Closing the gap on Internet fraud

Federal Trade Commission, states initiate attack on fraudulent Internet users

By Mandy Zatynski
For The Lantern

The Federal Trade Commission, with support from Ohio State Attorney General Jim Petro and 28 states, launched a nationwide crackdown on Internet auction fraud on April 30.

Operation Bidder Beware will combine law enforcement with education to try and stop Internet scams. "It's the No. 1 Internet-related complaint that we receive," said Tara Flynn, assistant director in the Division of Marketing Practice of the FTC.

The FTC Consumer Sentinel database received 51,000 complaints last year.

During the planning stages of Operation Bidder Beware, the FTC halted four auction scams, and 29 local police departments announced 56 criminal cases.

"FTC cases were filed in April and are now in litigation and going forward," Flynn said. "But first and foremost, we want to get the message out and make sure consumers are aware. We'll stop fraud when we can."

Last month, Petro pursued an Internet fraud complaint against four Cincinnati residents conducting business as God's Toy Store and Crown Jewel Computers. He has requested the court reward $26,430.84 to 37 scammed consumers.

"(Petro) went to court last Friday, and we're still waiting," said Michelle Gatchell, spokeswoman for the attorney general's office.

Internet auction fraud complaints filed with Petro's office are individually assigned to complaint specialists.

"Their primary function is to mediate a solution," Gatchell said. "Hardly any cases go to court. They usually can be mediated through the consumer and supplier."

The specialists provided $2.1 million in relief to victims of Internet con artists last year, she said.

Despite auction hosts' attempts to keep Web site's free from fraud, sellers still manage to scam consumers.

"Most auction fraud is a very simple scenario," said Claudia Borne Farrell, spokeswoman for the FTC. "It exists when consumers bid and think they have won merchandise. Either they don't receive the merchandise, or they receive something dramatically different."

In addition to law enforcement, Operation Bidder Beware aims to educate Internet buyers through a consumer education campaign.

The program recommends saving all transaction records, researching the seller and auction site thoroughly and utilizing an escrow service.

West Nile could flow back into city

By Amy Kappler

As summer approaches, area health departments and officials are preparing for the return of the West Nile Virus.

"It's in every county," said William Saville, extension epidemiologist and large animal internalist for the Ohio State Department of Veterinary Preventive Medicine. The virus was first discovered in Ohio during summer 2001 when a dead blue jay tested positive for West Nile.

The virus came to the United States in 1999, but one knows how it got to North America, Saville said.

Symptoms of the virus can range anywhere from a mild flu to severe meningitis, she said. Although there is a preventive for horses based on the symptoms they exhibit, there is no known treatment for humans at this time.

"Both humans and horses have to be treated symptomatically," Saville said.

West Nile is a mosquito-borne disease, and the Columbus Health Department's Mosquito and Tick Control program is designed to help control mosquitoes that may transmit the disease.

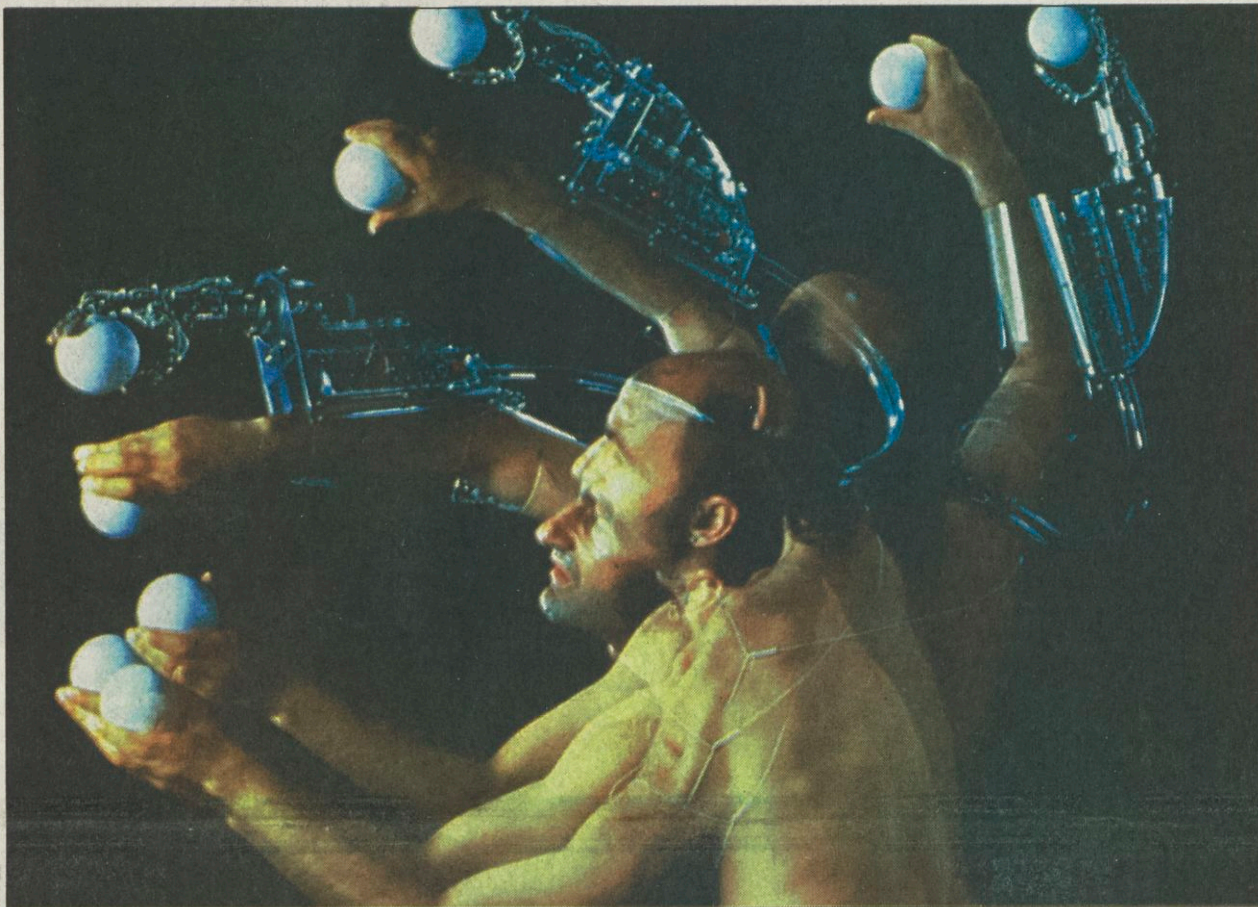

Robert Snider, public health sanitarian from the Columbus Health Department, said the program includes trapping and fogging for mosquitoes.

In the past, every city would be fogged for mosquitoes, but now the fogging is based on complaints from residents, Snider said.

"Some areas of Columbus never seem to get mosquitoes," he said. Although fogging begins in mid June and lasts until September, the health department checks for breeding sites year round, Snider said. People can help reduce mosquito breeding sites by eliminating or cleaning standing water by emptying the water in birdbaths or old tires.

Testicular cancer a concern for young men

By Sarah Marie Cotner
Lantern staff writer

Talking about testicular cancer is tough for young people. A conversation about the disease can cause snickering and embarrassing gestures, but it is a serious issue to discuss because testicular cancer targets college-age males.

Despite battles against testicular cancer made public by figures like U.S. cyclist Lance Armstrong and comedian Tom Green, many young men neglect or refuse to self-examine themselves.

Yet, with 200,000 new cases of testicular cancer in America each year, young men cannot afford to pretend they won't be affected. Testicular cancer is the most common form of cancer among men ages 15 to 40, according to the American Cancer Society.

"Talking about genitalia will cause giggles," said Dr. Bipin Shah, a urologist at Riverside Methodist Hospital. "It is fine to make jokes as long as the message is getting across that once in their teens, men need to perform self exams."

Shah tells his patients to check their scrotums once every month.

"If they make a habit of checking themselves in the shower on the first Sunday of every month, then they would never forget," he said.

The ACS recommends males include an exam by a physician as part of an annual check-up.

When performing a self-exam, Shah said a man should be checking the testicles and the epididymis — the area near the testicles that stores sperm — for any lumps larger than the size of a pea.

Cancer risks

Age: Most testicular cancer patients are between the ages of 15-40

Race and Ethnicity: White men have a risk five times higher than black men of developing the disease.

Occupational risks: Certain occupations where men are exposed to certain chemicals — for example, miners, janitors and utility workers — have higher rates of testicular cancer.

Undescended testicles: This is the main risk factor for testicular cancer. In about 3 percent of males, the testicles do not descend from the abdomen into the scrotum during fetal development. If the testicles do not descend on their own after age 1, surgery is usually performed to lower the testicles, but there is still an increased risk of testicular cancer later in life.

Cancer of the other testicle: Men have a higher chance of developing cancer in a testicle if the other testicle has been diagnosed as cancerous.

Family history: A family history of testicular cancer increases the risk for the disease, though this influence is small, said Dr. Bipin Shah.

HIV infection: There is some evidence that suggests men infected with HIV or AIDS have a higher risk of testicular cancer.

While men face one kind of cancer, breast cancer major problem for women

By Sarah Marie Cotner
Lantern staff writer

The fear that testicular cancer causes in males is parallel to the threat of breast cancer in women — and for good reason. According to the American Cancer Society, breast cancer is the second most common form of cancer among females and the second leading cause of cancer deaths in women, placing just below lung cancer.

While the chance of college-age women developing breast cancer is low, twenty-somethings should begin the lifelong habit of performing breast self-exams, said Dr. William Carson, associate professor of surgery at the Arthur G. James Cancer Hospital.

Counselor uses caring to heal

As a psychologist, chaplain, minister, friend and father, James Gebhart can unofficially take the title of world's best listener. With all these positions under his belt, he has learned, seen, heard and experienced more than most will in a lifetime.

His office is as calm and peaceful as a psychologist's office should be. Two school pictures of his 12-year-old twin daughters sit on his desk. A proud smile appeared when he introduced them.

A large red recliner has his name all over it. In it he sits and listens to his patients and responds to their needs with years of spiritual and psychological training.

Gebhart started his life in human service as a civil-rights worker in the 1960s, then became a minister after attending the United Theological Seminary in Dayton. He spent his post-graduate years at Columbia University in New York and was there for eight years building therapy practices.

Almost 20 years after becoming a minister, Gebhart received his doctorate from Ohio State in 1982. He started a practice in Upper Arlington with Dr. Rahe Corlis.

"I've had so much supervision already as a pastoral counselor, and I didn't want to do my pre-doctoral and post-doctoral supervision by going back and repeating what I've already had," Gebhart explained. "So I went to Rahe and I thought he was one of the persons I could really learn from."

"He has a great background in spirituality," Corlis said of Gebhart. "He is more than a psychologist or minister. He has a super social conscience and responds to tragedies."

Gebhart is passionate about helping people, as he proved during the Sept. 11 attacks.

"Everyone will remember where they were the day Kennedy was shot and when 9-11 occurred," Gebhart said.

Lack of sales devouring Bauer

Retailer Eddie Bauer files for Chapter 11, closes 60 clothing stores nationwide

By Ebony Johnson
Lantern staff writer

Two Eddie Bauer stores in Columbus will be closing within the next several months.

The company is reorganizing under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code, said Lisa Erickson, spokeswoman for Eddie Bauer, Inc.

Sixty stores nationwide will be closed; the three stores closing in Ohio are located at Beachwood Mall in Cleveland, and City Center and the Mall at Tuttle Crossing in Columbus.

Spiegel Inc., the parent company of Eddie Bauer, filed for reorganization in March, Erickson said.

Debbie Koopman, spokeswoman for Spiegel Inc., said the company filed under Chapter 11 in order to restore the health of its business. Chapter 11 enables the company to reorganize its stores while maintaining its business.

"We hope to emerge a stronger company," Koopman said.

Reorganization is beneficial, Erickson said.

"The whole idea of reorganizing is to put us in the position to make more profits," she said.

The company is looking for a partner to help them liquidate their merchandise, Erickson said. After a partner is found, stores will begin to close.

Prior to the announcement, there were 529 Eddie Bauer stores nationwide. The stores that were bringing in the least amount of profit were picked to be eliminated.

The best efforts will be made to transfer about 15 workers per store to another location, Erickson said.

Although Eddie Bauer has been at the mall since its opening in 1989, Jill Rainey, director of marketing for City Center, said nine new stores will be opening in the mall including Kaufmann's. The new stores will replace stores that are leaving and areas that were previously used for storage and sitting.

Rainey said stores may be shutting down their doors because their leases are up, they decide they aren't going to continue in retail or the corporation may close them because of lack of profits.

"Eddie Bauer is a good tenant and we will work with them until they close," Rainey said.

City Center is looking for several merchandisers that will attract future residents of downtown Columbus, as well as students and workers that already shop at the mall, Rainey said.

Chad Doritan, marketing director for Tuttle Mall, said she is unsure of when their Eddie Bauer will close.

"It's unfortunate that they are leaving," Doritan said. "But any store that leaves is an opportunity to bring in a good store that customers will like."

POLICE BLOTTER

Student attempts suicide in Morrill

May 3: An unidentified student attempted to commit suicide by taking about eight sleeping pills at one time. After taking the pills, she called University Police from her dorm room in Morrill Tower because she became frightened. When police arrived on the scene, she explained that she was upset because she had broken up with her boyfriend. She was admitted to the Ohio State University Medical Center for further treatment, according to University Police.

Student caught for misbehavior

May 2: An unidentified student was arrested for disorderly conduct in Morrill Tower. A residential advisor called University Police when he found the drunk student. When the officer arrived, the student was found on the bathroom floor with vomit all over her clothes. She had been drinking rum and coke at a party earlier in the night, according to University Police.

Men arrested for harassing a nurse

May 1: Two men attacked a nurse working in Doan Hall. They grabbed her arms and tried to keep her in the elevator. One of the men pulled her and tried to force her to kiss him. The nurse escaped from the elevator and contacted security. Both men were found and arrested for assault and unlawful restraint. According to University Police, the men appeared to be drunk.

Bike thieves appear near Hitchcock Hall

April 29: Two men attempted to steal a bike from the bike racks on the northeast side of Hitchcock Hall. A staff member confronted the thieves, and one of the men pulled a knife from his pocket and said, "If you come near me, I cut you." Then both men ran toward the business school. Later the staff member reported he had seen the men lingering around the north area of campus a couple days after the incident, according to University Police.

Valuables stolen from Larkins Hall

April 26: A book bag, a pair of tennis shoes, a Master Card, a pair of sweat pants and some camera equipment were stolen from a room in Larkins Hall. The camera equipment was worth around $3,000. Joseph Delany, the cheerleading coach at Ohio State, reported he locked the door where he stores the equipment, but an unidentified person broke the lock and got into the room. According to University Police, there are no suspects at this time.

out, Gebhart's son called him 45 minutes later from Chicago.

Wanting to help, he called his friends in some of the city hospitals and told them he would come over and help either as a chaplain or a psychologist, but was told to wait until more help was needed.

Gebhart kept communications with New York for a period of weeks. During that time he began other work.

"They were going to need some programs on post-traumatic stress disorder because people were going to have a long time getting over this," Gebhart said.

Not long after the American Red Cross flew him to Chicago for disaster relief training, another tragedy occurred in New York. This time Gebhart was called to help.

On Nov. 12, 2001, American Airlines Flight 587 crashed in Queens. The plane took off from John F. Kennedy International Airport and went down at 9:17 a.m. A reported 260 people were killed as a result.

"This disaster was shadowed by 9-11 events," Gebhart said. "I went over thinking I was going to help with the World Trade Center, but they sent me directly to the crash site."

As a chaplain, Gebhart helped several different types of constituencies.

"I talked to the families of the victims, many of whom were Dominicans because the flight was going to the Dominican Republic. They were stricken with grief — but also paranoia, with many wondering if this was another attack like 9-11," he said.

Gebhart has many memories of talking to the residents of the Queens community. He particularly remembers a cold day several days after the crash. It involved the only Irish pub in the neighborhood.

"I got to know the people in the pub during the week, and by the end of the week the crash was pretty much cleaned up," Gebhart said. "On that Saturday, I was still doing some work with the firemen, and I remember ducking in there to see the Ohio State versus Illinois game."

Gebhart said the patrons of the pub continuously said, "Get a drink for the chaplain," when he would check the score of the game.

"Finally I told them if Ohio State comes back and wins this game there will be drinks on the house," Gebhart said. "A great cheer went up, and I soon realized what I had said and asked how much that would cost, but they told me it was too late to change my word."

OSU lost the game, but the next day Gebhart remembered standing alone on a crater where the plane had crashed, just to get one last look. He heard footsteps behind him, and there was the proprietor of that pub holding two Irish whiskeys. The man handed one to Gebhart, made a silent toast and turned away with not one word spoken between them.

Gebhart provided help again when a fire broke out last month on 17th Avenue, killing five students.

Arriving on the scene around 6:30 a.m., Gebhart saw firemen organizing with students, so he tried to find the best place where he would be useful.

"The word 'arson' then went out for the first time, and some of the students didn't like the implication that they were being questioned. They were traumatized," he said.

Gebhart said he talked to a lot of friends and family members of the victims, but he mostly listened. He eventually went to the OSU Hospitals, where he would be of better service.

George Gibbs, director of pastoral care at OSU & Harding Behavioral Healthcare and Medicine, said Gebhart's whole life has been dedicated to providing compassionate care.

"He is very compassionate and concerned for those who are hurting," said Gibbs, who has known Gebhart since 1984. "He wears two hats in a sense of being a very credible psychologist and also embodies what a good pastor would do."

Sister Christella, a friend of Gebhart's for more than 20 years, said he has a way of letting people get in touch with themselves.

"Jim is very willing to walk that extra mile for a patient or a person," she said. "He is a behind-the-scenes kind of person, and people can count on the fact that he will be there."

Looking at space with "X-ray Vision" may sound like science fiction, but X-ray telescopes have opened a new window on the universe and led to exciting discoveries. The first detection of X-rays from the sun came in 1948. Now, X-ray astronomy probes the deep reaches of space, from the birth and death of stars in our own galaxy to super-massive black holes in the cores of other galaxies. Join Professor Riccardo Giacconi as he describes the X-ray universe and presents an overview of the technological developments at this year's Alpheus Smith Lecture.

Giacconi serves as President of Associated Universities, Inc. (AUI), headquartered in Washington, D.C., which operates the National Radio Astronomy Observatory (NRAO). NRAO leads the construction and operation of the Atacama Large Millimeter Array (ALMA) in northern Chile, a collaborative effort between North America and Europe. He has previously directed programs for the European Southern Observatory and the Space Telescope Science Institute, which was the center of operations for the Hubble Space Telescope.

Concurrent with his present position as AUI president, he is a research professor at Johns Hopkins University. He has written technical books on X-ray astronomy and more than 250 articles on astrophysical topics. His research group detected the first extra-solar X-ray source in 1962. He has won numerous prestigious awards, including the 2002 Nobel Prize in Physics "...for pioneering contributions to astrophysics, which have led to the discovery of cosmic X-ray sources." ...

Cancer catalyst discovered

Researchers find cell protein that speeds up cancer cell division

By Benjamin Hickey
Lantern staff writer

Researchers studying cancer-causing retroviruses have found a key cell protein they say assists the virus in replicating.

Scientists at The Ohio State University Comprehensive Cancer Center said they believe the cell protein p12 helps Human T-lymphotropic virus-1 — a retrovirus — to replicate.

HTLV-1 causes cancer of the white blood cells known as adult T cell lymphoma/leukemia. P12 assists in speeding up the replication process by changing the state of an immune cell to active. Researchers discovered that viruses lacking the gene that creates p12 could not reproduce.

Retroviruses are unique because they carry their hereditary code material in RNA rather than DNA. The viral code must convert from RNA to DNA before replication can occur.

"A lot of original discovery of how viruses cause cancer started with retroviruses," Lairmore said.

Dr. Patrick Green, professor of veterinary biosciences, is studying other HTLV proteins critical for efficient viral replication.

Tax and Rex are two regulatory gene products critical for viral replication. Tax and Rex, unlike p12 which controls the cell division, are critical for transforming the viral code to DNA in the replication process.

The Tax protein increases the rate of viral gene transcription when converting to DNA.

"We have directly shown that the Tax protein is directly responsible for T cell malignant events," Green said. T-cell malignant means a patient has some type of T-cell malignant cancer.

The Rex protein is responsible for regulating steps after transcription of the viral code.

"Rex needs to interact with cellular proteins to complete its function," Green said. "By understanding how Rex controls the proteins, we will have an understanding of how to control its processes."

The OSUCCC received $9.7 million last month from the National Cancer Institute to study such cancer-causing retroviruses. The group has received support from the National Institute of Health. They will study the body's reaction to viral infection and how they can use the viruses to fight cancer.

While Green and Lairmore are working on the early stages of lymphoma, Dr. Thomas Rosol, professor of veterinary pathobiology, is studying the later stages of the cancer. He looks at what causes a patient to be hypercalcemic.

Hypercalcemia is a side effect of lymphoma where victims' bones become brittle because of a lack of calcium. It can cause death before the patient even gets sick.

Rosol has grown models of immuno-deficient mice, which is done by secreting a para-thyroid, hormone-related protein. This causes an increase loss of calcium in the bones and makes the mouse hypercalcemic. It will help researchers understand the bone lesions associated with ATL.

Virgile Richard, a graduate research associate in veterinary biosciences, recently discovered how the promoter of PTHRP is regulated, Rosol said.

West Bank lawyer sheds light on Middle East conflict

By Melanie Sonderman
Lantern staff writer

As a Palestinian child growing up in the West Bank, Raja Shehadeh saw his fair share of conflict and destruction.

Now a lawyer and published author, Shehadeh spoke Monday at Ohio State about his experience with the Palestinian-Israeli conflict.

He has written several books about the conflict, including his latest, "Strangers in the House: Coming of Age in Occupied Palestine." In this work, the story of Palestine evolves through a memoir of Shehadeh's relationship with his father.

In his lecture, Shehadeh elaborated on the problems facing Palestine.

"The main problem, although there are many others, is the Israeli settlements," Shehadeh said, referring to the Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

From a young age, Shehadeh saw the rapid increase in Israeli settlements and how they changed to landscape. These settlements would have taken Palestinians much longer to build because of scarce resources, he said.

In total, the occupied territories consist of nearly 400,000 Israeli settlers. Israelis make up 10 percent of the population in the West Bank, but control more than 50 percent of the land. And in the Gaza Strip, Israeli settlers make up 0.6 percent of the population, but control 30 percent of the land, Shehadeh said.

"Polls indicate that the majority of Israeli settlers would be willing to give up the settlements in exchange for peace," Shehadeh said. But because they are a small percentage of the total amount of Israelis, the settlers have little influence."

When asked why Israelis do not give up the settlements, Shehadeh explained it would not be that simple.

Israelis would not want it to appear Palestinians won back the territories through violence — although appearances are just one aspect of a complex situation, he said.

"I'm quite convinced that when Israel occupied the territories in 1967, there was not a clear idea of what to do with the land," Shehadeh said.

As a security measure in the 1995 Oslo Accords, Israel offered Palestine sovereignty over some occupied areas. In return, Israel wanted an end to Palestinian resistance of Israeli authority.

This promised sovereignty did not last, Shehadeh said. Instead, the Israelis gave Palestinians self-rule over their civilian affairs, but not over the land.

Shehadeh stressed the need for understanding the reality in the Middle East.

Arabs understand suffering because they are able to see it, but the U.S. media shows the conflict in a different light because Israel is backed by the United States. As a result, Americans do not have a clear understanding of the conflict, he said.

"He was trying to be very responsible to his position," said Margaret Mills, a professor of Near Eastern languages and cultures.

Shehadeh showed the Palestinian conflict through personal experiences, which will facilitate understanding, Mills said.

Usually a cancer lump is not painful, and Shah said this is probably the reason why young men do not pay attention to a suspicious growth. Other symptoms may include testicular enlargement or swelling and a sensation of heaviness or aching in the lower abdomen or scrotum.

If a lump is found, that does not automatically mean testicular cancer, Shah said. The lump may be a non-cancerous cyst or a condition known as Varicocele, when varicose veins form in the scrotum.

If a male finds anything suspicious, Shah recommends an examination by a physician as soon as possible. If the lump is determined to be cancerous, out-patient surgery is done quickly to prevent the spread of the disease to other parts of the body.

"If, for example, a person is diagnosed on a Thursday or Friday, removal of the tumor will be on that Saturday," Shah said. "It needs immediate attention. There is no waiting to do it until summer vacation."

There are three stages of testicular cancer, Shah said. The sooner a man finds a suspicious growth, the better his chances of a full recovery. Fortunately, all three stages have a high success rate.

Stage one occurs when the cancer is confined only to the testicle. The survival rate at this stage is 95 percent. This is also the survival rate if the cancer has spread to stage two. Here, lymph nodes in the abdomen will be affected by the disease.

In its severest form the cancer has spread throughout the body. New innovations in chemotherapy have increased the survival rate in this stage to 70 percent. Still, about 300 deaths per year in the United States are attributed to testicular cancer, Shah said.

Each stage of testicular cancer can be treated by one or all of the treatment methods. These methods include surgery, radiation and chemotherapy. The latter two procedures are usually saved for the more advanced stages of the disease, Shah said.

One possible side effect of chemotherapy is infertility, Shah said, but a testicular cancer patient wishing to conceive in the future can store his sperm for later use.

Despite the advances in testicular cancer treatment, Shah said it is still important men get in the habit of examining themselves and seeking treatment if they find anything suspicious.

"I want to cut down the amount of time between finding the cancer and treating it," Shah said. He is helping to get the word out about self-exams by recruiting some of his patients to talk with high school students about their own experiences.

"We want to let them know that doing testicular self-exams are just as important for a man as breast self-exams are for a woman," he said.

The Franklin County Unit of the American Cancer Society is concerned with educating young men about the threat of testicular cancer.

Kathleen Gough, cancer control director for the ACS, said the organization offers cards to hang in a male's shower to remind and instruct him on how to perform a self-exam. The ACS hosts health fairs and runs a display at COSI that provides information about how to correctly administer a testicular self-exam. The ACS provides cancer patients with information about local cancer-specific support groups.

"We also run a program called One To One," Gough said. "It is a hotline where those individuals recently diagnosed with cancer can speak with people who have been through the diagnosis."

Three stages of testicular cancer

About 300 men in the United States die per year as a result of testicular cancer. Here are the three different stages:

Stage one
■ Cancer is confined only to the testicles
■ 95 percent survival rate

Stage two
■ Lymph nodes in abdomen are affected by the cancer
■ 95 percent survival rate

Stage three
■ Cancer has spread throughout entire body
■ 70 percent survival rate

"The vast majority of lumps in college women are benign," Carson said. "The chances of it being cancerous are very small, but not zero."

Carson said the majority of young breast cancer patients usually develop the disease because of a strong family history, but even those women with a strong family history are unlikely to be diagnosed with breast cancer in their 20s.

Still, the ACS recommends a woman to administer monthly breast self-exams beginning at age 20. An annual exam from a health professional should also be a part of a young woman's routine.

"During her breast self-exam, a woman should be checking for new lumps that are persistent and hard," Carson said. A cancerous lump is usually painless with uneven edges.

Other signs of breast cancer include a swelling in part of the breast, skin irritation, nipple pain and a lump in the underarm area.

Even if a new lump and other symptoms are detected, Carson said it is still unlikely a college-age woman has breast cancer.

"There is a large chance that it is only a cyst," he said.

Kathleen Gough, cancer control director for the Franklin County Unit of the ACS, said the organization is active in its quest to provide young women with information on how to correctly perform breast self-exams.

"The ACS offers shower cards that explain how to do it and how often," Gough said. These cards are similar to the ones given to men detailing testicular self-exams. The ACS also runs a display at COSI that details how to perform breast self-exams.

OSU junior places family as inspiration for keeping involved at university

By Derrik Chinn
Lantern staff writer

Most high school girls could never muster the courage to chop off their hair for a good cause.

That certainly wasn't the case for Ida Abdalkhani. As a high school senior she decided to donate her hair to charity for cancer patients. After one of her teachers lost her own hair to cancer, Abdalkhani saw donating her hair as an opportunity to help others.

"It was a test for myself. I wondered, 'Is my self-confidence based on my personality, my abilities or a combination of the two?'" Abdalkhani said.

Obviously, her self-confidence transcended her insecurities. Soon after, several of her peers decided to do the same. Abdalkhani sparked a trend by helping others in anyway possible, even if it meant losing 13 inches of her hair.

"I looked like a mushroom," Abdalkhani said.

Mahshi Abdalkhani, Abdalkhani's mother, remembers her daughter cutting her hair as "unforgettable."

"Usually girls at that age are very concerned about their looks and appearances, but Ida proved that caring for other people is far more important to her than her appearance," she said.

Donating her hair to charity is one of several unforgettable experiences proving Abdalkhani's compassionate desire to help others. Abdalkhani chose to test her own self-esteem by helping a complete stranger who was, in her eyes, in greater need.

"I grew a lot by just taking risks and putting my self-esteem in question," she said.

Born in Canada to Iranian parents, Abdalkhani moved to Lima, Ohio, at a young age. As a student at Shawnee High School, she excelled to the top of her class academically, while still maintaining several extra-curricular activities, namely student government. She describes her experience while growing up as "normal," but one might find that a modest understatement of such an intriguing and inspiring individual.

During her first year at Ohio State, Abdalkhani conquered the feeling of being lost by getting involved in any way possible.

"Getting involved on campus allowed me to meet new people. It created a sense of family for me while at OSU," she said.

Now a junior in marketing and interactive communications, she recalls coming to OSU as "the best decision." In addition to working toward her degree, Abdalkhani works for OSU's Center for Entrepreneurship, serving as the student liaison between the center and students.

She is active in the Honors Contract Council and serves as president of the Business Builders Club, which recently won the Ohio Union Leadership Award for incorporating ideas of all fields into business.

On a more glamorous note, she was voted 2001-02 OSU homecoming queen.

Abdalkhani's credentials and accomplishments suggest her motivations and goals may be a bit overwhelming for most students, but she seldom feels stressed. Time management, along with her faith in her self-confidence, is her key to success.

"I'm definitely a planner and a perfectionist to some extent. I want to do things right the first time," she said.

As her undergraduate studies quickly come to an end, Abdalkhani begins to explore her options as an entrepreneur. An internship with the Coca-Cola Company took her to Atlanta last summer, where she developed a presentation guide designed for businesses interested in Coca-Cola. The corporation distributed more than 200 CD-ROMs containing Abdalkhani's project for use in customer presentations.

After leaving an unforgettable impression on Coca-Cola, Abdalkhani knows she has what it takes to succeed as an entrepreneur. While her options are many, she plans to choose something close to her heart.

"I love food, and in business they always say you should do something you're passionate about," she said.

With that, she hopes to open an international restaurant that incorporates cuisine from all corners of the world. The menu would include several different recipes from as many different countries possible, especially her favorites.

MORGAN WONORSKI/THE LANTERN

"Spanish, Italian, Indian, Greek, American, a Middle Eastern mix and definitely Persian food," she said.

Abdalkhani said her idea for an international restaurant emerged from her passion for other cultures and her desire to help promote diversity.

"I love cultural diversity, and I want to help people really understand different ethnicities. An international restaurant would allow them to experience it on their own level," she said.

Ify Nwokedi, Abdalkhani's friend and former roommate, assures that Abdalkhani is more than capable of embracing other cultures.

"As an international student, I've noticed that not all Americans are open-minded and can accept other people's cultures. Ida does," Nwokedi said.

"Escrow services act as independent third parties. They take buyers' money until they receive the merchandise. They inspect the merchandise and send it to the buyer before sending the money to the seller," Borne Farrell said.

Such a service could have served Nathan Beare well. The sophomore in turf grass science used eBay, an online auction site, to purchase autographed posters last month.

"I sent the money, but I never got them," Beare said.

After reporting the seller to eBay and an outside mediator similar to those provided by Petro's office, Beare received his posters valued at $50.

"I won't use eBay again," he said. "I'll just go to the store."

Internet auction fraud victims should contact the Attorney General's Consumer Protection Hotline at 1-800-282-0515 or www.ag.state.oh.us or the Federal Trade Commission at www.ftc.gov to file a complaint.

"It's going to be around for several years," said Susan Baughman, sanitarian in training for the Franklin County Board of Health.

The Franklin County Board of Health offers educational materials to the public about the virus, she said. The board passes out brochures and other materials to people who want to be informed.

"People need to take all measures to protect themselves," Baughman said.

The West Nile Virus is definitely a threat to Ohio residents, said Kim Wimpisinger, epidemiologist for the Ohio Department of Health. About 30 people in Ohio died last year from the virus.

People can take precautions by wearing protective clothing when outdoors, using repellents with DEET and staying indoors during hours when mosquitoes are out, Baughman said.

"Be careful around dawn and dusk," she said.

Pakistani initiatives may be leading towards peace

By Stephen Graham
Associated Press

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Pakistan restored transportation links with nuclear neighbor India, announced full diplomatic ties and called for confidence-building measures concerning their nuclear arsenals, the prime minister said yesterday.

Prime Minister Zafarullah Khan Jamali also said he hoped the two nations could resolve their decades-long differences over the disputed Kashmir region. The region is divided between both nations but claimed in its entirety by both, and has been the cause of two wars between them.

"I am hopeful a good solid solution should be coming forward on all issues, of course including the Jammu and Kashmir issue," Jamali said, referring to the disputed region.

Tensions between the neighbors have worried the international community because both nations possess nuclear weapons. Jamali said yesterday that Pakistan wanted "serious discussion for nuclear and strategic stability in our region."

Besides restoring air, bus and train links, Jamali said he wanted the two nations to restore sports links, including cricket and field hockey games. Except for the World Cup, Pakistan and India have not played a cricket match since 2000.

Jamali said he favored a tiered approach to negotiations with India, with the ultimate goal being a summit between the leaders.

Pakistan's prime minister also sought to increase trade between the two countries by reducing customs and tariffs on more than 70 items. He was not more specific.

Pakistan also said it would immediately release dozens of Indian fishermen caught in Pakistani waters.

India did not immediately comment on yesterday's developments.

The peace initiatives between the two countries come ahead of talks in Islamabad tomorrow between Deputy Secretary of State Richard Armitage and Pakistani leaders, including Jamali and President Pervez Musharraf. Armitage will also visit India.

Peace overtures began last week when Indian Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee said while visiting Indian-ruled Kashmir that he wanted talks with Pakistan.

Jamali then called Vajpayee. Jamali sought peace talks, offering to go to India or have Vajpayee come to Pakistan.

On Friday, Vajpayee told the Indian Parliament he wanted "decisive talks" with Pakistan.

On Monday, Pakistan offered again to eliminate its nuclear weapons and declare South Asia a nuclear-free zone if India reciprocated.

India did not respond but has refused such offers in the past.

Pakistan and India declared themselves nuclear powers after detonating atomic bombs in 1998. They have not opened their arsenals to international inspectors, and it is not known exactly how many weapons they have.

The issue that has bedeviled their relationship is Kashmir, the divided Himalayan state is divided between Muslim Pakistan and Hindu India but claimed by both countries.

Rescue attempt leaves 10 dead; nation calling for negotiations

By Margarita Martinez
Associated Press

MEDELLIN, Colombia — Colombia's president asked for the nation's support in fighting terrorism after a state governor, a former defense minister and eight others held hostage by leftist guerrillas were killed in a military rescue attempt.

The armed forces commander defended the raid early yesterday.

In an televised address Monday, President Alvaro Uribe said the hostages were executed by Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia rebels as troops approached their camp. A purported rebel communiqué blamed the government for the killings.

"In this moment of pain, Colombia cannot surrender," said Uribe, who was elected on promises to crack down on the guerrillas. "Now, we have to fortify our decision to defeat terrorism."

The FARC is also holding three Americans who were captured when their plane went down in rebel territory in February, as well as a former presidential candidate, a dozen state lawmakers, and almost 40 police officers and soldiers.

The deaths aroused new calls for the government to negotiate with the rebels, who want to exchange the hostages for guerrillas in government jails, a demand the Catholic Church and family members of the hostages have urged Uribe to accept.

"Despite the pain, the president should think with a cold head and make the problem (of an exchange) a priority because the ends don't justify the means," said Yolanda Pulecio, the mother of former presidential candidate Ingrid Betancourt, kidnapped in February 2002.

Uribe has said he would consider an exchange only if it was brokered by the United Nations and included the freedom of all hostages, not just the political hostages. Gen. Jorge Enrique Mora, commander of Colombia's armed forces, defended the army, pointing to the many successful rescue operations it has executed.

"The army has done many rescue operations," Mora told reporters. "And we will continue doing them because it is our constitutional responsibility to bring home all the Colombians that these bandits have kidnapped."

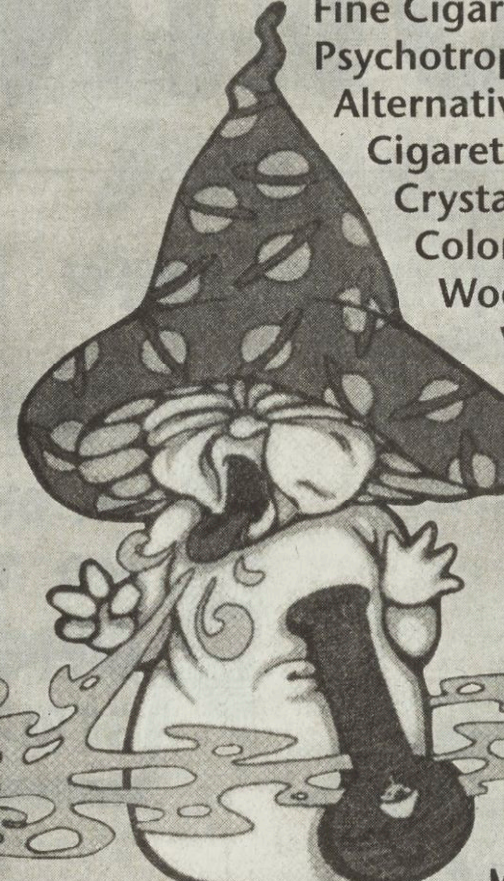

The dead were Antioquia state Gov. Guillermo Gaviria, former Defense Minister Gilberto Echeverri and eight security force members. Three other hostages escaped, though two of them were injured.

Uribe said he had called Echeverri's family.

"For me, it is a very hard blow that Gilberto Echeverri died in this way while I was president," he said. "That call I made painfully."

Uribe had two top military commanders explain to the country exactly what happened during the rescue attempt. His office presented a videotaped interview with one of the survivors, who said a rebel commander ordered the hostages killed.

Commencement Celebrities area of expertise?

It's official: Christopher Reeve (a.k.a. Superman) will be giving the commencement address at spring graduation.

Nothing against Reeve, he's a wonderful person who has suffered a great tragedy, but it is time to get a commencement speaker who makes sense.

The six candidates for this year's honor were: the aforementioned Reeve, Oprah Winfrey, Tom Hanks, Steven Spielberg, Jimmy Carter and Tom Brokaw. There's something wrong with that list. All except one, former president Carter, are in the entertainment industry.

Commencement is not the Academy Awards. It is a time for graduating students to look back at their college experience as they prepare to embark into the real world.

Any commencement speaker at Ohio State should be someone involved with academia, a prominent public figure or someone with an OSU connection.

Since Bill Cosby spoke in 2001, most candidates for commencement speaker have been in the entertainment business. The scramble to find a celebrity to speak at commencement has left this year's graduating seniors with a speaker who has no connection to OSU and, while he may have a lot to say about overcoming obstacles in life, he knows nothing about the modern academic experience.

Most celebrities have nothing important to say. Most of what they do say is self-serving and often pointless.

If the people who decided that OSU must have a celebrity speak at commencement, why not get a celebrity with an OSU connection? Jack Nicklaus, Patricia Heaton or Richard Lewis are famous people who would be able to connect with the student body at OSU and give a wildly entertaining speech.

Ultimately, though, the speaker should have something to say about higher education. Students don't sit through four or five years of college to be sent off by a speech from Pauly Shore.

There are countless alumni of OSU who have "done something great," and they have far more to say than any Hollywood celebrity. Commencement is a celebration of the college experience. The speaker should be a person who has something to say about this.

Let the celebrities save their pointless pontificating for "Inside the Actors' Studio." Commencement needs to be an OSU affair, and the selection committee needs to wake up and realize this.

We want 'Brit'

Kirwan would be great speaker

No offense to actor Christopher Reeve, but he was the wrong choice for commencement speaker for spring graduation. Other than being a fairly popular actor who has overcome adversity, Reeve has very little to offer Ohio State graduates during his speech at commencement.

Former Ohio State President William "Brit" Kirwan, on the other hand, would have been the perfect commencement speaker.

First and foremost, Brit is a member of the academic community, and, unlike five of this year's six speaker candidates, would actually have something intelligent to say about the college experience. Brit could tell the graduates how their years of studying and hard work will pay off in the real world. He was the president of one of the biggest universities in the world and is the chancellor of the University of Maryland system. This experience in the realm of academia makes him a very knowledgeable speaker.

Second, Brit has an OSU connection. The university, in its "Do Something Great" campaign, continually lists people from OSU who are making a impact in the world. Yet the person chosen to lead the newest Buckeye alumni into the work force is someone who has never done anything great for OSU. What are graduates being told about the value of their degrees when the speaker at their commencement has no relation to the university?

Not only does Brit have an OSU connection, but he formed the foundation of the university's current academic structure. His Academic Plan is one of the core principles that the university works under. Brit worked to make OSU more diverse, to increase the value of an OSU degree and to make the university more prestigious in the academic world. OSU President Karen A. Holbrook is still carrying on Brit's vision of this university.

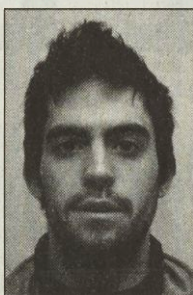

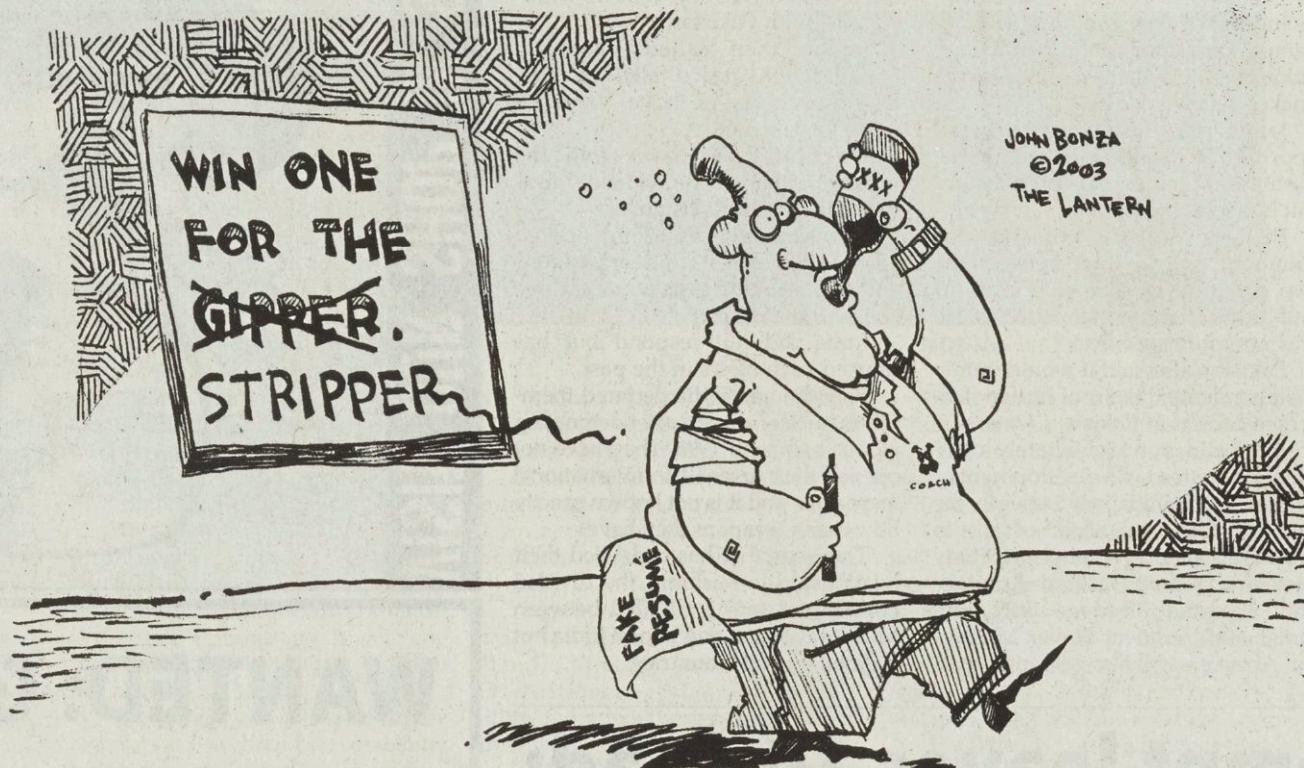

Anyone who doubts that Brit would be a great speaker at commencement never heard him deliver a speech while he was president. His speeches were always entertaining, utilizing the proper mix of humor and information. His wit can keep audiences captivated in what he is saying — an important attribute in keeping the attention of a packed Horseshoe.

Most of all, Brit is someone who is respected by the student body and especially this graduating class. Graduates are not going to heed the advice of someone they do not respect.

Brit is a beloved former member of this university's community. The students — and more important, the graduates — like him. He would definitely have something great to say to OSU's newest graduates.

'04 election could unleash Bush

"It is a nervous thing to consider: Not just four more years of Nixon, but Nixon's last four years in politics — completely unshackled ... from any need to worry about who might or might not vote for him the next time around."

— Hunter S. Thompson

Fear and Loathing: On the Campaign Trail, '72

History, I would argue, never really repeats itself. Though there are patterns, cycles, reoccurrences, mostly because — at least in American politics — history carries with it a very keen penchant for irony and a very sick sense of humor.

Well, maybe not humor, since during the last 20 years, the Republican Party only has been funny for a very select few. Especially when it is dominating like it is now, in the face of the jealous, incoherent nine-headed hydra of the Democratic Party.

Saturday's debate (shown only on C-SPAN) indicated once again that for Democrats this primary season will be another of cruel calculations and desperately wishful thinking, like: "Too bad we can't fuse Howard Dean (Gov. Vermont) and John Kerry (Sen. Mass.) together genetically; we could give Bush a run for his money."

Anyone not happy with the last four years is back to the sad process of putting practicality over preference — where the candidate one may idealistically want won't be who should be nominated because the said candidate cannot win. A situation such as this may mean that George W. Bush could soon be "unshackled" — that if elected in 2004, Bush, like Nixon in 1972, will not have a next campaign to worry about. These will be his last four years in politics, and there will be no telling what he may do — or at least try to do — to American politics without the burden or the boundaries that come with another run at a public office.

Which scares a lot of people (myself included), though probably not enough people to keep him from getting reelected. "Bush Unshackled." It sounds like some sort of horrible pay-per-view event. And it may even prove to be one — something no one could believe or (unfortunately) do anything about.

Or will it? True, in the absence of a strong Democratic candidate, there is a lot of ground to lose, a lot of people to ostracize before the Republican Party starts having to actually answer to its actions on any significant scale.

Even with one war in Iraq and another looming around different corners of the world, the president is still making unbelievable headway in almost all of his agendas. Maybe the wild, jingoistic show will only get wilder if W. takes office again in 2004.

But, besides the president — who is the figurehead rather than the head of his party — the rest of the administration seems to be digging themselves in for a long haul, and there is no amendment telling anyone but W. when they have to jump ship at a certain time.

A whole new American century is being imagined, under the Project for A New American Century's (a conservative think-tank) jingoistic premise that: "We seem to have forgotten the essential elements of the Reagan administration's success: a military that is strong and ready to meet both present and future challenges; a foreign policy that boldly and purposefully promotes American principles abroad; and national leadership that accepts the United States' global responsibilities."

So, in a closer look, the issue really isn't that this will be Bush's last term, but the fact that his tenure just represents another punctuation in a Republican agenda with a longer life-span than a quick eight years.

And maybe instead of an unshackled ride, we're all in for a little subtlety — a slower, more indirect trajectory down the inevitable spiral a plan like this represents.

OSU not at fault for tuition hike

Last Friday the OSU Board of Trustees voted to raise tuition by another 9 percent. This follows a comparable tuition hike implemented one year ago.

Of course, it would hardly be fair to blame the board or the administration for this. At the end of the day, it is their assigned duty to adjust tuition to compensate for ever-diminishing state funds — and then to dress the bad news in the prettiest clothes possible.

The latter is no easy P.R. job. But they can't be faulted for not trying. According to Buckeye Net News, the latest tuition hike is "designed to provide the university with the financial flexibility to deal with an uncertain state budget picture, while at the same time trying to minimize the impact on the university's current students." Feel any better?

Are we supposed to feel grateful that, under the new three-tier system, current students will be paying slightly less than future students? Should we take comfort in the knowledge that tuition at OSU is still a "bargain" compared to that at private colleges?

A one-time 9 percent tuition hike is distasteful but digestible. It just means digging deeper into the barrel or, for most students, sinking deeper into debt. But if we take a step back, the bigger picture is nothing less than disturbing.

Galloping tuition rates and reductions in state funding of higher education are the reality not only at Ohio State, but at every public university in every state. Last year, the National Center for Public Policy and Higher Education released a report on the decreasing affordability of college education. This report pointed out several concurrent trends.

- The cost of a college education is increasing at a much faster rate than both income and inflation. When expressed as a percentage of average family income, for example, college tuition has doubled in the last 20 years for families in middle and lower income ranges

- While, it is true that the federal and state governments have increased their allotments to financial aid programs, these allotments have not even come close to keeping pace with tuition increases

- Student debt is on the rise as well. The report stated that 64 percent of college seniors will be in debt — a figure that has doubled in the last eight years. In a related trend, federal student financial aid has come less in the form of grants and more in the form of loans

- The largest increases in public college tuition are imposed when students and their families can least afford them — during recessions. The report found a striking correlation between economic downturns and tuition hikes at public colleges. This obeys a cruel logic, a souring economy negatively affects state government budgets, which means less state funding for public colleges and translates into larger tuition increases. But the same souring economy also pulls down real wages, leaving students ill-prepared to absorb the punch of a tuition hike

These long-term trends put the latest tuition increase in a sobering context and beg more serious questions. Instead of getting caught up in the yearly budget charade, crossing our fingers in hopes of a minimal tuition hike, we should set our sights higher. Where are our priorities anyway? The problem is not a lack of funds, but a failure to devote them to education.

Even as state funding for health care, education and social services has waned in the last 15 years, state money has been poured into the prison system. And at the federal level, military spending is the elephant in the room that politicians fail to mention as they blather on about which social programs to cut and by how much.

Among the greatest democratic gains of this country's history is the notion of universal education. Once reserved for the preparation of ministers, lawyers and doctors, schooling is now widely held as the birthright of every individual. It is clear that an education should not stop at the 12th grade for those who wish to continue. But current trends signal a regression to a much less democratic past. How can something priced as a luxury ever be truly available to all?

YOUR VIEWS

Students cannot afford tuition hike

Does The Lantern not make it to the desk of Ohio State's officials, or do they just not care to pay attention to the facts?

Just last week, there was an article on the front page which indicated the average student must work 55 hours a week to cover the cost of tuition — and I do not recall the article mentioning anything about those 55 hours paying for housing, food, gas, books and all the other expenses students face. The article also indicated that students who work more than 25 hours a week are not fully able to concentrate on school work, and their grades tend to suffer.

So where in this equation does a 9 percent tuition hike benefit the students of this university in any way? I work an average of 35 hours a week, and my grades have suffered immensely from it, but it is something I must do in order to survive.

Isn't the purpose of a public university to provide an education for all who wish to attain it? If that is the case, I believe OSU is failing miserably.

Provost Edward J. Ray was quoted in the Monday Lantern as saying, "Our tuition proposal will allow the university to maintain its commitment to academic quality — even during the current recession — which is critical to our students as well as to Ohio's longer-term economic vitality and competitiveness."

My question to him is: Which students are going to benefit from this tuition increase? Most students will not be able to afford to stick around long enough to reap the benefits of it.

Criticism of country comes from caring

Recently, it seems that the pro-war conservatives think that they have been "trumping" the left by waving flags and chanting "USA! USA! USA!" As a member of the left I find it to be very offensive that we are seen as un-American, and even anti-American. While we may criticize U.S. policy, it is not out of hatred of America — if anything, it is out of love.

After all, Old Glory does not just stand for supporters of current U.S. actions or warmongers; it stands for all Americans. We do not wish to see the flag that represents and symbolizes us stained with blood or shame. In many ways the left stands for American ideals even more so than the right.

Ashcroft's Patriot Act has severely limited personal freedoms, and a second "Patriot Act" was proposed that would allow the government to wiretap and investigate citizens without even serving a warrant.

Some say the Patriot Acts are justified in these times of crisis, but in the words of the great Benjamin Franklin, a man who signed the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution: "They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety."

President George W. Bush himself was quoted as saying "There ought to be limits to freedom" when referring to a liberal Web site. Limits on our freedom of speech? Is the president suggesting that we eliminate the First Amendment in the Bill of Rights?

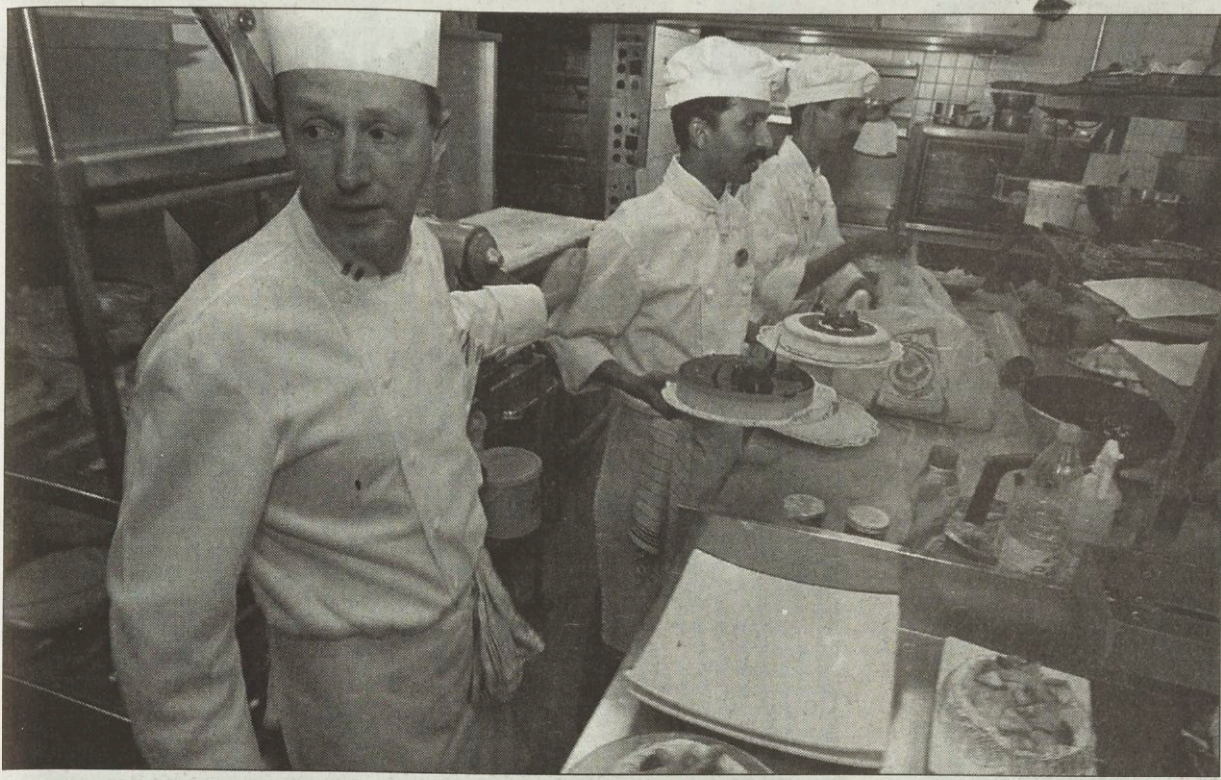

If you value your freedom, take up the flag, march in the streets, and make your voices heard! Use your powers of opinion and speech while you still have it. Fight for your freedoms. As Goethe said: "He only earns his freedom and existence who daily conquers them anew." May God bless America, land of the free.

French chef dishes comfort food to war-ravaged regions

By Mort Rosenblum
Associated Press

KUWAIT CITY — Pastry chef Yves Reynaud, with French colors on his collar, flew in a U.S. Air Force transport to Baghdad on a vital mission. Any search for peace goes better with cream puffs.

History is often in the details, such as the dramatic culinary operation mounted by Reynaud's ad hoc aid group, which he might well call Pâtisseries Sans Frontières (Pastry-makers Without Borders).

Last week, 350 Iraqis and Americans met for a two-day conclave in Baghdad on how to lead Iraq out of chaos — but the freshly liberated capital is in such disarray that no one could find food to feed them properly.

"They asked if we could help, and I told them we could," said Reynaud, pastry chef at Kuwait's Crowne Plaza Hotel. "I wasn't that afraid. I've been baking in war zones for much of my life."

Reynaud took over the whole operation, not only the Black Forest cake and gooey meringues but also the steak au poivre and the Daoud Pasha lamb stew.

Almost everything was prepared in Kuwait and sent in refrigerated trucks, with an armed escort, on a 36-hour ride to Baghdad. Then Reynaud and his 24 helpers boarded an aircraft.

Counting breakfast, lunch, dinner and coffee break, the flying kitchen crew produced 1,400 servings.

"A few elders worried there might be pork, and some people balked at unfamiliar things, but mostly I think it was a hit," he said. In any case, diners gave him rousing applause.

Tall, slim and graying at 48, Reynaud is the very picture of a French patissier. He wears a tall white toque, small France flags on his white tunic collars and de rigueur black clogs.

He learned his art in Provence, near Montelimar. Then, feeling wanderlust, he took his show on the road. He worked five years, until 1983, at the Caravelle in Benin on the troubled West African coast.

After a year in France, Reynaud got restless again. He finished the 1980s in Dubai and then went to the collapsing Soviet Union in 1991 to the newly renovated Metropole, Moscow's first five-star hotel.

"We were having an aperitif on the terrace when the tanks rumbled by," he said. "That livened up the day."

Reynaud moved on to the Zagreb Intercontinental, and Croatia exploded in warfare around him. After two years, he shifted to Indonesia, in the hectic heart of Jakarta.

For six years, he and his Scottish wife ran a pastry shop and bakery in Fort Williams, Scotland. But the cold drizzle and the calm were too much to handle.

In 2000, the couple packed up their two sons, then aged 6 and 9, and came to the Kuwait Crowne Plaza. There, despite 16-hour days and catering parties for 1,000 people, he relaxed and took his boys to the beach.

About his only hardship in the thriving but alcohol-free emirate was suffering through fine dinners with nothing more than bootleg homemade wine. Until another war landed in his lap.

Budget director to leave D.C.

By Tom Raum
Associated Press

Mitch Daniels, President Bush's budget director, will resign within the next 30 days, the White House announced yesterday.

Daniels resigned to open the way for an expected run for Indiana governor, aides said.

The upcoming resignation was announced by White House spokesman Ari Fleischer, who told reporters Daniels made his intentions known earlier yesterday in a meeting of senior White House aides.

"The president appreciates his service to the nation," Fleischer said. "The president will miss him."

Daniels' departure comes as the White House was having a hard time winning congressional approval for its economic stimulus and tax-cut package.

Daniels run for the statehouse had been widely anticipated.

Although, he was not expected to formally announce his candidacy until this summer, and those close to him emphasized that a final decision had not yet been made.

Daniels has held the budget post since the beginning of the Bush administration, and his departure will mean the president's entire initial economic team is gone. Fleischer said that no decision had been made on a successor.

Clay Johnson, a longtime friend of Bush whom the president named to the No. 2 job at the budget agency, is in line to replace Daniels, according to several officials who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Two Republicans, also speaking on condition of anonymity, said the White House had been unable to clear his nomination past key members of the Senate. These officials declined to say what objections were raised.

Within the past six months, Bush replaced his first Treasury secretary, Paul O'Neill, with John Snow; and his former head of the National Economic Council, Lawrence Lindsey, with Stephen Friedman.

Unlike O'Neill and Lindsey, Daniels was not forced out of the job.

Daniels has been a favorite of conservatives for his frequent clashes with Congress over spending.

Assigned the role of keeping the price tag of spending legislation in check, he has had testy relationships with lawmakers of both parties from the House and Senate committees that oversee expenditures.

He once accused New Yorkers of "a little money-grubbing game" for pursuing $20 billion Bush promised to rebuild from the Sept. 11 attacks.

He called congressional mandates on federal agencies "Lilliputian do's and don'ts," and said, in The Wall Street Journal about lawmakers, "Their motto is, 'Don't just stand there, spend something.' This is the only way they feel relevant."

Daniels showed few signs of backing down and seemed to relish his job as administration tightwad.

"The only words I've said that contribute to tension are 'no' and 'enough,'" he said.

Daniels, 54, was born in Monongahela, Pa., but moved with his family to Indiana at an early age. After graduating from Princeton University, he began working for then Indianapolis Mayor Richard Lugar, and journeyed with him to Washington when the Republican became a senator in 1977.

Daniels was also a political adviser to President Reagan before returning to Indiana, initially as vice president of the conservative Hudson Institute think tank.

He then joined the Eli Lilly and Co., holding various top jobs at the pharmaceutical giant before becoming budget director. In more than two years as budget chief, Daniels has rented a one-bedroom Washington apartment and commuted home on most weekends.

Damaged wing likely cause of shuttle crash

By Juan A. Lozano
Associated Press

The analysis of thousands of feet of magnetic tape in a recorder from the space shuttle Columbia supports the theory that the spacecraft's left wing was breached, allowing hot gases to penetrate and destroy the vehicle, an engineer told investigators yesterday.

During a public hearing, the Columbia Accident Investigation Board heard an update on evidence recovered from the data recorder by Douglas White, director of operations requirements in the orbiter element department for United Space Alliance, a NASA contractor.

The data recorder — found March 19 on a muddy slope in East Texas — contained information about temperature, pressure, vibration and other measurements from Columbia's catastrophic descent through the atmosphere on Feb. 1.

The 58 pound recorder is similar to an airliner's black box, but not nearly as robust or self-sustaining.

White told the board that analysis of sensor readings captured by the data recorder indicate "something was happening to the leading edge of the wing 290 seconds after" the shuttle first encountered the Earth's atmosphere.

He said it wasn't definitive evidence of a breach "but it is not inconsistent with there being a breach."

The data recorder captured readings from 622 sensors throughout the shuttle, including 259 on the left wing.

The board's leading theory on the Columbia disaster is that a piece of foam insulation broke off the external fuel tank during liftoff Jan. 16, hitting and dislodging a fragment of an insulating panel or seal along the vulnerable leading edge of the shuttle's left wing.

That could have created a gap that let in superheated atmospheric gases during re-entry two weeks later, killing all seven astronauts aboard as the shuttle broke apart.

On Monday, NASA officials announced that their shuttle debris search command center in the East Texas city of Lufkin would shut down by the end of the week. This would conclude all search operations in eastern Texas, where most pieces of Columbia landed. Debris also fell in parts of Louisiana.

Death row inmate saved by new found evidence

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — Lawyers for a death row inmate who has attracted attention from English and Scottish citizens say they will present new evidence today in a federal appeals court to prove he did not start a fire that killed a 2-year-old girl.

Supporters believe Ken Richey, 38, was wrongly convicted of starting the 1986 apartment fire that killed Cynthia Collins of suburban Columbus Grove.

Richey, who was born in Holland and later lived in Scotland, has citizenship in the United States and Britain, his attorney, Ken Parsigian, said yesterday.

While his case has generated limited interest in Ohio, his name is familiar in Britain. Filmmakers have produced two documentaries that question his guilt. British and Scottish citizens and politicians have written thousands of letters, saying he's wrongly imprisoned.

Richey's lawyers say they will present new evidence to the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati that supports his innocence.

Parsigian said he hopes written testimony by an Australian arson expert will sway the judges. The expert has said that accelerants could not have been used to start the fire, as the state contends.

Richey's attorneys also think that new scientific evidence in the case will undermine the state's evidence. Parsigian would not give details on the evidence.

The state attorney general's office said in a statement that "at least six courts over 17 years have examined the Kenny Richey case and agreed he set the fire."

The movement behind the Kenneth Richey Campaign For Justice began in his native land long after Richey was convicted of burning the apartment.

Richey had moved to the north-west Ohio village to be near his family and look for work.

Prosecutors said Richey used gasoline and paint thinner to set a fire in the apartment of the child and her mother, Hope Collins. Prosecutors said Richey was seeking revenge against a former girlfriend who lived directly below the apartment.

It's Big Ben's time to win MVP

Several players in the NBA are capable of taking over a game in the playoffs. We saw Paul Pierce do it to the Pacers; Tim Duncan did it in Game 1 against the Lakers. Kobe and Shaq have done it for the Lakers in the past — most often against the Kings. Allen Iverson did it to the Hornets in Game 1 with 55 points, and Dirk Nowitzki did it throughout the Mavs' series with the Blazers.

T-Mac was doing it to the Pistons in Games 1 and 2, scoring 89 points in the two games. But as soon as the team captured a 3-1 lead in the series and he started running his mouth about how he was finally going to get his team out of the first round, Big Ben Wallace began to take over and the bell tolled.

Anyone who gets a hot hand can take over a game, or even a series — for a while. Not many players in recent history have been able to dominate a series from the defensive side of the ball — none like Wallace.

In Game 5 with the Pistons facing elimination, Wallace had 14 points, an astounding 21 rebounds, three blocks and a surprising four steals. Game 6 was more of the same as Wallace put up 20 points, 17 boards, five blocks, and four more steals. In the final game of the series he produced just seven points, but had 12 boards, five blocks, five assists and two steals.

The two-time NBA Defensive Player of the Year asserted his will upon T-Mac and the Magic. After missing two weeks of action and the last five games of the regular season with a sprained MCL, Wallace was a little rusty early in the series.

But thanks to NBA commissioner David Stern's decision to extend all playoff series to best-of-seven, the Pistons and Wallace had a chance to recover.

With Wallace getting back into game shape and the shooting of Chauncey Billups in Games 6 and 7, the No. 1-seed Pistons overcame the Magic's 3-1 lead. The Pistons became the first team since 1993, when the Heat came back against the Knicks, to overcome such a deficit and win.

Not only does Wallace have the best afro in the NBA since Artis Gilmore — he has the best work ethic of anyone in the league. He completely dominates the game, often times from the center position, despite being a mere 6-foot-9. He led the league in rebounds with more than 15 a game, and second in blocks with more than three a contest.

Supremacy in the paint, like Wallace's, demands more respect than he gets. And yes, I know he is an All-Star, and yes, I know he is the reigning Defensive Player of the Year. But Big Ben deserves mention as an MVP candidate.

Tim Duncan took his second MVP in a row this season, nudging out Kevin Garnett, while Wallace received only one first-place vote and finished eighth overall. I would like to commend the sportswriter who had the gumption to give him the first-place vote he deserved — I would have done the same.

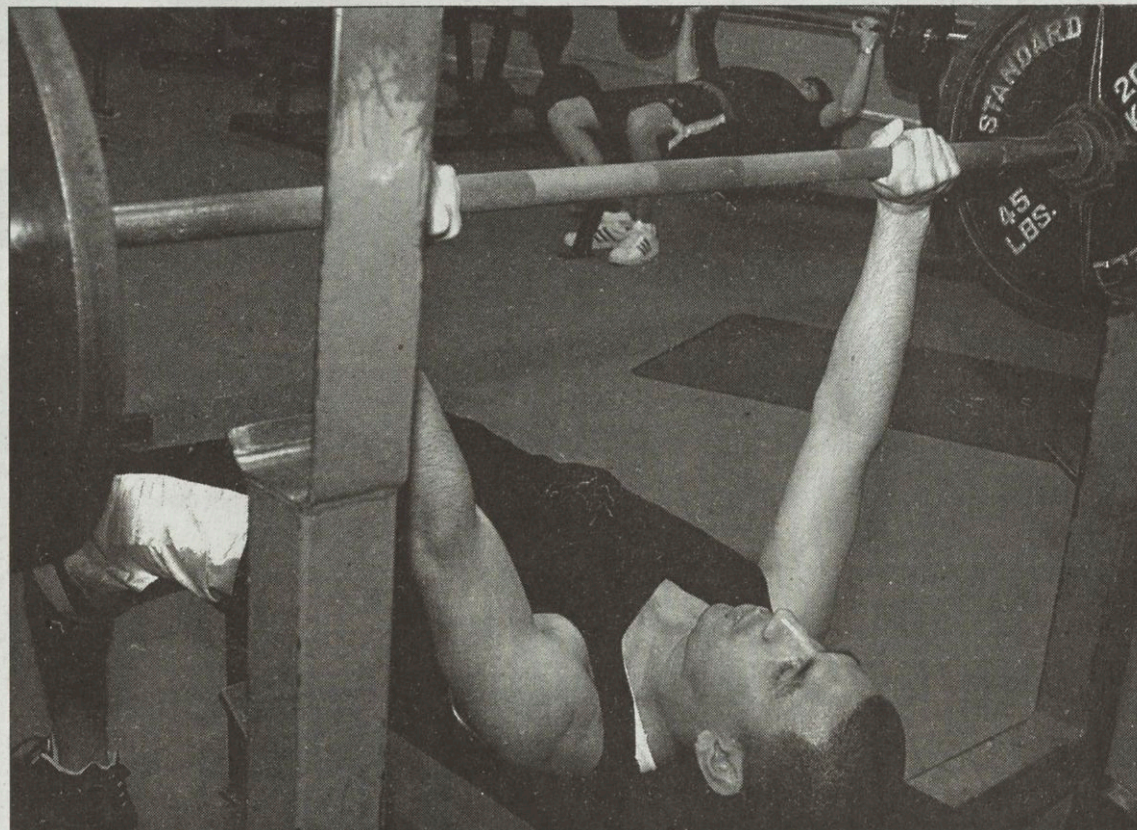

The leadership and hustle of Wallace was never more evident than in the third quarter of Game 7 Sunday. During one sequence he slammed home an offensive rebound, forced T-Mac to take a bad shot and got the rebound, then dished it to Rip Hamilton for the assist.

After a timeout, he swatted a Drew Gooden lay-up. Next time down the floor, Wallace stole the ball and drove to the hoop, getting clobbered as he made the lay-up. He made his free throw to complete an old-fashioned three-point play.

Old-fashioned — that kind of describes Wallace's game. He is a throwback to the days when your ability to play defense was just as important as your offensive skill. Many forget the adage that "defense wins championships," but not Wallace. He lives by it.

Heavy lifting could be harmful to health

MORGAN WONORSKI/THE LANTERN

Ricardo Zamarripa, a senior in English education, bench presses free weights at Larkins Hall. Recent studies have shown that lifting heavy weights can increase the chances of abdominal aortic aneurysms.

Maximum-effort lifts can cause aneurysms, which can lead to artery rupture and death

By Greg W. Moore
Lantern staff writer

An increasing number of researchers are questioning the safety of maximum-effort weightlifting. Doctors at the Yale University School of Medicine and the Stanford University Medical Center are concerned that extreme spikes in blood pressure resulting from strenuous activity can induce strokes and abdominal aortic aneurysms (AAA).

An aneurysm is a bulging section in the wall of a blood vessel that has become stretched and thin. The bulge causes slowed blood flow and eventually blood clots. Exercises such as weightlifting cause increased blood pressure, and when an aneurysm is present, the additional pressure could lead to a potentially fatal rupture of the aorta.

"It's the increase in the blood pressure, the pressure in the vessel, that causes the problem," said Dr. John A. Lombardo, medical director of the OSU Sports Medicine Center. "Physical activity has been shown to be a problem; weightlifting would be a greater problem."

Light and moderate weightlifting, such as an amount that can be lifted in four sets of 15, presents little concern. Recent studies have demonstrated that lifting can lower blood pressure, combat diabetes and strengthen bones.

However, heavy weight lifters put themselves at great risk during maximum-effort lifting because of the dangerously-high blood pressure levels they achieve.

Weightlifting does not directly contribute to the development of an aneurysm, but it and other activities that raise blood pressure improve the chances of health problems resulting from a bulge in the aorta.

"There must be some underlying problem that causes the aneurysms to begin with," Lombardo said.

According to a study conducted by American Sports Data Inc., participation in weightlifting increased by 12 percent from 1998 to 2001. This statistic, coupled with the fact that 75 percent of the individuals diagnosed with AAA are not experiencing symptoms, creates a need for greater health awareness and physical screening.

California Fitness administers a physical activity readiness questionnaire to assess potential health risks. If a person indicates the presence of a heart condition or high blood pressure, then a doctor's release is mandatory before commencing a workout routine, said Phil Hile, personal training manager at California Fitness.

Hile, the former cardiac rehabilitation director, said the health club does not take chances.

"We check blood pressure at the beginning of a workout, immediately cease exercise at the first warning signs — all the common-sense things," Hile said.

The strength coach for the OSU football team, Allan Johnson, has never had to deal with an athlete suffering from an aneurysm and does not want that to change.

"Athletic trainers and medical staff, before we embark upon a training program, make sure we're tuned into our athletes and are cautious," Johnson said.

The doctors and trainers keep all of the coaches up to speed and provide background information for each player.

A look at AAA

Symptoms

- Pain in the chest, abdomen, or lower back, possibly spreading to groin, buttocks, or legs
- Pulsating sensation in the abdomen
- Back pain, if the aneurysm is pressing on the spine
- Fever or weight loss, if it is an inflammatory aortic aneurysm

Cause

- Atherosclerosis-hardening of the arteries
- Genetics-person may be born with weaker tissues in the aortic wall (congenital weakness) such as Marfan's syndrome or Ehlers-Danlos syndrome
- Inflammation
- Aging-the aorta naturally becomes less elastic as a person gets older

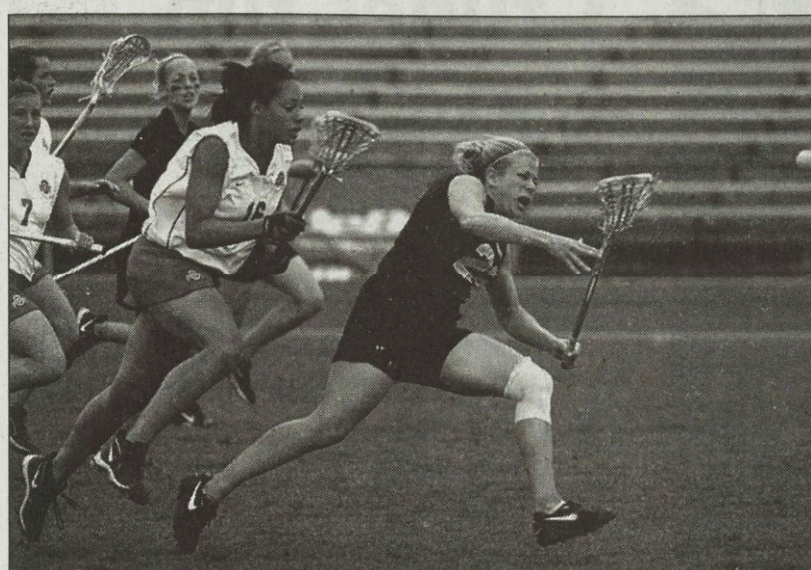

Risk factors

- Being male
- smoking
- family history
- obesity
- diabetes

Possible solutions

- Working out at sub-maximum levels
- Proper breathing technique (avoiding Val Salva manuevre)
- Stopping when experiencing dizziness, headaches, or symptoms

ADAM GODFREY/THE LANTERN

Ohio State midfielder Brandie Williams, 16, and the rest of the Buckeye women's lacrosse team hope to get past Duke in the first round of the NCAA Championships tomorrow.

Lacrosse hopes to not be done after Duke

By Mike Price
Lantern sports writer

As the Ohio State women's lacrosse team was heading out to the practice fields Monday, senior midfielder Shannon Wilson got caught up in a discussion with one of her teammates while tying her shoes.

After exchanging small talk, Wilson stood up and said, "It's the biggest game of our lives."

The game is a first-round match-up with fourth-seeded Duke (13-4) tomorrow at 3 p.m. in the NCAA Division I Women's Lacrosse Championship.

"One and done" is what many people have come to call the tournament, referring to the pressure to win because it's single elimination for all 16 teams.

"Everybody here is ready to work," Wilson said. "We're going to do what we need to do, strategize and hopefully things will play out."

This will be the second year in a row the No. 10 Buckeyes (13-3, 5-1 ALC) get a shot to play for the national championship after they accepted an at-large bid Sunday night. An 11-7 first-round loss at Notre Dame last season was the only other time OSU has seen tournament action.

"We're definitely excited to get another opportunity to go," said OSU coach Sue Stimmel. "I think the team realizes it's not a prize just to go, that you want to win when you're there, too."

OSU's entry into the NCAA tournament was due in part to its stellar play against top competition this past season. An 8-2 record versus teams ranked in the Intercollegiate Women's Lacrosse Coaches Association Poll, including a 3-1 mark against top-10 teams, and becoming the outright American Lacrosse Champion following Thursday's win over Ohio University all helped to propel the Buckeyes into the tournament.

OSU ended the season tied with Penn State (5-1) in the ALC standings, but the Buckeyes held the edge in head-to-head competition after beating the Nittany Lions 10-9 on April 27.

Buckeye attacker Tracey Bounds said although OSU won the ALC, advancing in the tournament is now the major hurdle the team is focused on overcoming.

"Getting past the first round is definitely one of our goals since the beginning of the season," she said.

"We were supposed to win the conference, which we did, get ranked in the Top 10, which we were, and our last goal is to get past the first round, so it would be a huge disappointment if we don't."

OSU's opponent is no stranger to the NCAA tournament as Duke has competed in it for the past six seasons and has reached the quarterfinals four straight years. To make matters worse, the Buckeyes must travel to Durham, N.C. to face the No. 4 Blue Devils, where they went 7-1 on their home field inside Koskinen Stadium.

"I think something we have going for us is that Duke is going to be looking on to the next round and is not really going to be too worried about us," Wilson said. "So that's going to be playing in our favor, but I think they're in for a big surprise."

Despite the Blue Devils' impressive resume of NCAA appearances and consistently being ranked in the Top 5, OSU completed the 2003 schedule with the best season in the program's eight-year history. A 13-win season is the best ever by a Buckeye team, and in the midst of its breakout year, they've become road warriors, going a perfect 8-0 on the road this season.

"It helps that we're successful on the road going into this, being a road game," Stimmel said. "We have our work cut out for us, but I don't see anything that we can't handle."

Tomorrow will be the first meeting between OSU and Duke. But with all the scouting and preparation teams do for each other, the Buckeyes should not be caught off-guard by what the Blue Devils do strategically.

"Every game our coaches do a good job of getting us ready, watching film, actually going over their attack so the defense is well aware," said midfielder Kelly Cook. "Then the attack will work on how their defense plays."

Stimmel said she and her coaching staff have watched a couple of videotapes of the Blue Devils and think it will be a great game.

"Their goalie reminds me of Penn State's goalie, which we were successful against," she said.

"Duke's defense reminds me of North Carolina's defense, which we were successful against, and then their offense reminds me a little bit of Penn State's. So it's a combination of teams we've seen over the year, but we've been successful against these teams."

OSU to return to Tempe with high hopes

By Melinda Crowley
Lantern sports writer

Another group of Buckeyes are hoping a visit to Tempe, Ariz. will end with the same good fortune the national champion football team encountered, as the Ohio State women's golf team travels southwest this week for the NCAA West Regional tournament.

While the national championship title game is still weeks away, regional competition will determine who earns a ticket to the coveted tournament. But right now, the No. 16 Buckeyes are only focusing on their first hurdle, as they tee off tomorrow to begin the three-day West Regional tournament.

"We're playing very well right now, and I'm confident that we will do well if we play up to our potential," said OSU women's golf coach Therese Hession, who was recently named Big Ten coach of the year. "If we keep doing what we've been doing at this level, then we can't have a bad round. There's not a team there that doesn't deserve to be competing at this tournament."

The Buckeyes, fresh off from claiming their second consecutive Big Ten title, have faced eight of the tournament's 20 teams during the regular season, posting a 9-9 record. Fifth-seeded OSU must finish in the top eight of its region to advance to the NCAA Championship being held May 20-23 in West Lafayette, Ind.

Entering as the No. 3 seed, Oklahoma State could pose the greatest threat to OSU, having defeated the Buckeyes in five of the teams' six regular-season meetings — suffering its lone defeat at their last meeting. Ranked second in the nation, No. 1 seed West Coast Conference champion Pepperdine tops the field.

While five Buckeyes will be participating in the event, only the four lowest scores of each day will count toward the team record. This marks OSU's tenth overall and ninth consecutive appearance at a regional tournament.

"We've been playing well all season, so I'm expecting to do well at regionals," said junior co-captain Allison Hanna. "We don't really worry about the other teams too much. We've been playing against a lot of them all year, so we know what we have to do."

Hanna will be joined in competition by sophomores Kristen White and Lindsay Knowlton, as well as redshirt freshman Jennifer Selfinger and true freshman Allyson Harvie.

Hession, an 11-year veteran of the LPGA tour, has been utilizing both her career experience and familiarity with the par 72 Karsten Golf Course to prepare her squad for the conditions they will encounter in Arizona.

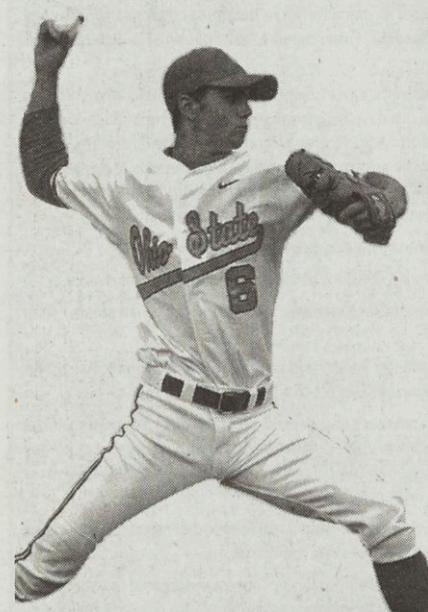

"I just want us to focus on what we have control over," Hession said. "Golf is a very independent sport. You're not really competing so much against other teams and players as you are competing with yourself, so to win we'll really need to concentrate on the aspects of our play that we can control."

The team held special practices last week to work on developing skills that will be useful on the unfamiliar Arizona fairway, which features plenty of mounds, undulations and elevated greens. The ladies added side-hill shots to their usual schedule of chipping, putting and short game practice to prepare for the rugged terrain.

After beginning their season with a second-place finish at the international Topy Cup in Tokyo, the Buckeyes went on to face competition in North Carolina, California, Florida, Texas and Georgia. The young team agrees that this year's increase in national exposure has given them a taste of what to expect.

"We had a very highly-ranked national schedule this year, so we've already faced many of these teams and some other very impressive competition," Hession said. "We're not afraid of any of them heading into the tournament. That was the purpose of having such a tough schedule all season. We have a lot of respect for the other teams, but this way we're not so in awe of them that we can't play well."

Stelarc, a performance artist giving seminars at OSU this quarter, is shown here suspending himself with wires in a process that involves inserting hooks into the skin.

Visiting performance artist Stelarc explores body and motion with computer technology

By Keli Gangl
Lantern staff writer

He has suspended himself by hooks, turned his stomach into a sculpture, given himself a third hand and created a thinking replica of his head — all in the name of art.

Australian-born artist Stelarc has been performing art since the early 1970s. He said he has always loved art, even as a child, but when he arrived at art school he realized that many of the other students were much better at drawing and painting than he was.

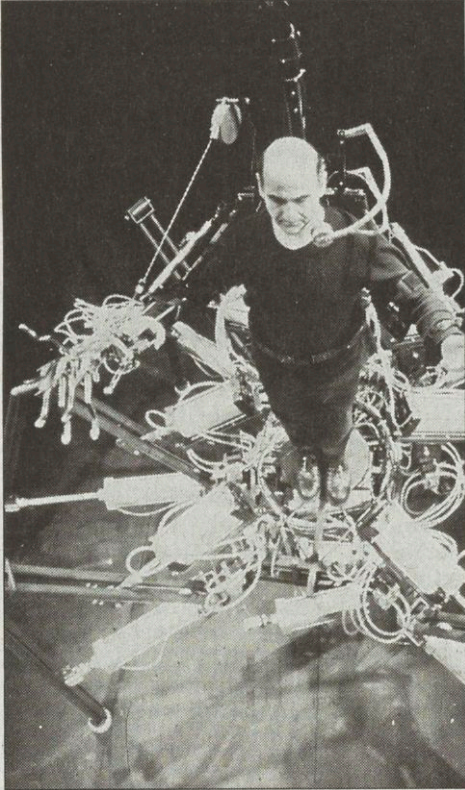

That was when he turned to performance art, which he uses to make a statement about the human form using the latest in computer and robotic technology.

"I've always wanted to explore the parameters of the body, the idea of the body being obsolete," he said.

Stelarc's works have included a series of suspensions of the body, a stomach sculpture, a third hand, an involuntary arm, a six-legged walking robot and a prosthetic head.

"He provokes and engages us directly in the important cultural dialogue about what it means to be human today," said art professor Amy Youngs, who co-wrote the grant that brought Stelarc to Ohio State to conduct seminars during spring quarter.

His suspension performances and stomach sculptures have used the body as a tool for art. The suspensions involve the insertion of hooks into the skin, allowing the body to hang and spin in different positions for periods ranging from a few minutes to hours. For the stomach sculpture, Stelarc developed a small device that could open, close, extend and retract, which he inserted down his esophagus into his stomach.

The artist integrates robotic "exoskeletons" into his performance to examine the purpose of the human body.

While inside, the device recorded images from inside the stomach.

"It became an aesthetic addition to the body. The body was a container for the sculpture," Stelarc said.

The incorporation of technology into art is what has made Stelarc stand out from other artists.

"He engages the use of technology and the sciences, but also questions what the science is and what the technology means," said associate professor of art Ken Rinaldo.

Through the development of a third hand and an extended arm, Stelarc used prosthesis to externally demonstrate the internal body with stunts such as writing one word simultaneously with three hands. Other performances involved one hand being extended by a mechanical arm while the other was involuntarily controlled by electrical impulses.

Some of Stelarc's most recent works use robotics to experiment with the concept of the body. With his Exoskeleton and the not-yet-completed Hexapod, the body controls a robotic body extension.

"With the Exoskeleton, the movements (are) involuntary, but with the Hexapod, the artist will be controlling the movements of the robot," Stelarc said.

Youngs said Stelarc has been very influential, as his artwork thoroughly investigates the effects of technology and the possible future effects on human bodies. One of his projects that explores the future is a prosthetic head. The computer-generated head has all the physical features of the artist's head, and is able to engage in intelligent conversation with humans. It has an artificial intelligence that is able to answer most questions typed into a computer by observers.

"Eventually, we would like to create a head that can recognize shapes, colors and even sounds," Stelarc said.

The grant which brought Stelarc to OSU, the Future Tech: Media Arts and Culture Colloquium, was written by Youngs and Rinaldo to attract artists who are exploring the relationship of technology and human culture. "He is a fantastic inspiration to the students," Rinaldo said.

Stelarc will give a presentation to demonstrate his art on May 29 at the Mershon Auditorium. Because of the technological component of his work, Stelarc said he wants to reach out to engineering students and others outside the school of art.

CD REVIEW

Johnson's laid-back tunes run 'On and On'

By Scott Creighton
Lantern arts writer

Jack Johnson's follow-up to 2001's critically acclaimed "Brushfire Fairytales" is a laid-back, flowing album, largely full of acoustic material.

The songs on Johnson's "On and On" run the spectrum from radio-friendly pop a la Marcy Playground and island-themed reggae songs, to ballads and folk-tinged blues. The songs are short, with only three breaking the three-minute mark.

The album isn't any kind of epic, and the music becomes monotonous. Basically, the songs keep the same beat, and the main parts are repetitious, with little thrown into the mix to keep it fresh or encourage repeated listening.

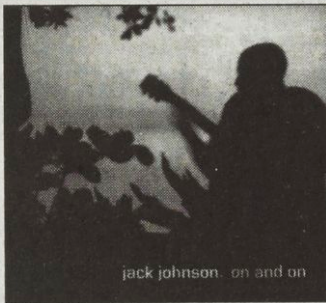

"Times Like These," the opening track, isn't exactly a song that would make a listener want to explore the rest of the album; Johnson plods through the song, mellow to the point that he sounds as if he's dozing off. Much of the same can be said for "The Horizon Has Been Defeated," which drifts off into a mild, Marley-esque sound. Johnson's voice is bland and tiring here, and he lacks the enthusiasm to effectively pull off the reggae style he's exploring. The result is a half-hearted endeavor that sounds as if Johnson only put it on the album to make listeners think he is more versatile than he really is.

One of the stand-out tracks from "On and On" is "Fall Line," which tosses a nod back to the acoustic-based rock of the late 60s. When Johnson cries "We fell across the fall line/there ain't nothing sacred anymore," modern folk blends with sounds of the past to show the listener that certain kinds of music are timeless and still have relevance in today's society. Unfortunately, the brightest spot on the album is also the shortest one, and it really doesn't last long enough to invoke the kind of thought that the song could be capable of.

The closing track, "Symbol in My Driveway," is also worth noting because of its smooth, crisp surf sounds, which draw heavily from the Beach Boys. The main rhythm of the song is a simple but effective slowed blues-boogie theme that, combined with the background sounds of the surf, whisks the listener away to a relaxed, trouble-free world. But, like "Fall Line," the song just doesn't last long enough for a satisfying listen.

Jack Johnson is a surfing-hero-turned-musician, and his music definitely reflects the island mentality. There is a laid-back, cool vibe on most of the songs, but this may also be the album's biggest downfall. Johnson plays the mellow part up a little too much, and with the repetitive music, it tends to make for a tedious listening experience. Out of 16 tracks, there should be far more songs that stand out. For his next release, Johnson will have to break some new ground and try things that haven't been explored by other artists; there just isn't anything new on this album. After awhile all the songs start to sound the same, despite Johnson's musical experimentation.

With summer just around the corner, this album could easily be enjoyed on late nights while hanging out with friends. Those looking for something meaningful, though, would be better off checking out new releases by singers-songwriters Pete Dinklage and Ben Harper; artists who create music in a similar genre, but pull it off with much better results.

State of the art

This is the second article in a three-day series which intends to examine the convergence of art and technology. Tomorrow, The Lantern will preview "Supernova³," COSI's current high-tech art exhibit.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

The Lantern will not publish illegal advertising or the advertising of illegal products or services. The Lantern reserves the right to reject advertising that denigrates individuals, groups or organizations based on race, gender, nationality, ethnicity, religion, mental or physical capacity, veteran's status, age or sexual orientation. The Lantern Business Manager will refer questionable advertising to the Publications Committee of the School of Journalism and Communication. The committee will recommend a decision on whether to publish the advertising to the Director of the school.

- Complete name, address and telephone number for each advertiser is required.
- Copy must be furnished by noon three days before publication, except for special publications whose deadlines will be announced.
- An advertisement is required to occupy at least as many inches in height as columns in width. Any advertisement exceeding 18 inches in height will be considered a "full column" (21 inches) advertisement and charged accordingly.
- Make-goods and adjustments will be considered for those advertisements only where errors occur in (a) business or group name, address, or phone number, (b) item price or (c) date, time or place of event. The error must be solely the fault of the Lantern. Adjustments will not exceed the cost of the advertisement and will be based on the portion of the advertisement nullified by the error. Minor spelling errors will not qualify for adjustment. Complaints must be registered with the Business Manager within 45 days of publication to qualify; otherwise the advertiser accepts full responsibility.
- Guaranteed position is sold at the Business Manager's discretion.
- A composition charge may apply to any changes, revisions or cancellations made after deadline.
- No proof will be furnished for any advertisement received after deadline or for an ad smaller than seven column inches.
- If the Lantern finds it necessary to stop contracted advertising because of nonpayment, the advertising agreement will be violated and the advertiser subject to a "re-bill" fee.
- The Lantern reserves the right to require prepayment for advertising, or to reject advertising, if the advertiser is delinquent in payment, or if the advertiser's credit is impaired. Advertisers must prepay all advertising until a satisfactory credit rating with the Lantern is established. A certified check or money order is required for out-of-town advertisers.
- Contract advertisers will furnish the Lantern with a "rate-holder" ad meeting contract minimums for use in any contract period for which the advertiser does not provide an ad.
- A tearsheet will be furnished for all display advertising run in the Lantern. Additional tearsheets are available (limit 15) provided the advertiser requests them from the Lantern office prior to publication.
- The advertiser agrees to indemnify and hold harmless the Ohio State University, its Board of Trustees and its officers, agents and employees from and against any and all loss, cost and expense, including reasonable attorney fees, resulting from the publication by the Lantern of the advertiser's advertisement.
- Advertisers in the Lantern agree that they will not represent themselves in any way as being endorsed by the Ohio State University.
- A mail-order advertiser is required to submit a sample "proof-of-product" prior to publication.
- Advertisers must request the return of their original ad materials; the Lantern will dispose of such materials 60 days after their first publication.
