THE STUDENT VOICE OF OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY

New budget might save education

Senate's plan scraps slot machines, preserves one cent sales tax increase

By Anthony Lima
Lantern staff writer

The academic community might be able to breathe a sigh of relief if the Senate's version of the Fiscal year 2004-2005 budget bill is passed through legislature.

But it's not that easy. The House, which already passed their version of the biennium budget measure (HB-95) almost two months ago, will likely reject the amendments made by the Senate in yesterday's passage. The bill would then go to a House-Senate conference committee consisting of four Republicans and two Democrats, who would then decide the final look of the bill.

One of the key discrepancies between the two bills is the allocation of university funding. Although the Senate's share for higher education spending is $84 million less than Gov. Bob Taft's proposal, it is significantly higher than the House's proposal — by $225 million.

Taft's spokesman said the governor is encouraged to see the increase in educational funding as part of the new Senate bill. "He is pleased the funding levels for higher education and K-12 has been somewhat restored to the governor's initial proposal," Taft spokesman Orest Holubec said. "He understands the difficulty in passing the budget during such a difficult period of time economically."

OSU President Karen A. Holbrook is happy with the Senate's plans for higher education.

"We are very excited with the Senate's measure," Holbrook said. "It demonstrates that the state understands the significance of higher education."

Holbrook and other members of OSU administration were concerned about the original House budget solution, which would have reduced OSU's state allotment by about $19.8 million over fiscal year 2004 and 2005. Holbrook testified in front of the Senate Finance Committee May 22 about the long-term dangers of cutting funding further.

"The investments you make in higher education are making a substantial impact on the lives of Ohio citizens and the future prosperity of the state," Holbrook said during her testimony. "It is critical to Ohio's future that its state share of education be funded at the governor's recommended level."

OSU's state appropriation has taken a substantial hit in the past three years, largely because of economic decline.

The state has cut OSU funding by 9.5 percent since 2001. The most recent reduction came in March when the governor signed an executive order to cut $7.7 million to relieve a statewide deficit of more than $162 million. OSU officials eagerly await the conclusion of the budget bill because of its direct impact on the status of faculty and staff raises.

Another stumbling block in the potential conference committee would be the details of the video slot machine provision and its tie to a sales tax increase. The House's version of the budget included a temporary penny increase on the existing 5 percent sales tax — starting July 1. It also included a stipulation where voters would have

The provost of Ohio State will soon be packing his bags for his new appointment as president of Oregon State.

The selection board at Oregon State made its decision yesterday.

"Choosing Dr. Ray was done with much care and consideration, and reflects the voices of the faculty, staff, students, and all the members of the OSU RAY (Oregon) community who attended the various forums and shared their opinions with the board," said Kerry Barnett, chairwoman of the search committee and member of the board.

"We were very fortunate to have had such a rich pool of candidates, and appreciate all of their time and efforts in meeting with our campus communities," Barnett said.

Ray will start in his new position on September 1 and will be officially leaving Ohio State shortly prior to that date.

"I am extremely energized and excited about joining the OSU (Oregon) community and helping the university continue to fulfill its important mission in serving the higher education needs of Oregonians," Ray said. "The faculty's dedication to their academic areas concern for students, and love of Oregon State was very apparent. My wife and I look forward to moving on campus and becoming part of the Corvallis community."

OSU Alumni Association president to retire

Heinlen has no regrets after 38 years of service to Ohio State community

By Matthew Carroll
Lantern staff writer

His Ohio State roots run deeper than Michael Jenkins on a post pattern, and on Dec. 31, Alumni Association president and CEO, Dan Heinlen, will retire after 38 years of service.

After acting as president for 30 years and relocating from the small east wing of the Fawcett Center to a brand new $11 million alumni house in October 1999, Heinlen has accomplished more things than he could have imagined.

Heinlen was born in Columbus and roamed around the OSU campus as a youngster.

"When I was 12, I walked all over campus," Heinlen said. "I would go to places like Long's. I knew it real well."

Heinlen's parents were both graduates of OSU, and his father was a member of the marching band. One of his grandmothers was a cook in Baker Hall, and his other grandmother was a secretary for the Department of Entomology. Even his great aunt was involved with the university as the director for the School of Home Economics.

"I was enrolled in the Campbell Hall nursery school," he said. "My mother was a part-time teacher in home economics and my dad worked for the YMCA in Chillicothe."

Heinlen remembered when we would tie on an apron and help the football players bus dishes in Baker Hall.

"I was real young, and everyone else was much bigger. I busied dishes while the football players sat and talked to the ladies," Heinlen said before laughing.

Going into the eighth grade, Heinlen and his family moved to a town just outside of Pittsburgh. When it came time for him to go to college, he decided OSU Alumni Association President Dan Heinlen plans to retire this year after 30 years of work. Heinlen plans on being available for Ohio State, not only as a reference.

OSU was just too big for him.

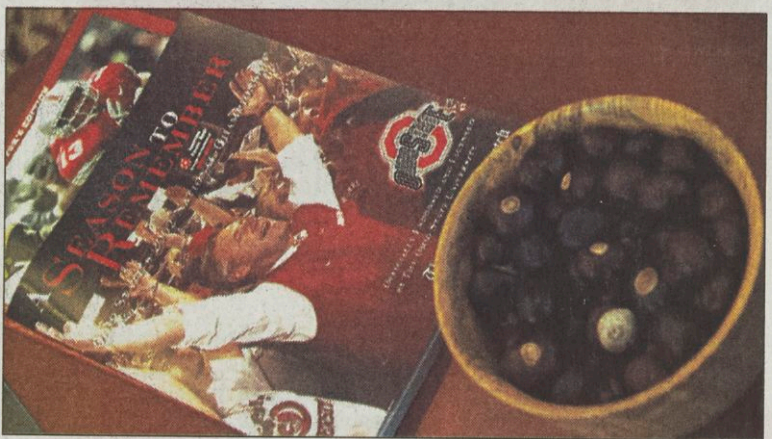

"I was overwhelmed at the size of the campus," he said. "The dorms were bigger than my hometown."

He attended smaller Thiel College in Greenville, Penn., but would come back to work in Columbus during the summer.

"I had a summer job at Lazarus, making $1.25 an hour," he said.

He decided to transfer to

Students stuck in study lounges

By Kristen Justice
Lantern staff writer

Studying in the bedroom is a bad idea — but what if that is the only choice?

Some students arriving at Ohio State this fall may have to live in what used to be a study lounge, now converted into a residence hall room.

"It has been an ongoing strategy over the years," said Jenny Klein, director of residence life at OSU. "We have to put students in study lounges until permanent rooms become available."

At OSU, autumn quarter brings in many freshmen — often too many to put into regular residence hall rooms.

"About 150 to 250 students do not tell us that they are not coming back the following school year," said Toni Greenslade, director of OSU's housing assignments. "Instead of just not showing up, we would appreciate their consideration in telling us that they are not returning the following quarter."

EDITORIAL:
University should give incoming freshman housing priority.

This type of temporary housing is only set up in the south campus residence halls which include Baker, Park, Smith, Steeb and Stradley halls. The majority of first-year students at OSU live on south campus.

"What happens is OSU's maintenance and housekeeping service begins setting up these living arrangements in August," Greenslade said. "Our goal is that we only have students living in these temporary rooms for the first couple weeks of the quarter."

"Some quarters we are successful; others we are not," Greenslade said.

The study lounges that are converted into residence hall rooms feature a loft bed, desk, dresser, file cabinet, lamp and a bar to hang clothes on for each student assigned to the room.

"Our job is to go in and clean these lounges and prepare them for the students," said Hilda Winston, employee in the department of building services.

Winston said there is one study lounge on each floor of the south campus residence halls. The low rise residence halls have four floors and the high rise residence halls have 11 floors.

Some find it hard to understand why the university still turns the study lounges into boarding rooms when the number of students admitted is likely to increase over the years.

"It is difficult to fit, say, three people into one little study lounge," Winston said. "It is a bit overpowering with all of the electric running through one little room. It could start a fire."

Since enrollment is on the rise at OSU, the university seems to have no other choice than to make whatever accommodations are necessary for the incoming class.

"To deny a student housing would be like saying 'no' to their hopes and dreams of coming to OSU," Klein said. "That is not what we want to do."

Area hotels prepare for commencement crowds

Massive flood of family and friends before ceremony books hotels to their capacity

By Anne Allred
Lantern staff writer

One year before their commencement, students have to start planning. Applying for graduation, class registration, resumes and landing a job top the priority list. However, something people often forget is to make hotel reservations.

Reserving a room on campus is a mad dash.

The Holiday Inn on Lane sold out for the spring commencement a year ago. The Blackwell, only 500 steps from being booked eight months prior, said Frank Nichols, general manager.

Hotels near campus expect to be full the night before graduation and make efforts to ensure every room is taken.

"Most hotels oversell because of the factored fallout which is a percentage of cancellations and no-shows," said Peter Jung, assistant general manager of the University Plaza Hotel.

Families of graduates are prepared that locking in a reservation is not easy. "The consumers are smart. They book at one hotel, get the rate, then they'll shop for better rates and double book," Jung said.

The Holiday Inn has a waiting list for those hoping others will cancel. Some visitors give up on the campus hotels altogether and make reservations further away.

"We get the overflow after campus hotels are filled up," said Courtney Robins, front office manager of the Adam's Mark on North Third Street.

The Adam's Mark is also fully booked for Thursday.

"My recommendation is that as soon as you know when graduation is, make a reservation," Agosto said. "If by chance you don't graduate that quarter, you can always cancel."

Almost all hotels will take a reservation one year from the desired date. Some will take reservations even further out, but with a pending rate per room. Making a reservation with a credit card is a good idea because it guarantees a room.

Cancellation policies are lenient. Often visitors may cancel up until the afternoon they are due to arrive.

Rates vary widely. Some hotels increase standard room rates over graduation weekends and others promote specials to attract business. The Blackwell charges $199 for a standard room. Holiday Inn reduces their usual rate of $149 to $139, and the Adam's Mark reduces their rate to $89 for families who say they are in for the OSU graduation.

Those who have already made reservations for next years commencement may be notified by the hotel of the date change for the 2004 graduation.

"When people call we always ask them the reason for their reservation," Agosto said.

The Blackwell is attempting to call people and offer them the chance to change their reservation to Sunday night, instead of Thursday night.

Some people avoid the hotel scramble and find accommodations elsewhere.

"My parents are staying with my sister in Upper Arlington just because it's easier," said Tori Mayer, a graduating senior in special education.

Some Ohioans who live within driving distance will skip the overnight stay to avoid the hassle.

"I only live about 40 minutes away, in London, so my mom is just driving up that day," said Lana Mathewson, a graduating senior in crop science.

OSU after his freshman year and was put on academic probation for a quarter until he did well. He then realized what college was all about.

During his time at OSU he served as president of Delta Sigma Phi fraternity, vice president of Ohio Staters, Inc., executive director of the Fraternity Affairs Office and was a member of Sphinx, the senior honorary.

Heinlen graduated in December 1960 with a degree in social work and went to work as the director for the YMCA outside of Pittsburgh.

Heinlen became a member of the Alumni Association staff in 1965, and was hired as president in 1973. The alumni secretary, John Fullen, was retiring, and the Board of Directors hired Richard Mall, professor of speech and communication, to replace him.

"He had his own television show from 1965 to 1968 on Channel 10. It was called 'Traffic Court,'" Heinlen said. "Mall was the judge on the show and very popular. He was a very smart guy. In August of 1973, at the age of 54, he dropped dead of a heart attack. There were around 144 applications to replace him, and they hired me."

The Association started in 1879 and has been going strong since.

"There are over 200 alumni clubs and 58 alumni societies around the world," he said. "We also put out an alumni magazine at least eight times a year."

MORGAN WONORSKI/THE LANTERN

After 30 years in his position as president of the OSU Alumni Association, Dan Heinlen has decided to retire from his position.

The Ohio State Alumni Association is the second largest dues-paying association in the country, behind Penn State's.

"We have to appeal to a broad variety of people," Heinlen said. "It's like playing a piano. You need to play the right keys to get the right harmony. Some people want different things."

He said they research their alumni to see what types of things they like participating in.

"We use the talents and assets of what we have at the university to appeal to their interests."

There are over 123,000 members in the association, and, in comparison to the size of the university's classes over the past 120 years, it seems like there should be more.

"There are about 327,000 to 350,000 alumni with good addresses. We have roughly 36 to 37 percent of those," he said. "It is the second highest percentage of alumni membership in the country, behind the Naval Academy who has around 98 percent."

When something happens on campus, like a riot, the association usually gets letters from their members expressing unhappiness.

"Those things don't really affect membership, but it does affect a sense of pride," Heinlen said. "People join out of a sense of loyalty and a sense of what they did when they were here. When something like that happens, people don't unjoin. They are more stable than that."

Heinlen will turn 66 in November and said he is in no rush to retire.

"It just makes sense to leave while on top," he said with pride. "My wife always told me to leave the audience wanting more. I wanted to leave when things were good, not bad. And with a national championship under our belt, it can't get much better than that."

For over 28 years, he has been consulting for other alumni associations, and plans on continuing.

"They will ask me to come in and look at the organization to see how it's doing; what's right, what's not," he said. "I will also try to be available to our university if they need me."

For now he plans on reconnecting with his family and living in his soon-to-be remodeled home in southern Delaware County.

"I have three daughters: a vet, a poet and a radiologist," he said. "My wife and I also just became grandparents for the first time. That's pretty exciting."

But no matter what he chooses to do, he will be missed by many at the university, in a variety of capacities.

Dr. Bob Moser, vice president of University Outreach and Agricultural Affairs, said he has known Dan for about 15 years, and in that time he has seen him as a tremendous leader for the Alumni Association.

the option to repeal the sales tax increase in favor of revenue from video slot machines in place at horsetracks.

Randy Gardner said his fellow senators would rather pass a resolution that would allow voters to decide the fate of slot machines in the Nov. 4 election — without its tie to a sales tax and with its proceeds going to university scholarships for high school seniors.

"We wanted to decouple the issue because the governor said he would veto any slot machine measure that reached his desk," said Gardner, the Republican from Bowling Green. "The scholarships would go to high-school seniors maintaining a 3.0 GPA."

Ranking minority member Sen. Eric Fingerhut agrees with Gardner.

"The scholarship program sends a strong message that we are prioritizing higher education," said Fingerhut (D-Shaker Heights). "It shows that despite the poor economy, we are making some progress with higher education."

Another wrinkle to the budget saga occurred Tuesday night, when the state Budget Director Thomas Johnson announced a projected shortfall of $200 million in the current budget. The governor is obligated by Ohio's Constitution to balance the budget before the end of the fiscal year (July 1). This marks the fourth time in two years that the office has uncovered a shortfall. In January, Taft announced a deficit of $720 million due to mis-projections and overspending.

The governor admits he is concerned about the shortfall, but contends it is still early in the game.

"The budget process is at second base right now. We still have a little ways to go," Holubec said.

The House will vote on the Senate's bill Tuesday.

Faculty may not receive raise

By Jessica Herzfeld
Lantern staff writer

With school resuming in 24 days, faculty might not know what their salaries will be. The decision on faculty raises remains in the hands of legislators, who are in the process of higher education reforms.

House Bill 95, the budget bill, was passed in the Senate yesterday, and is waiting to be reviewed by the House of Representatives.

"If the bill is passed in the house there will be no money for anything," said Charlie Wilson, chairman of Faculty Compensation and Benefits Committee.

If faculty do receive raises, they will likely be small.

"If the House budget were to be enacted, there would be virtually no money available for faculty salary increases," said Susan Fisher, University Senate secretary.

Even if raises are approved, the expected amount will not be enough to make salaries comparable to other benchmark schools.

Added costs of increased health care premiums and parking rates must also be factored into the picture.

"Parking rates go up to cover increased costs and to help fund building new parking," said Beth Kelley, associate director of Transportation and Parking.

The added costs come out of the net pay faculty take home.

"The 1 percent would be eroded, and it would be no salary increase essentially," Fisher said.

The salary at Ohio State has been on a dramatic decline.

"Among the Association of American Universities, 20 years ago we were 14th among 60 universities. Six years ago we were 32nd, and today we are 46th," Wilson said.

The administration is aware of the problem concerning salaries at OSU.

"At President Holbrook's investiture, she said they are still intending to catch up," Fisher said.

Former OSU president William "Brit" Kirwan had established the Academic Plan, which would bring OSU faculty salaries to the benchmark average within three and four years of fiscal year 2001.

The raise would have to be market base plus 2.4 percent for the next two years in order to reach the benchmark average in the next three fiscal years, Wilson said.

"In the last couple of years it was the central administration who got us into a bind," Wilson said. "To some degree it's been the same actors. There has been more of a commitment since the year of no salary (fiscal year 2001-2002)."

However, Wilson showed faith in the university's effort to change the salary situation.

"The university administration and leadership have been committed to competitive salaries and improving the salary situation in the last two years," he said.

The outstanding problem is lack of financial resources.

"We've had more than 12 years of political leadership at the state level that's been very hostile to education," Wilson said.

A day of peace, love and weed

By Amy McCullough
Lantern staff writer

It's going to be a day of fun, music, education and cannabis.

The 16th annual Ohio Hempfest will take place from noon to 1 a.m. Saturday June 7 on the South Oval.

The Students for Sensible Drug Policy, an group dedicated to educating people on drug-related issues, is organizing the event.

"It's a great time for students to educate themselves, take a stance on the issues and basically get the facts," said Eric Rudd, a senior in Japanese.

Jayne Richards, a junior in social work at Columbus State Community College, said SSDP is trying to provide more information about marijuana and the drug war so other students can form their own opinions.

"Hempfest is just a community festival. SSDP wants to get the information out there about marijuana and the drug war. We want education instead of incarceration, so we want people to get out there and inform themselves," Richards said.

The festival will host three stages with a diverse lineup of music, food vendors and crafts.

Speakers will also talk in between bands, offering yet another viewpoint for the audience.

The theme for this year's Hempfest is "Hempfest: A higher peace in this time of war."

Speaking on the issues will be such experts as Dan Salano and Loretta Nall.

Salano, a retired police officer from Detroit, will speak about how the drug war is a problem in some police departments because it keeps the officers from focusing on other issues.

Nall, the founder of the Marijuana Party, is working on creating a political party based around the cannabis issue — creating a voting block which will help push the issue more into the political arena, said Sean Luse, a senior in political science.

"We do have a lot better speaker lineup, more experts in the drug war coming from around the Midwest to speak. It's always interesting to hear a police officer say we need to legalize drugs," Luse said.

Although there were about 5,000 people at last year's festivities, SSDP is hoping for an even larger turnout this year.

"It's been an ongoing tradition at Ohio State and it's been getting a lot larger the last couple of years. We've put a lot into it, a lot more organizing and more promotions, so the festival has been growing rapidly and we expect a record turnout this year," Luse said.

"It's not going to be a whole lot different (from previous years), just bigger. There are going to be more vendors, more bands, more people, more fun," he said.

Cramped quarters

Underclassmen need dorm space

Ohio State has had a serious housing problem over the past few years: There is not enough room in the residence halls to house all the incoming freshmen and everyone else who wants to live on campus.

The university has tried its best to make more room for everyone. First, more residence halls are being built. OSU is also buying more property in the off-campus area to create a little more space — however, most of these residences will be directed at graduate students when the crowding problem revolves around undergraduates.

Also, every single space in the residence halls that is not a bathroom is being converted into a boarding room. Areas used for studying are now being filled with beds. This used to be a major problem because, instead of actually making these rooms suitable to live in, the university just threw a bed into an empty room. As a result, these rooms originally did not have locks, and some thievery ensued.

That problem is being fixed now because the university is actually turning these converted study rooms into full-fledged boarding rooms. However, there is still going to be a lack of housing for the incoming OSU students because there will always be returning students who decide to stay in the residence halls.

To fix this problem, OSU should no longer give priority to returning students. Instead, priority should be given to students in reverse order to the number of credit hours they have.

A large portion of the problem is that many upper-level students are refusing to move out of the residences halls. By staying in OSU housing for three, four or even five years, these students are taking up the space that could be used for incoming freshmen and their studying needs. It is time for OSU to force the older students to go out and live on their own to make room for all the younger students.

Students living in the residence halls get their renewal early in winter quarter — forcing them to decide nearly nine months ahead of time where they will live next year. The university does this to find out how much room they will have for the incoming freshmen. This policy should be switched around.

After they decide they are coming to OSU, the incoming freshmen should have to fill out their housing forms. By the start of summer quarter, the university should know how much space it has to give to the remaining students who still want to live in the dorms.

After the incoming freshmen, priority should be given to second-year students. These are returning students with the least maturity and probably should still be given the protection of the university. After that, instead of awarding it to the juniors and seniors — who already have upper-class housing in Neilwood Gables and Drackett Tower — the university should give priority to the students who are in special situations. For example, students whose scholarships award them free university housing or those who need to live in the residence halls for a quarter or two because of an internship.

The crowding problem in the university has reached a critical level. There are so many people living in the West Campus towers that pretty soon people are going to be living on top of each other. Many upperclassmen are clogging the pipes by refusing to go out and live on their own. Priority in housing should be given to those students who are actually in need of it instead of those who use the residence halls as a security blanket to the real world.

Sinning priests

Marriage could end sexual abuses

It seems like in every newscast, in every newspaper, there's a report of some new development in the Catholic priest sex scandal. Just this week, Bishop Thomas J. O'Brien of the diocese of Phoenix admitted to covering up sexual abuse of children by priests in his diocese, allowing them to continue working with children even after he discovered the abuse.

O'Brien admitted to the cover-up to avoid prosecution for obstruction of justice. A source close to the grand jury investigation of O'Brien told The Washington Post the bishop allegedly forced out of the church a priest who refused to persuade a Catholic family not to go to the police with a report of molestation.

This problem is not going to just go away, regardless of whether higher-ups in the church disclose it or not. The time has come for the church to make a change.

The public has been proposing this solution almost since the scandal first came to light, and the church should listen: Priests should be allowed to marry.

The church has long held out against allowing the clergy to marry, the reason being that priests are supposed to be wedded to God. But priests are only human. Despite their calling to serve God, they still have human urges and instincts — and sex is one of the most basic of human instincts. If that instinct is not fulfilled through a loving, healthy and consensual relationship such as marriage, then it may well turn to gratification through some twisted means, as in the abuse of children. Allowing priests to marry could help to solve this problem — or at least be a start — and there are few logical arguments against it.

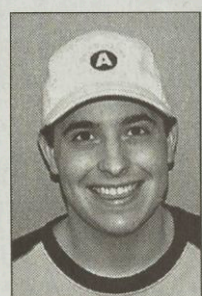

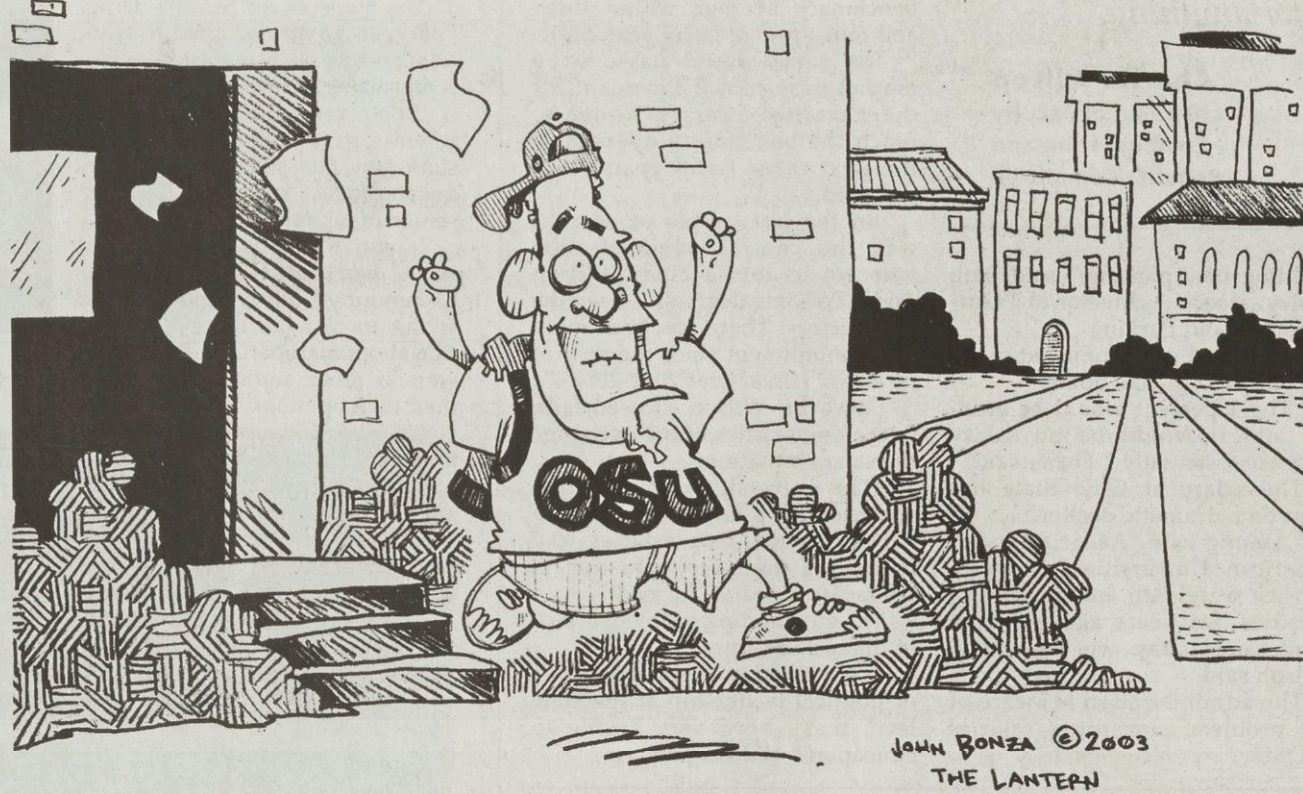

To suggest a priest is too holy to marry not only belies the current scandal but also implies that marriage is somehow unholy. In fact, several Bible verses praise marriage as the most sacred of institutions. And to argue that a clergyman has no time for a family and a parish is an injustice to the thousands of clergy of other religions who manage to juggle both. Both roles rely on love for family members or parishioners, and love is not something which needs to be divided into portions. There should be enough to go around.

The church has changed long-standing traditions before — the Second Vatican Council, for example, rescinded the Catholic ban on eating meat on Fridays and allowed priests to say mass in languages other than Latin. Today, most Catholics probably could not imagine having to learn another language to fully comprehend their mass, but it was the law only a little more than 50 years ago.

The law of celibacy for priests has outlived any usefulness it may have once had. The Catholic church should overturn it before any more young lives are ruined because of this outmoded tradition.

SCHOOL'S OUT TILL SUMMER!

KYLE WOODLEY

is The Lantern opinion editor and wants to know what you thought of the Opinion page this year. He can be reached for comment at woodley.8@osu.edu.

Great voices, news mark year

As the opinion editor of The Lantern for the past three quarters, I feel I am privy to one last privilege, which is to say, a spot on the last edition of my tenure. However, while I have usually used column space to praise eccentric judges and promote the death penalty, I wanted to move away from the political arena this time, and instead spout a few final thank-yous, reflections and farewells.

I'll keep the mushiness to a minimum.

First, I hope you realize the year you have all experienced, which was laden with many historical firsts and accomplishments. The Ohio State football team won its first national championship since 1968, and did so under a coach who has the potential to match Woody Hayes not only in his ability to achieve, but his ability to be loved. We have rung in the era of OSU's first female president, Karen A. Holbrook. We silenced the national media when, in expectations of spring riots, we behaved like the young adults we're purported to be (while still managing to have a ridiculous amount of non news-worthy drinking fun). The OSU baseball team, participating in a college sport constantly overshadowed by the money-makers, is headed to the super regionals of the NCAA Tournament.

While every year has its share of moments and memories, I have a feeling there are few to come which will match this academic year's excitement level.

In the midst of all this and more, there was news: news at OSU, and news from abroad. As this news filtered in — as bills were passed, war was waged and human rights were compromised — people started caring. And whereas the reporters wrote the stories, everyone — from The Lantern staff to the readers — formed and wrote opinions, giving my life some purpose for a few months. For this, I have a great deal of gratitude and feel credit and thanks should be given where it's due.

First and foremost, I want to thank the readers for another successful year. Whether you picked up a copy of The Lantern from a newsbox, your residence hall, off the Internet or even off the ground at the bus stop, you made yourself a part of the wide readership we pride ourselves upon. Specifically, thanks to the readers who were moved — negatively or positively — enough to take time to let their voice be heard and wrote a letter or e-mail to the editor, or even those who wrote the columnists themselves to perpetuate an argument. Most of these letters proved OSU has an informed and opinionated population.

The rest of the letters were, hilarious and often shared around the newsroom.

In the same respect, I want to thank The Lantern columnists for their contribution to the integrity of the paper, reader interest and reader outrage. While the responses collected throughout the year prove (if nothing else) that a vast number of readers disagree with the columnists, each columnist was often able to provide insightful, controversial and often humorous points of view on a broad range of topics.

While not evoking many responses, our cartoonist, John Bonza, decorated The Lantern with hyperbolic football players and celebrity caricatures, as well as satires of both politics and life which were consistently concise and comical. He has delivered in one drawing and 10 words what would take most hundreds of words to say.

Many thanks are due the members of the editorial board, who had to endure hours of arguing and debate to produce each week's collective Lantern opinions. They too are responsible for both the volume and veracity of reader response.

All in all, thanks are owed to anyone who decided to speak up and not practice political apathy, anyone who felt a story was written from the wrong angle or even anyone who saw that "Patterson" should actually be "Patterson." It is both your collective and individual voices which enable the Opinion section of this and any paper to be the idealistic forum of thought that it should be.

While I say good-bye to the Opinion section, I hope and know most readers will not be. If you've been displeased with the way the page has been run — say something. If you believe the Opinion page has satisfied your thirst for ideas and debate — say something. We many not always respond, but trust me — we're listening.

American Dream is not reality

A famous sonnet at the Statue of Liberty reads, "Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free."

This line has often been used to describe the openness of the United States to immigrants. However, in our ever-changing age, these words no longer hold the same meaning as they used to, and for the most part this may not be a bad thing.

Recent history has shown the Immigration and Naturalization Service has a hard time keeping itself up on all immigrants and their visas. It does not help that many people sneak into the country illegally across both the Canadian and Mexican borders, though primarily it's the latter.

Maybe it should be perceived as some sort of compliment that so many people want to come here to live the great American Dream. But it seems as though it has turned into the American Curse.

While immigration has always been touted as a way to increase diversity, the immigration numbers today show a trend that is dominated by a single nationality. From 1965 to 2000, nearly 4.3 million immigrants have come from Mexico. That is three times larger than the next immigration group, which consists of 1.4 million from the Philippines.

To put the influx of immigrations from Mexico into perspective, during the height of immigration (from 1880 to 1930) the largest group of immigrants was Italian, at nearly 4.6 million strong. If Mexican immigration holds at the rate of the past 35-plus years, then they will come in at around 6.1 million immigrants.

Traditionally, most immigrants have come to the United States with very little money and often become the urban lower classes. Poor neighborhoods in New York once dominated by Italian and Irish immigrants are now often dominated by Hispanics and Asians, together making up the majority of immigrants today. In a country that has been suffering with poverty problems for decades, is it wise to accept in so many from other countries, when the majority of these individuals will add to our lower classes?

We also have many concerns with security concerning immigrants. Even though we have been without a major attack in a little over a year and a half, there are many countries — particularly in the Middle East — where the view of the United States is not a good one.

Recently, people have started to complain about how we, as a nation, are treating some immigrants. Many believe we are unrightfully detaining such people and treating them as guilty until proven innocent, rather than the traditional "innocent until proven guilty" method. However, who said that these non-citizen immigrants should benefit from the same laws as everyone born in America or naturalized American citizens?

The fact is their treatment is not as harsh as it could be, and in a nation where terrorism is a new threat perceived to be more dangerous than war, security should come first. After all, we are the same nation that during the second World War interned not only the Japanese resident aliens but also the citizens.

Benjamin Franklin said, "Those who can give up essential liberty for to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety." His words speak very true and there is no reason that U.S. citizens should have to give up any more "liberties" that they may have lost since Sept. 11.

Immigrants coming to the United States often left places where they had none of the liberties they would get here. If they truly believe the price of being detained is too high for their entry into the United States, perhaps they should turn around and go back home.

We have been an open country since our inception, but space is running out and there may still be threats to our nation and our individual security. As times change, immigrants should expect conditions to change. Our rights belong only to our citizens.

Gangs' appeal not limited to rap

A problem such as gang violence can in no way be discussed with a binary discourse. This is why R.H. Aly's opinion article "Popular rap encourages gangs" disappoints us so much. It's illogical to say those individuals that encounter the option of entering a gang find themselves with two simple options, comparing them to "night and day." We don't live in a black-and-white world; most of the problems within our society exist in a very gray realm.

Kids who join gangs join them for many reasons, all of them unfortunate. Many join these gangs in search of a type of familial bond, one that is absent because their parents are usually missing from home; sometimes they are forced to work two to three jobs at a time just to get by, or locked in prison, or simply gone, even dead. Usually these parents are caught somewhere in the same cycle that is hungry to claim their children.

Gang violence is a definite problem in our country. But it didn't start with or even become more glamorized by rap music or gangsta' rap. Gang violence has been occurring in this country since the days of Al Capone and even before that. It's become almost a given in America that where there is poverty and a lack of opportunity or upward mobility, there will be groups of people organized with the goal of generating an economic gain, often times illegally.

Artists who perform gangsta' rap should be seen as providing the outside world a window into these peoples' lives. Yes, this lifestyle is glamorized in gangsta' rap, but "The Sopranos" and "Gangs of New York" could also be said to be guilty of this offense. These are not the only examples; the major motion pictures "Scarface" and "The Godfather" predate gangsta' rap by nearly ten years. There are many more.

Rap music is a response to a whole host of problems: gun violence, poverty, hard-core drug addiction and illegal big money capitalism in the lower and lower-middle class communities, to name a few. People born of privilege should take the message of rappers and gangsta' rappers as an opportunity to understand a world previously unbeknownst to them.

Hopefully, if more of America can come to a better understanding of the context surrounding an individual's decision to join or not to join a gang, we can start to provide those individuals encountering this question with a multitude of positive legitimate alternatives.

Buckeyes in search of recognition

Baseball team could make a name for itself by winning super regional

By Matt Duval
Lantern sports editor

For a number of years, Ohio State baseball manager Bob Todd has been trying to get more respect for northern college baseball.

Historically, teams from states like Florida and Texas have dominated the College World Series landscape.

Starting tomorrow, northern baseball will get recognition when the Buckeyes battle Southwest Missouri State for the right to move on to the 2003 College World Series in Omaha. The best-of-three series starts tomorrow at 8:05 p.m., and Sunday's game starts 6:05 p.m. If a winner-take-all matchup is needed Monday, that game will start at 1:05 p.m. Both of the weekend's games will be broadcast on ESPN2, while Monday's would be on ESPN.

"The opportunity to have a super regional here in the north, especially Ohio State, I think is a feather in our cap," Todd said.

OSU got its fill of southern baseball last weekend at the Auburn Regional. The Buckeyes earned a berth in their first super regional since 1999 by beating traditional powerhouses Clemson and Auburn.

"There's a lot of propaganda down there — saying we are a northern school and we are inferior to the southern schools," OSU pitcher Kyle Brown said. "We went down there and showed them we can play baseball, and hopefully this will set a precedent giving us more respect."

But standing in the way of the Buckeyes and the ultimate respect of going to Omaha is the Bears, who won the Lincoln Regional as a No. 3 seed. Southwest Missouri State swept host Nebraska in the final two games of the regional.

On name recognition alone, the Bears don't measure up to the Clemsons and Auburns of the college baseball world. However, the Buckeyes know that this weekend's opponent could be its toughest to date.

"Fans have a tendency to equate baseball programs with football programs," Todd said. "That certainly is not the case. I know Southwest Missouri State plays outstanding baseball."

OSU knows firsthand just how tough the Bears can be. Earlier this season in the Tournament of Champions Cardinal Classic in Beaumont, Texas, Southwest Missouri State pounded the Buckeyes in an 18-3 win, thanks in large part to a 10-run ninth inning.

"We played them early in the year and got spanked pretty good,"

Place your bets on Cide tomorrow

One thing I have tried to do each week is hit as many different sports as possible. That is why this week's column will not focus on the Sammy Sosa scandal or the NBA Finals — everyone knows ESPN has already covered those stories enough for me to wonder if there is even anything else going on this week.

Lucky for me, I just happened to remember there is sweet little $5 million prize on the line Saturday for a couple of guys in New York. This lottery-like fortune can only be won by one group of lucky entrants, and can only be won once a year. This lottery or race is known as the Triple Crown.

Tomorrow, Funny Cide attempts to become a part of an exclusive club that includes 11 horses to win all three legs of the Triple Crown. The races — the Kentucky Derby, the Preakness and the Belmont — have a storied tradition that dates back to the late 1800s.

Sir Barton, Gallant Fox, Omaha, War Admiral, Whirlaway, Count Fleet, Assault, Citation, Secretariat, Seattle Slew and Affirmed — not just words the president would have trouble pronouncing — are myths, legends, and heroes of a sport steep in tradition.

The skeptics have always questioned these legends, the very athletics of horse racing.

How can horses be athletes?

Before answering the question, I recommend popping in the footage of the 1973 Belmont in which Secretariat won by an outstanding 31 lengths, running a mile and half in a record 2:34. Watching the race with goose bumps, I always wonder if it would have made more sense for the field to get a 30 second head start on the amazing animal.

If you are still not convinced, then check out the footage of Affirmed and Alydar's legendary three races in the spring of 1978 that captured the heart of the nation. Affirmed went on to barely edge out Alydar three consecutive times, but the races were so close that Alydar's status and legend were enhanced because of the bitterly close defeats.

Funny Cide has a chance to make his own legend and if history has any sense of irony, then Cide will be the winner tomorrow.

The longest gap between any Triple Crown winner has been the 25 years that occurred between Citation's 1948 crown and Secretariat's 1973 crown. This year marks the 25 years since the last Triple Crown winner, Affirmed, in 1978.

Cide, a New York bred horse, will return to an excited home crowd to try and win the biggest race of its 3-year-old life and succeed where others have failed.

The list of failures is long as five of the last seven years a horse has entered Belmont Park with the Derby and Preakness already won including Silver Charm, Real Quiet, Charismatic and War Emblem.

But Funny Cide is the first gelding to win the first two legs, and it might be what the horse doesn't have that separates Cide from the rest. In case you aren't in on the joke, a gelding is a male horse that has had its manhood removed for medical reasons.

Empire Maker will provide the toughest competition for Funny Cide as he was the overwhelming favorite at the Derby and finished a close second. Empire Maker, who beat Cide easily earlier in the year at the Wood Memorial, will have the benefits of five week's rest to face the long track at Belmont.

With only six horses in the field including Scrimshaw, Ten Most Wanted, the Dynever, and long-shot selection Supervisor there should be clear trips for both Funny Cide and Empire Maker to make a run at the Belmont.

But I can't help thinking it's going to be Funny Cide at the line tomorrow. I think the stars are aligned for something magical to happen. It's the fastest three minutes in sports, it's for the Triple Crown and $5 million, it's a chance to watch to history, it's a horse without ... err ... fear.

There is no more important ride for Funny Cide.

Andy Schwartz is a senior in journalism who believes the aerodynamic form of Funny Cide can't hurt his chances. He can be reached for comment at schwartz.225@osu.edu.

Columbus Crew goalie Jon Busch has been one of the reasons that the Crew are 3-3-3 this season. Busch will have his work cut out for him when four members of the Crew leave for the U.S. National Team.

Crew loses four players to U.S. team

By Mike Price
Lantern sports writer

Posted up on a wall inside the Columbus Crew's athletic training room is a sign that lists this season's results. Above the schedule it reads, "2003 Crew Works — A Finely Tuned Machine."

Yet with the recent national team call-ups, lineup changes and injuries, the machine might soon be clanking and sputtering along for the next month or so.

On May 30, three Crew players — defender Frankie Hejduk, midfielder Kyle Martino and forward Jeff Cunningham — were selected by U.S. national team coach Bruce Arena to play on the 23-man squad in the 2003 FIFA Confederations Cup. Columbus midfielder Duncan Oughton is also playing in the Cup for the New Zealand national team and will be a definite no-show for tomorrow's game with the San Jose Earthquakes (4-1-2).

"It's going to be tough, anytime you lose players like Cunningham, Martino, Hejduk and Oughton," said midfielder Brian Maisonneuve. "But we have a deep and very talented team."

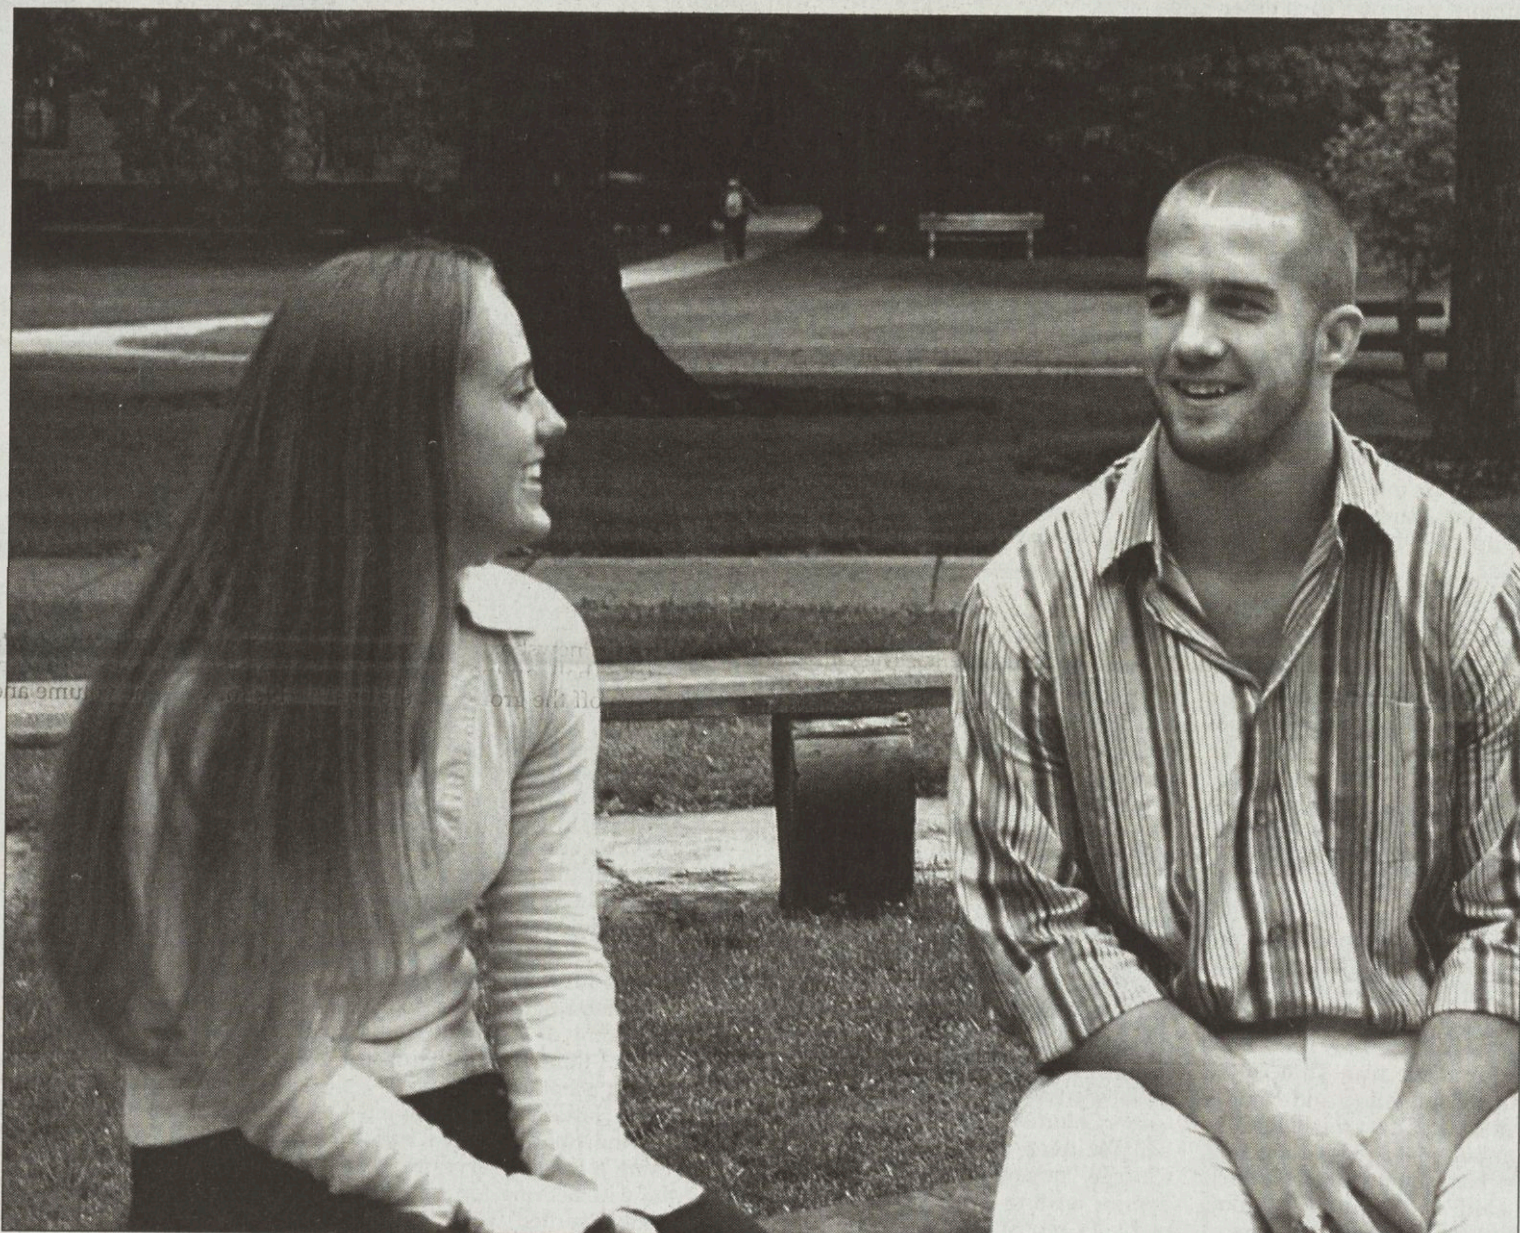

Due to his wife, Dina, giving birth to a girl this past week, Crew forward Brian McBride was not chosen to play on the U.S. team.

The Cup is in France and runs from June 18-29, meaning all four players could miss up to four Crew games.

"This is where you see if they (coaches and player personnel) have gotten good guys, good depth," said defender Chad McCarty. "Now it's an opportunity for guys who haven't been playing much to step in and show them why they have a contract."

There is a good possibility that two out of the three U.S. call-ups will be back for tomorrow's match. Cunningham and Hejduk may be the ones returning, but it won't be Meghan and Tommy Rowlands enjoy spending time together, even when it is just a few minutes before class.

Rowlands duo has mutual admiration

By Nolan Saunders
Lantern sports writer

Tommy and Meghan Rowlands recall a family vacation to the beach when they were teenagers.

"Meghan hit her growth spurt before I did," said Tommy Rowlands, who is the oldest by two years. "So there was a time when I was only 10 or 15 pounds bigger than her. She always said she could beat me in a foot race."

"We had dad at the end line," Meghan Rowlands said.

The race commenced with the pair sprinting across the sand in their bathing suits.

"I nudged her out," Tommy Rowlands said.

"Yeah he beat me at the very end," Meghan Rowlands admitted. "I had him beat until like 15 yards."

Meghan and Tommy Rowlands have a relationship just like any other brother and sister at Ohio State, except these two both play varsity sports. Tommy Rowlands is a wrestler for the Buckeyes and the 2002 NCAA national heavyweight champion. Meghan Rowlands has found her niche at OSU on the softball diamond as an outfielder.

"Anything where the slightest bit of competition was involved Meghan and I would turn it into a real big ordeal, especially when we were younger," Tommy Rowlands said. "Now that we realize the consequences that can come out of us getting into a competitive atmosphere, we try to stay away from it as much as we can."

The Rowlands' father, Tom, remembers another incident where the two were a little competitive.

At Bishop Ready High School, where Meghan and Tommy Rowlands attended high school, outstanding student athletes get their pictures hung on the wall. As a two-time state champion, Tommy Rowlands had his picture hung twice on the wall.

Her junior year, Meghan Rowlands was named to the All-Ohio softball team and got her portrait hung.

"Tommy said, 'You still got one more to go,'" Tom Rowlands said.

"Meghan's and my relationship, I think, is more based on talking to each other about simple random things that really don't mean much," Tommy Rowlands said. "We're not always talking about wrestling or softball; it's such an everyday activity for us that it's nice hang out and not talk about it."

Meghan Rowlands agreed with her brother that spending time together away from sports helps in their relationship.

"Our relationship goes just like every other brother-sister relationship. There's things more important things than sports, but it's awesome to have that connection also," Meghan Rowlands said.

Tommy said having a sibling at the same school that's a dedicated athlete to talk to is very comforting.

"Our family is really tight knit and close, and having that support in college has been a really big advantage to me," Tommy Rowlands said.

But while her brother has had more individual success as a Buckeye, Meghan Rowlands

Serena slammed by Belgian and crowd

By Steven Wine

PARIS — Serena Williams' Grand Slam reign is over.

With fans cheering her mistakes, Williams fell short in her bid for a fifth consecutive major title yesterday, losing to Justine Henin-Hardenne 6-2, 4-6, 7-5 in a riveting French Open semifinal.

Williams had won 33 matches in a row at Grand Slam events, a streak that began last year at Roland Garros and was the sixth longest in the Open era.

Williams became tearful after the match when discussing the hostile crowd.

"I'm not used to crying," she said, wiping away tears. "It's a little difficult. All my life I've had to fight. It's just another fight I'm going to have to learn how to win, that's all. I'm just going to have to keep smiling."

Henin-Hardenne rallied from a 4-2 deficit in the final set and advanced to the first all-Belgian Grand Slam final.

"I have beaten the strongest player in the world," Henin-Hardenne said. "To do it this way, with this atmosphere, clearly it's the most beautiful thing I've had in my career."

Tomorrow she'll play Kim Clijsters, who defeated Nadia Petrova 7-5, 6-1 in the other semifinal.

It will be the first Grand Slam final since the 2002 Australian Open featuring someone other than the Williams sisters.

Rooting for Henin-Hardenne from the start, center-court fans cheered even when Williams missed several serves. That was in the seventh game of the final set, when the crowd jeered Williams for questioning two close calls that ultimately went in her favor.

Betting pool could bring fall of coach

SEATTLE (AP) — Washington football coach Rick Neuheisel said he took part in a college basketball gambling pool the past two years, and the NCAA is investigating, The Seattle Times reported yesterday.

Two NCAA investigators and one from the Pac-10 Conference questioned Neuheisel on Wednesday after receiving a tip that he put up $5,000 and won about $20,000 by picking Maryland in the 2002 tournament, the newspaper reported.

NCAA officials would not discuss the investigation.

The NCAA manual says coaches, staff members and athletes may not knowingly "solicit or accept a bet on any intercollegiate competition for any item (e.g., cash, shirt, dinner) that has tangible value."

"I never in my wildest dreams imagined I was doing anything to jeopardize my employment,"

NEUHEISEL

Neuheisel told the Times after meeting with investigators. "I don't think I would ever put myself in that situation knowingly, but I'm hopeful I can be the coach at Washington. I'd certainly like to be."

Washington athletic director Barbara Hedges said she learned of Neuheisel's involvement in the betting pool Wednesday.

"Gambling is a serious violation of NCAA rules," Hedges said. "You can't minimize this. The university will take this very seriously."

The kind of pool Neuheisel described is not against state law unless a bookmaker is involved, but NCAA rules forbid any form of gambling on college sports by athletes and coaching staff.

Institutions can be sanctioned in such cases if violations were known to college officials or if the NCAA finds they should have known.

Neuheisel said he was part of a four-member "team" that had the overall winner in both years he participated in what he called a pizza-and-beer gathering. Neuheisel said his group split its winnings but would not discuss dollar amounts.

Under the format, participants bid on each team and the highest bid gets that team in the tournament.

"I was there really because most of these people were buddies of mine from my neighborhood," Neuheisel was quoted as saying. "Their kids went to the same school as my kids and I was an invitee ... Obviously, it's become a point of contention, but I never imagined that I was doing anything wrong because we weren't dealing with bookies or lines or anything like that."

"We were just friends, like we were betting on golf holes. It seemed pretty harmless," he told the Times.

NCAA measures to combat gambling include preseason talks by officials to athletes, locker room posters and efforts to deny credentials to cover major NCAA events to newspapers that publish point spreads.

Many college athletic departments ban even ordinary, small-change tournament brackets that are commonly filled out in offices nationwide during "March Madness."

"It's clear that gambling is prohibited on any kind of college sports regardless of what the circumstances are," Hedges said. "I do believe Rick should have understood the situation."

The Times reported that the NCAA investigators also questioned Neuheisel about two potential minor violations.

The most recent was in February, when he denied he had been interviewed for the San Francisco 49ers' coaching vacancy, then admitted he had in fact been interviewed.

Yesterday was the deadline for the Huskies to report to the NCAA that Neuheisel has fulfilled all compliance requirements concerning 50 minor violations that were committed while he coached at Colorado from 1995-98.

As the last requirement on the list, Neuheisel attended a regular NCAA compliance seminar Wednesday with athletic department officials from many schools.

Neuheisel has a 33-15 record in four seasons with the Huskies. Under a six-year contract extension he signed in September, he makes $1.2 million a year, and a five-year option could keep him at Washington until 2013.

Todd said. "They are going to come in here with a good ballclub."

Despite the earlier setback, the Buckeyes know that both teams have changed for the better since that meeting on March 2.

"We are a totally different team now than we were last time we played them," OSU pitcher Greg Prenger said. "We're not really worried about our opponent; we're more worried about us and have to play the best baseball we can play."

However, the Bears are very experienced and have loads of talent. Leading the way is senior right-hand pitcher Brad Ziegler. Ziegler was named Missouri Valley Conference Pitcher of the Year and is a two-time first team all-MVC selection. This season, Ziegler finished 9-1 with 4.00 ERA, but was 6-0 in his seven conference starts.

Another Bear pitcher that has emerged on the scene late is 6-foot-5

Bob Zimmerman. He led SW Missouri State to the this weekend's super regional with nine-inning shutout of the Cornhuskers, the first of his career.

"Zimmerman is somebody that I coached in 2001 on the U.S. National Team," Todd said. "He is outstanding. He is very capable of beating anybody in the country."

On offense, the Bears look to a number of players, most notably outfielder Dant'e Brinkley. Before the MVC Tournament, Brinkley hit .344 with 16 doubles and three triples. He scored 54 times and drove in 33.

SW Missouri State's main RBI man is Greg Mathis. He hit .325 before the conference tournament and drove in 43 runs.

"They have a couple of guys who can really swing the bat," OSU pitcher Nate Smith said. "We just have to make sure not to let them get to us."

said living in his shadow has never been discouraging. In fact, she said it is something that drives her.

"I've said many times he's my biggest role model; he always has been," Meghan Rowlands said. "I think he's a great person to look up to and be like. In many ways I aspire to have his work ethic and be the type of athlete and person he is."

Tommy Rowlands feels the same way about his sister. He said he often feels like a role model to both Meghan and his two other sisters: Katie, who is 17, and Annie, who is 14.

"I always wanted to be the person that my sisters looked up to," he said. "More and more every day I'm starting figure out that I'm looking up to them. Meghan is definitely a sign of that. When she got to the age where she was taking care of things on her own, I realized I shouldn't have been trying to be a role model. I should have been looking to her as an example because of how hard she works and her persistence. When she wants something it's a pretty scary thing because she's going to get it done."

The support they give each other isn't the only support they cherish.

"We've also got four other really close family members just a 20 minute drive away. Their support, just them being there has been equally as important to me as Meghan has," Tommy Rowlands said.

Meghan Rowlands was also quick to point out her parents' dedication to their family.

"The sacrifices that our parents have made, like driving across the country. Every single weekend there's probably three different places in the Midwest that all of us are spread out to," Meghan Rowlands said. "I just think it's amazing the things my parents have done growing up to help us accomplish the goals that we've set for ourselves."

Meghan Rowlands said her father was always comparing life to sports.

"I think (sports) is a small laboratory for life," Tom Rowlands said. "You set goals and learn to deal with them."

Those lessons have apparently stuck with both Tommy and Meghan Rowlands.

"When you get the end of the road and you look back, it's not the accomplishments that you remember, it's the journey," Tommy Rowlands said. "I think that that's the message that my parents were trying to get across to us. It's really not about the success stories, it's what you learn from point A to point B that matters."

"As I've grown up, I've realized it was more about what we got out of athletics and how we can apply that to our everyday lives," he said.

Williams became so rattled by the rough treatment that she lost four consecutive points and her serve, leaving her with a shaky 4-3 lead.

Her mother and coach, Oracene Price, criticized the fans for a "lack of class and total ignorance," she said. "Or they just don't know tennis and the etiquette of tennis."

Henin-Hardenne said she was grateful for the fan support but added, "It's true that sometimes it was a little bit too much."

Williams said she doubted recent tensions between France and United States were a factor in the fans' mood.

"I don't think being American right now had anything to do with it," she said. "I just think sometimes you want the underdog to win."

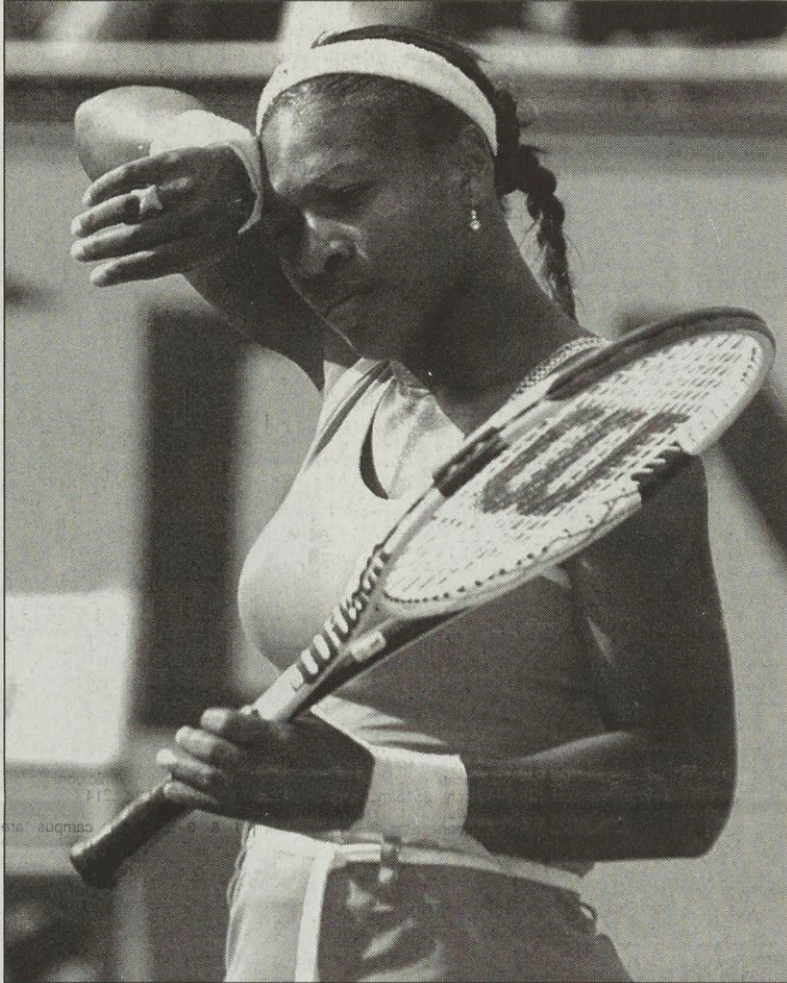

When Williams hit an errant return on match point, she walked around the net and brusquely shook Henin-Hardenne's hand as the crowd booed her. There were more jeers when she headed for the exit.

When asked about the way she shook hands with Henin-Hardenne, Williams said she was miffed at her opponent regarding one of the disputes with the chair umpire.

Williams hit an errant serve as Henin-Hardenne appeared to ask for time. But the umpire didn't see Henin-Hardenne make the request, and she denied doing it, so the serve stood.

"I was a little disappointed with her," Williams said. "It wasn't the turning point of the match, obviously, but I think to start lying and fabricating is not fair."

Henin-Hardenne broke for a 5-4 lead in the final set, then had to overcome a case of nerves to close out the win. Serving for the match, she double-faulted twice and misplayed two groundstrokes to lose the game at love.

Top seed Serena Williams, of the United States, wipes her face as she plays against Belgium's Justine Henin-Hardenne during their semifinal match of the French Open tennis tournament at Roland Garros stadium in Paris yesterday.

"I panicked a little," Henin-Hardenne said.

She regrouped in the next game, and consecutive backhand errors by Williams gave Henin-Hardenne another lead, 6-5. This time she served it out.

"I was very calm because I had just been in the same situation," she said.

Henin-Hardenne hit a perfect lob and two service winners to reach 40-0, and on match point Williams yanked a backhand return wide.

"She's had her chance so many times," Henin-Hardenne said. "Maybe it's time to give someone else a chance."

On Saturday, Henin-Hardenne and compatriot Clijsters will be bidding for their first Grand Slam title.

known until today.

If Hejduk doesn't return, his replacement in the back might come from left fullback Eric Denton, who was benched last week in favor of Daniel Torres. Center back Brian Dunseth was also taken out and McCarty filled in for him. Given the defensive woes in the past two games, seven goals let up, a shakeup in the back was made by Crew coach Greg Andrulis.

The change resulted in a 1-1 draw with Eastern Conference leading New York/New Jersey MetroStars (5-1-2).

"I thought the back four as a whole communicated pretty good," said McCarty, who had been mending a hamstring tendon pull that occurred April 22 against Ohio State. "Daniel and I hadn't played in awhile, and we kind of gave up a sloppy goal last week."

Martino will most likely be the one still training with the national team because Arena hasn't seen him play as much as the other two. His substitute could be Maisonneuve, who is recovering from a sprained ankle. If he can't go this week, midfielder Ross Paule might slide to the middle for Martino and Dunseth could play on the outside for Paule.

Cunningham should be back, but if he's not, speedster Brian West would play up top with McBride. Youngster Edson Buddle would be a huge lift for the team right now at forward, but he is still treating his hip flexor, which has now been diagnosed as a muscle tear. Three more weeks of rehabilitation and Buddle should be back out on the field.

Columbus (3-3-3) will soon find out if it has quality depth, which Torres said is definitely a good thing. But he also thinks the lineup changes will be a factor in regards to team continuity on the pitch.

"It's not the ideal thing to have guys coming in and out all the time," he said. "You always want to have the same lineup for pretty much the whole season."

If the four national team call-ups weren't enough, McBride (U.S.) and midfielder Freddy Garcia (Guatemala) will be leaving at the beginning of July to play in the CONCACAF Gold Cup right as the others will be returning to the Crew. Both McBride and Garcia are expected to miss all of July and other Columbus players might be called up as well.

The national team call-ups couldn't have come at a worse time for the Crew. Columbus is on a 0-2-1 streak, tied for third in the East with the Chicago Fire and faces Western Conference leading San Jose tomorrow night at Crew Stadium, where it is 1-2-2 at home. After that, the Crew is on the road for the next two games.

Thousands of Ohioans expected to attend Columbus Arts Festival

By Brian Duff
Lantern arts writer

The Columbus Arts Festival set up its tents yesterday morning, commencing its 42nd year.

Running through Sunday evening, the annual event will be held entirely on the east side of the Scioto River this year, due to the city's decision to close the Town Street Bridge. The festival will therefore be held within the Courtyard of Cultural Arts Center on West Main Street. However, festival planners don't foresee this short-notice change affecting patronage of the festival.

"We expect between 550,000 and 600,000 people," festival director Katie Lucas said.

Lucas sees the festival as one of the most important cultural events of the year.

"It brings in over 300 artists from central Ohio, from all 50 states, and also international artists. Columbus is known as one of the best art buying communities that there is, and the festival provides a great opportunity for the public to meet the artist," she said.

Festival rookie Kathy Bernat doesn't know quite what to expect.

"I've been working for about five years now, but this is my first time in any arts festival, but I submitted an application and got accepted, so here I am," she said.

Bernat works in digital photography, shooting studio close-ups of flowers in various stages of life and death. Using a process called "giclee printing," she produces archival digital prints. She rented a booth on the festival grounds and plans to sell her prints throughout the four-day event.

"I have big and small prints — color prints — and the small will be significantly cheaper," Bernat said.

One of the strengths of the festival is the combination of new and old acts, as longtime contributors welcome younger artists into their fold.

Jim Garee, lead of the Dixieland band Buckeye Tailgaters, is in his eighth year with the festival. The band plays a locally popular brand of country music, and opened the fesivities yesterday, taking the stage at 11:30 a.m.

"We are a combination of Dixieland traditional jazz and are especially proficient at OSU football songs," said Garee.

The Tailgaters have proved popular enough to earn a spot as the house band Sunday nights at the Buckeye Hall of Fame Cafe.

For Garee, like Lucas, the Arts Festival is the most important event of the year.

"It is something that shouldn't be missed in Columbus, because of the variety of arts and music," said Garee.

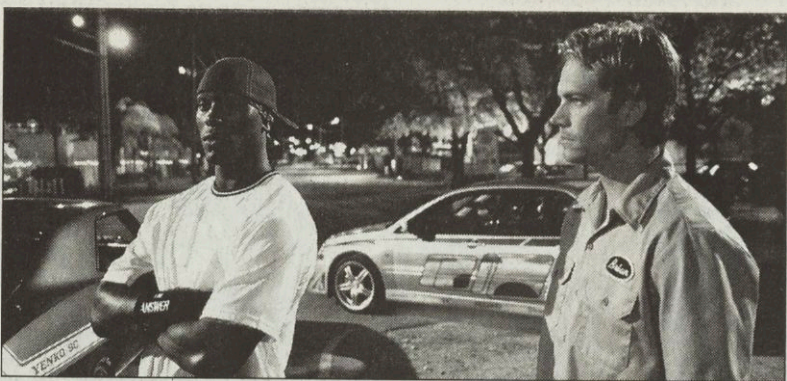

Although this is Lucas' first year as director, she has spent the previous three years as a festival coordinator, giving her a perspective on its evolution.

"It's grown immensely over 42 years. It originally started out as an exhibition of student art and has evolved into a festival with an internationally juried show," she said.

Key to this year's event is an increased role of kids' activities in the festival.

"It is an important for children to create art on their own; kids will have the opportunity to make masks, beads and a lot of other things. We have 11 different kinds of activities for children. The most important thing is that we should teach kids that art is for everyone. There's a special gallery where kids can come in and buy artwork for under five dollars. We're trying to teach how art is important for a lifetime," Lucas said.

By working to include children in the event, organizers hope to create the next generation of artists in the festival.

MOVIE REVIEW

Diesel-less sequel stalls

By Christy Lemire
Associated Press

For all of you who thought a sequel to "The Fast and the Furious" couldn't possibly exist without Vin Diesel — wrong!

The original wasn't about Diesel. It was about the cars.

Even when the dialogue was mind-bogglingly cheesy and the acting popped off the screen like so much over-buttered corn, the street racing sequences were shot and editing thrillingly — and that made the movie a surprise hit of summer 2001.

Two years later, we have "2 Fast 2 Furious" — a needless sequel, and a shameless opportunity to cash in yet again.

Though the action has moved from the street racers and smugglers of Los Angeles to the street racers and smugglers of Miami, you're essentially watching the same movie.

But it proves that Diesel isn't the indispensable engine; in his place as Paul Walker's sidekick is singer-actor-model Tyrese

Gibson, who's just as physically striking, but utterly lacking the sense of self-importance with which Diesel strutted across the scenery.

Gibson has charisma oozing from every pore of his flawlessly sculpted physique, but he doesn't take himself so seriously. He's funny. He's having a good time. And he and Walker, who's turning into a surfer-dude version of Steve McQueen, share a comfortable camaraderie.

More importantly, though, "2 Fast 2 Furious" is also about the cars, and John Singleton knows that. The director of "Boyz n the Hood" and "Baby Boy" — the latter of which was Gibson's film debut in 2001 — takes unabashed glee in polishing every guilty-pleasure nugget to a blindingly high sheen.

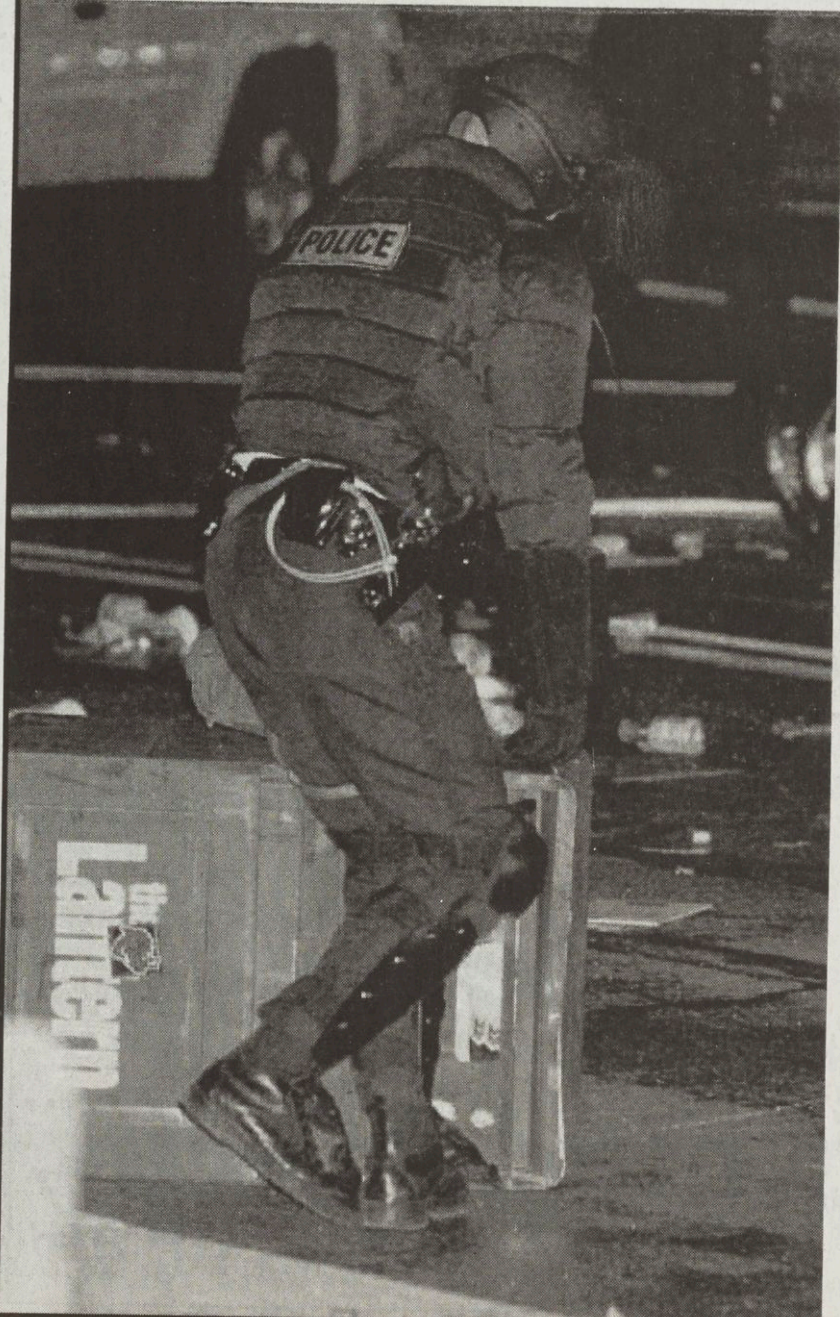

The blindingly beautiful Walker is back as Brian O'Conner, an undercover LAPD detective in the first film who's been stripped of his badge and is racing souped-up street rockets for kicks in Miami.

CAPA dusts off classic American films

Movie series gives students chance to see "Jaws" and "Psycho" on the big screen

By Todd LaPlace
For the Lantern

The lights in the theater lower and the rumblings of the audience hushes to a silence. The projector starts and within minutes the audience is treated to their first encounter with Bruce, a massive great white shark.

No, this isn't "Finding Nemo" — it's "Jaws," the Steven Spielberg classic that made it scary to go to the beach. The picture is one of 22 set to unspool at the Columbus Association for the Performing Arts' yearly Summer Movie Series, taking place at the Ohio Theatre.

Now in its 34th season, the series features a broad range of pictures, some of which are making their series debut. The lineup also spans numerous decades beginning with the 1928 Buster Keaton silent film "The Cameraman" and going until 1983's "The Right Stuff."

"We're starting to gear out movies to cover a couple of generations," said Elizabeth Trupp, spokeswoman for CAPA. "With inclusions like 'Psycho,' we're getting a lot of younger audiences."

Trupp said CAPA likes to attract younger audiences to the series, and said she thinks recent classics like "Jaws" and "Psycho" will bring them in, but many students don't believe the series is going to bring in the younger generations.

"Unfortunately, I think for the most part, only students who are big film fans will go see these," said Bryce Gorman, a sophomore in business.

But Gorman, who does count himself as a film buff, said students should be attracted by the chance to see these films on the big screen.

"A lot of these are classic movies, and it'd be nice for people who have grown up with multi-million dollar special-effect movies to see something that relies on a story more than anything else," he said. He listed "The Producers," "The Godfather" and "The Magnificent Seven" as the films at this year's series he'd like to see.

Trupp agrees students aren't often given a chance to see these types of movies.

"The whole thing is an experience," she said. "For one thing, it's movies you don't get to see that often any more, and especially not on the big screen."

Stephanie Williams, a senior in special education, who saw the Sidney Poitier film "To Sir, with Love" at last year's series, said she loved going to see old movies on the big screen.

"The atmosphere at the Ohio Theatre is totally different," she said. "I love that they show older movies that were once famous. It makes you feel like you're actually in the past, watching these movies."

Williams also said the organist adds to the experience. A 13-year veteran of the Summer Movie Series, Clark Wilson performs both before the show and during the intermission. He will also accompany "The Cameraman."

"(The organ) is a huge draw for families — the kids really love watching the organ come up from the stage," Trupp said. "He loves matching up the music to the film too. It keeps the integrity of the theater and the old films."

The organ will also be an integral part of this year's production, because 2003 marks the 75th anniversary of the Ohio Theatre. While CAPA is keeping parts of the theater in tact for historic reasons, they are celebrating the anniversary by investing $37,000 into updating much of the equipment. Two carbon arc projectors were replaced with xenon lamp houses and a new sound processor was installed, making the films brighter and the sound quality better.

Strips of 10 general admission tickets are available at the Ohio Theatre for $21.50, and day-of-show tickets will be available for $3.50. Audio descriptions for the visually impaired will be available for three films; "The Producers," "The Way We Were" and "Psycho." The series begins June 13 and concludes Aug. 24.

Patient art students prepare holograms

By Ben Nanamaker
Lantern staff writer

After setting the silver-skulled figurine inside a box, putting film over it and waiting 15 minutes for everything to settle, Bredt Covitz walks to the laser. He lifts up the piece of cardboard blocking the red beam. The beam flies through a beam splitter and bounces off a pair of mirrors down onto the film.

Fifteen minutes later, the film has been developed and cleaned. Covitz, a senior in technology education, then mounts the image on a black board and turns a narrow light beam on it, revealing the figurine in all its red-tinted, three-dimensional glory.

Patience is a virtue for students in Ohio State holography classes, but it is a virtue that pays.

Cross-listed as art and physics classes, Art 455, H455 and 555 teach students how to make holograms. In 555 and H455, students also build diode lasers to make holograms. The class is taught by art associate professor Susan Dallas-Swann and physics professor Harris Kagan.

The class fulfills a requirement for the arts and technology major, although there are no prerequisites to take the class. Fifteen students are allowed in each course, Dallas-Swann said.

Eddie Canales, a sophomore in computer science and engineering, estimates it takes 50 minutes to shoot an average hologram.

Students start out shooting transmission holograms, which are similar to the encryption seen on credit cards, then move on to holograms with distinct images.

"I'd say at the beginning it goes kind of slow and you don't get a clear picture of something," Canales said. "The most difficult part is getting the first two stages."

Another tough part of shooting holograms is that the results aren't clear until the process is done.

"Pretty much, it's an hour-long process for the holograms we're making, and you can't tell if you have a hologram until you finish all the process," Covitz said. "As soon as you throw a photograph into developer, you can see the image."

In contrast, taking a picture with photography is instantaneous.

"Photography, you can pick up a camera and shoot a picture, clickclick," he said. "In holography, it was 40 minutes setting up one shot."

Andrea Mullenniex, a senior in arts and technology, said one has to count on making errors.

"You have to have a lot of patience," Mullenniex said. "You spend a lot of time sitting around and waiting. You have to plan to screw up a couple of times. I don't think anyone gets away with being perfect. Everyone has a mistake once in a while."

Mullenniex worked in oil, acrylic and watercolor paints before getting into art and technology.

"For me, it's a new medium, and it's been around awhile," she said. "I think working with it gives a new understanding of light, which is good for any aspect of art. No matter what you're in, you have to understand light."

Holography forced Mullenniex to adjust her method of creation, but taught her the value of planning.

"There is a sculptor who says that he doesn't create a statue, he frees it," she said. "When I was an artist with paint, I could go with the flow of things. You can kind of let the painting reveal itself to you."

"With holography, you really have to have a plan," Mullenniex said. "There's a lot of things you have to do on the technical side, and you can't just do it on the fly."

The OSU art and technology classes' holography show will be held June 5 from 5-8 p.m. on the first floor of Haskett Hall in and around the holography lab, room 135.
