew Stadium in a match the team needed to win if it wanted to move on in the playoffs.

Now the Crew, who won the Supporters' Shield this season for having the best regular season record, own both the greatest regular season choke-job of all-time (1999) and the greatest playoff choke-job in league his-

During the match Sunday evening, the Crew looked like a team devoid of any confidence, any plan of attack and any sense of purpose. This was on a night when, more than any other, the team needed all three.

While there is a lot of blame to spread for the performance, and Ross Paule and Tony Sanneh do deserve some of it for hitting two really bad penalties when it counted, there's one man who deserves more of the blame than any other.

His name is Greg Andrulis. The Crew coach sent his team out Sunday night with a lineup that appeared as if he made it by labeling darts with his players' names and throwing them at a diagram of a soccer field. First off, Andrulis bailed on his eccentric but previously effective pairing of Kyle Martino - a converted midfielder — and inconsistent forward Edson Buddle. Sunday he instead started 34-year-old retread Dante Washington alongside Martino. I think I can almost see Andrulis' logic here in replacing Buddle after he absolutely stunk out the stadium during Game 1. But to replace him with Washington, a player who has only been on the team a few weeks and who played most of the season with the minor league Virginia Beach Mariners, is simply

The decision to start Washington also was a slap in the face to Jeff Cunningham, who is a massive headcase, but a headcase with an undoubted nose-tor-goal which too often the Crew lacked among its forwards. To replace the threesome that, while inconsistent, did manage to help the team to not lose a single match after the midseason All-Star break, was dumb and an example of how Andrulis who left Wright State to coach the Crew — is simply punching a little too far above his weight as a coach.

It is true that Buddle, Cunningham and Martino have massive glaring faults in their respective games. Cunningham is nuts and goes on long periods where he can't shoot the ball into the ocean if he was aiming from the beach, Martino is soft and can be taken out of the game with just a little bit of jostling, and Buddle's head seems to spend most of its time in the clouds rather than trying to find the net.

The Crew has still failed to address its problems developing young attacking players as Crew draftees and signees who are supposed to score goals but almost never, ever do. Let's go down the list. Jamal Sutton, Michael Ritch, David Testo, Diego Walsh, Erick Scott, Devin Barclay, Alex Pineda Chacon, Freddy Garcia — the list just goes on and on.

Who scouts for this team? Anyone? But that's a question for a different column.

Another problematic panicky decision was Andrulis' choice to start ancient midfielder-defender Tony Sanneh as an attacking midfielder.

His lineup Sunday simply stinks of a coach panicking.

And how should we know? Every American soccer fan remembers 1998 when U.S. national team coach Steve Sampson panicked before the World Cup and decided against playing experienced players like John Harkes, Marcello Balboa and Alexi Lalas in favor of guys like David Regis, Brian Maisonneuve and Chad Deering.

WEDNESDAY NOVEMBER 3, 2004

close. Perhaps the greatest and most involving epic series of fiction of modern times has come to clearing at the end of the path.

The technically retired master of horror, Stephen King released his seventh and final installment in his "The Dark Tower" series, aptly titled "The Dark Tower." The series that began over 20 years ago with "The Gunslinger," a western-science fiction-fantasy tale of a young man pursuing a wizard across a vast and nearly lifeless desert, drew to a rather twisted and anticlimactic close this fall.

The seven-part series followed the trail of Roland Deschain, the last of a profession known as Gunslingers: a mixture of diplomat, knight, emissary and cowboy, who just so happens to be the last remaining descendant of the mythical King Arthur. Over the first six novels the reader saw Roland draw allies from different points in time from a world that is similar to our own, allies who we as readers would come to love and, at

Readers learned of Roland's past allies, and how closely his new band of friends resembles his old one is constantly commented on within the text. Though his friends have changed, Roland's goal never wavers; he is hell-bent on reaching the Dark Tower. The tower is essentially the center spindle upon which all of the multiple universes are stacked, much like a pack of CD-Rs with the plastic dowel in the center to hold them all in place.

He seeks the tower because his world and all the subsequent realities are in jeopardy and the tower itself is set to topple over unless someone logical items that transported them to safety, ascends it and wills all of creation back to order from its pinnacle.

There is the recovered heroin addict from the '80s, Edward Dean, whom Roland is always reprimanding for being flippant and disrespectful. There is Susanah Dean, who married Edward. Readers watched her character emerge as a fusion of two personalities that used to divide her mind into the highly educated but overly pathetic Odeta Holmes and the bitchy, cruel Detta Walker. Then there is Jake Chambers, plucked from New York in the '70s, who becomes the surrogate son of Roland. The final character of the main band, or "ka-tet" as King calls them, is a creature called a billybumbler, coon, named Oy

His limited ability to speak is first used as a comic note in the story but later turns out to be far AMHERST, Mass. —It has finally come to a more than just mimicry. By far one of King's most novel and innovative characters, Oy is as honorable and deadly as any of the other characters in the series, and proves to be a vital element in Roland reaching his ultimate goal.

With all of the background set and all but a few key characters introduced, the seventh installation of the "Dark Tower" series is a swift-moving novel that changes everything that King has established. Though it is riddled with action scenes and plot twists there are only a few points where King actually attempts to genuinely surprise the reader.

As is par for the course with this series, "The Dark Tower" is filled with portrayals of epic gunfights, littered with foreshadowing and packed with characters and elements from King's other works. In previous installations King brought in his villain of villains, Randal Flagg, from such works as "The Stand" and "Eyes of the Dragon." He also brought in Father Pere Callahan from "Salem's Lot," and most recently Ted Brautigan from "Hearts in Atlantis." Beyond this interweaving of created worlds King brings a fictionalized version of himself into the story

Some would and taut King as a hack for putting himself into his own work and making himself such a powerful character, an avatar of the higher being that created everything. But he portrays himself as such a lousy individual the exercise seems more masochistic than narcissistic.

All of the books in the series have been littered with convenient coincidences that have saved the characters from certain peril, technomystical telepathic abilities that are reminiscent of those used in "The Shining" and several incidences where it seemed like sheer luck kept the characters alive. In "The Dark Tower" King puts a new level of aid in affect for his characters. He, as the character who is writing the story as you are reading it, writes his character's notes and creates items of aid for them. In one scene in particular, King writes a note to Susanah that reads, "Don't worry, the deus ex machina is on

The fact that he is conscious of everything he has written in the book almost justifies all of the cheesy saves and blatantly unbelievable revelations his characters receive. King moves this story visibly close to a mixture of small dog and rac- forcefully toward its one and only possible ending, Roland's reaching The Dark Tower.

So with a forceful hand King drew to a close his epic adventure that dwarfs so many other literary series in its size alone, standing at more than 6,000 pages. It is a massive amalgamation of genres, characters and settings that some readers have made a part of their lives for more than two decades.

King supplies no happily-ever-after ending for this tale, though he does warn readers, and a note from the author, say they should not read the final segment of the epilogue unless they are ready to Lord of the Rings" has in recent years.

be outraged. The last five pages end the whole adventure on a tremendously bittersweet note.

"The Dark Tower" might have been the con-clusion to "The Dark Tower" series, but it might also stand as the last novel from the desk of one of contemporary literature's living legends. As the "Dark Tower" makes its way to print for its paperback release in relative obscurity, one might rest assured that it is a series that will echo and possibly explode into infamy sometime in the future much like J.R.R. #### TERMS AND CONDITIONS

The Lantern will not publish illegal advertising or the advertising of illegal products or services. The Lantern reserves the right to reject advertising that denigrates individuals, groups or organizations based on race, gender, nationality, ethnicity, religion, mental or physical capacity, veteran's status, age or sexual orientation. The Lantern Business Manager will refer questionable advertising to the Publications Committee of the School of Journalism and Communication. The committee will recommend a decision on whether to publish the advertising to the Director of the school.

Complete name, address and telephone number for each advertiser is required.

Copy must be furnished by noon three days before publication, except for special publications whose deadlines will be announced.

An advertisement is required to occupy at least as many inches in height as columns in width. Any advertisement exceeding 18 inches in height will be considered a "full column" (21 inches) advertisement and charged accordingly.

Make-goods and adjustments will be considered for those advertisements only where errors occur in (a) business or group name, address, or phone number, (b) item price or (c) date, time or place of event. The error must be solely the fault of the Lantern. Adjustments will not exceed the cost of the advertisement and will be based on the portion of the advertisement nullified by the error. Minor spelling errors will not qualify for adjustment. Complaints must be registered with the Business Manager with in 45 days of publication to qualify; otherwise the advertiser accepts full responsibility.

Guaranteed position is sold at the Business Manager's discretion

A composition charge may apply to any changes, revisions or cancellations made after deadline.

No proof will be furnished for any advertisement received after deadline or for an ad smaller than

If the Lantern finds it necessary to stop contracted advertising because of nonpayment, the advertising agreement will be violated and the advertiser subject to a "re-bill" fee

The Lantern reserves the right to require prepayment for advertising, or to reject advertising, if the advertiser is delinquent in payment, or if the advertiser's credit is impaired. Advertisers must prepay all advertising until a satisfactory credit rating with the Lantern is established. A certified check or money order is required for out-of-town advertisers.

Contract advertisers will furnish the Lantern with a "rate-holder" ad meeting contract minimums for use in any contract period for which the advertiser does not provide an ad-11. A tearsheet will be furnished for all display advertising run in the Lantern. Additional tearsheets are available (limit 15) provided the advertiser requests them from the Lantern office prior to publication 12. The advertiser agrees to indemnify and hold harmless the Ohio State University, its Board of Trustees and its officers, agents and employees from and against any and all loss, cost and expense, including reasonable attorney fees, resulting from the publication by the Lantern of the advertiser's advertise

13. Advertisers in the Lantern agree that they will not represent themselves in any way as being endorsed by the Ohio State University.

14. A mail-order advertiser is required to submit a sample "proof-of-product" prior to publication. 15. Advertisers must request the return of their original ad materials; the Lantern will dispose of such materials 60 days after their first publication.

Cavs, Boozer ready to start new season

By Tom Withers Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Like everyone else, LeBron James went into his mega-hyped NBA debut a year ago wondering how good he would be as an 18-

Following a mesmerizing 25-point, nine-assist, six-rebound, four-steal performance on national television against the Sacramento Kings, James and the rest of the world — had a much better idea.

"I knew I could play in this league, I just didn't know how well," James said. "After that I felt like I knew I could do this. That first game really helped

Now as the league's reigning rookie of the year, James begins his second pro season on Wednesday night as the Cleveland Cavaliers open the 2004-05 season by hosting the Indiana Pacers.

One year since his scintillating start, James has changed and so have the Cavaliers, who missed the Eastern Conference playoffs by one game last season but are expecting to get back to the postseason for the first time since 1998. There's no reason why they shouldn't. A 6-19 start and a late-season injury to point guard Jeff McInnis derailed Cleveland's playoff hopes last season. They're hoping to start better in 2004-05, and an opening-night win over a quality opponent like Indiana would boost Cleveland's confidence.

"We certainly want to get off to a good start," Cavaliers coach Paul Silas said. "It's an important

The Pacers, who lost to the eventual-league champion Detroit Pistons in the conference semifinals last season, will not be at full strength. Reggie Miller will begin the season on the injured list with a broken right hand and center Jermaine O'Neal is has already emerged as one of the team's leaders.

The absence of Indiana's two superstars can only help Cleveland, but the Cavaliers are not counting on a win just yet.

'Will it be easier for us with those guys out? Yes. But it's still going to be a tough game," center Zydrunas Ilgauskas said. "Emotions will be high because it's opening night."

They certainly were a year ago. James, fresh out of high school as the No. 1 overall draft pick, entered his first pro season saddled with bigger expectations than had ever before been placed on a first-year player.

He was supposed to instantaneously transform the downtrodden Cavaliers into playoff contenders, outshine a stellar rookie class and live up to the

And, lo and behold, James did it all. Cleveland won 18 more games than it did a year earlier, finishing one game behind Boston for the eighth playoff spot. James averaged 20.5 points, 5.9 rebounds and 5.5 assists per game, joining Oscar Roberston and Michael Jordan as the only rookies to post 20-5-5.

James, who has moved from the backcourt to small forward this season, is a year older, wiser and better prepared for the rigors of an 82-game season. But there's a bigger difference in his game: The Cavaliers have better players around him.

Although they did lose Carlos Boozer as a free agent, the Cavaliers' supporting cast has been upgraded significantly. McInnis didn't arrive until late January last season and nearly carried the club to the playoffs anyway. He'll be joined in the backcourt by shooting guard Lucious Harris, who signed with Cleveland as a free agent in October. Eric Snow will not only back up McInni,s but he is a defensive stopper and

Just like Sampson had as U.S. coach, I have always believed that Andrulis might just be a bit in over his head in MLS. Sure, college coaches have succeeded in MLS. Bruce Arena, Sigi Schmid and Bob Bradley all came out of college coaching but they coached at Virginia, UCLA and Princeton, respectively. Those are just a bit different than coaching at a middling Horizon League school in a league where only one school takes soccer seriously - University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

But the most important question isn't whether Andrulis should go - frankly, most observers have known the answer to that since the Crew missed the playoffs last season. The question is, will he be fired? And the answer, unbelievably so, is probably not.

Lamar Hunt and his family, who own the Crew, seem to exist in this parallel universe where failure is OK if you're a nice enough guy. I accept that viewpoint as valid in college sports where there are (supposed to be) higher motives involved with athletics other than simply winning. But in professional sports, these guys are paid to win and put an entertaining product on the field. And under Andrulis, the Crew has too often failed to do so. But the Hunts just seem happy to plod along, happy with disappointing actual soccer fans while giving Columbus families a few hours of non-threatening middle-American entertainment.

The Crew threatens to alienate its real supporters even further if Andrulis is the coach on opening day next spring. If I was a supporter, I can't see how I would renew my season tickets if Andrulis returned as coach. He has not found the answers for this team's problems, and there is no evidence that he will.

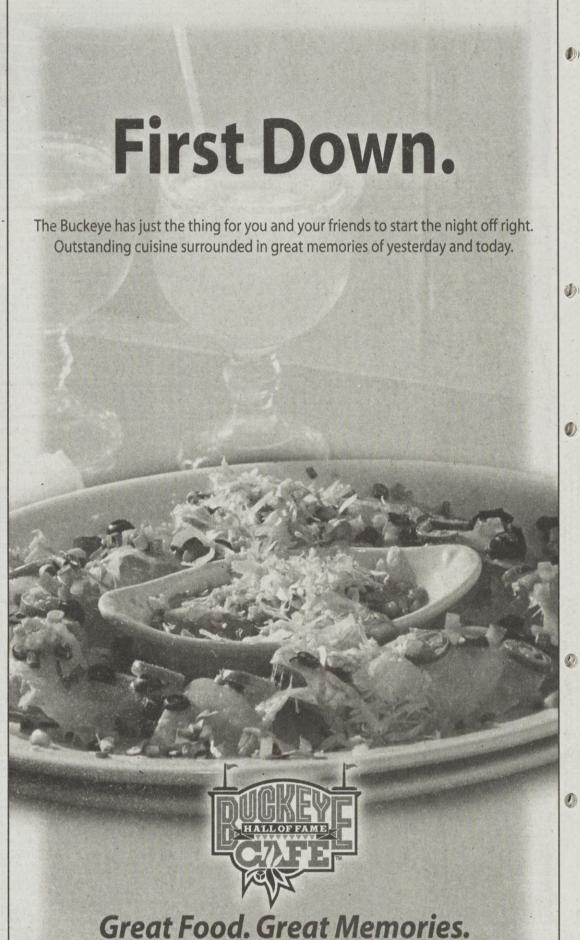

If I were Crew general manager, here's what I would do: Cunningham and Buddle are gone, not enough bang for the bonkers they bring to the locker room.

Martino is gone too — he's too soft and inconsistent — and Danny Szetela is waiting in the wings. Trade Martino to a team looking for an attacking midfielder on draft day and use the resulting draft picks and space under the salary cap in a smart way.

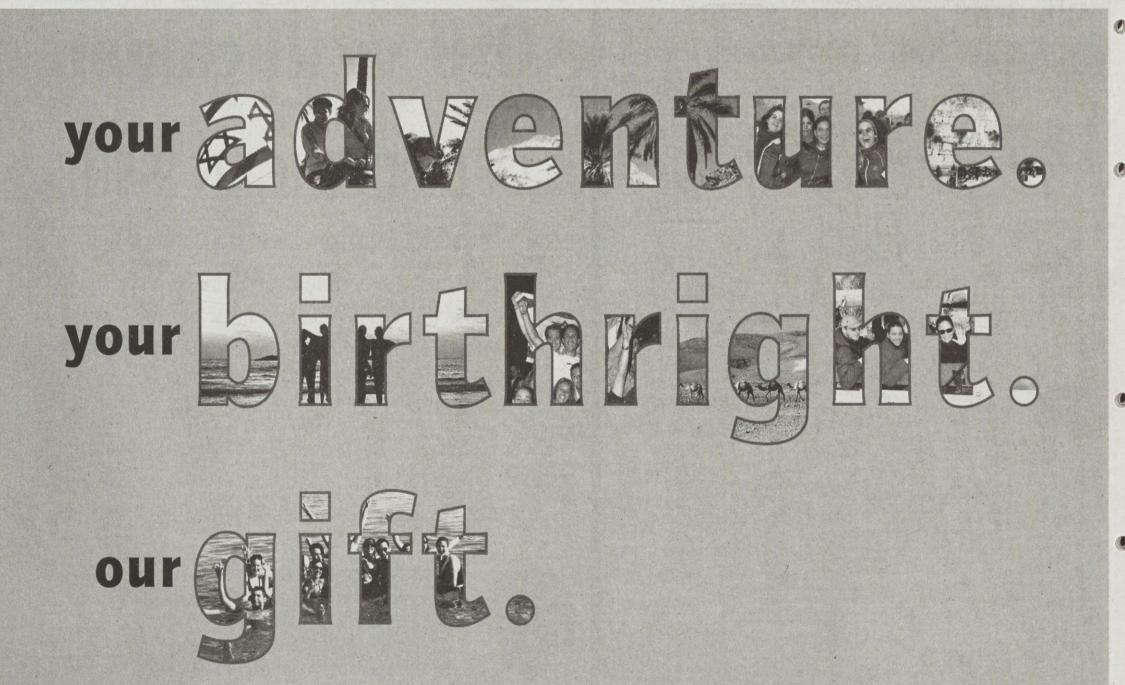

Now I'm not the GM, am I? But the man who is might just be the salvation for the suffering Crew fans. New GM Mark McCullers shows signs of lifting the entire organization out of its rut induced by former GM Jim "I am not Ned Flanders' identical twin" Smith. Hopefully, he will convince the Hunt family that a change is needed with this team.

I hope he does, for the sake of these poor fans and for the sake of soccer's long-term success in this city.

Aaron Stollar is sports editor of The Lantern and has covered the Crew for The Underground or as Lantern beat writer for four seasons. He hopes Andrulis, if fired, finds success for a college team somewhere better than Wright
