DeSantis indicted on tax evasion

Three-year investigation leads to counts

By Melissa Eisen
Lantern staff writer

Albert J. DeSantis, a primary owner of rental properties on campus and in the Columbus area, was indicted Thursday on nine counts involving tax evasion, a U.S. Attorney said.

The real estate developer could face up to 27 years of imprisonment and fines totalling $900,000 if convicted, D. Michael Crites said.

DeSantis, 45, was indicted on seven counts of aiding and assisting the preparation of false tax returns for five employees, Crites said. The employees have not been charged.

Crites would not explain why the employees were not charged. The employees named are Patricia J. Bennett, Debi L. Vaughn and Robert S. Myers. Jeffery M. Pountney and Lori L. Clark are each named in connection with two counts.

The indictment alleges that DeSantis, of 4040 W. Henderson Rd., took money without proper authority from partnerships he was in, and did not report the money, Crites said.

DeSantis also is indicted on two counts of underreporting his income. In 1982, he reported his income at $779,285, and in 1983 he reported $847,076. Crites would not comment on the exact sum DeSantis is charged with underreporting, but said it was "substantial" and is a combined amount of seven figures from 1982 and 1983.

"In terms of unreported income, this is a very sizable case," Crites said.

A three-year investigation by the Criminal Investigation Division of the Internal Revenue Service led to the indictment, Crites said.

DeSantis could not be reached Thursday. His attorney, James E. Phillips of Vorys Sater Seymour & Pease, said he instructed DeSantis not to comment.

Phillips said the indictment should not affect students who rent from DeSantis Properties.

It will be "business as usual" for DeSantis, Phillips said.

"I am quite confident that there are no plans to sell the business," he said.

Phillips said DeSantis may not be able to contribute as much time to the campus area as he did before the indictment.

Crites said within the next week there will be an arraignment and a trial date will be set.

Morgan guilty, city says

By Steve Majors
Lantern staff writer

John L. Morgan, a former aide to the mayor, violated the law when he investigated a Columbus woman who accused the mayor of sexually assaulting her in 1978, the Columbus City Council said in a report Thursday.

But because Morgan testified under immunity he cannot be prosecuted, the council said.

"It's part of our charter that a person who comes before us (to testify) is granted immunity," Councilman John P. Kennedy said.

Morgan became the target of a council inquiry in January when he admitted investigating Vicki Pardue and her family during Dana G. Rinehart's mayoral campaign in 1983.

Pardue claimed that 11 years ago, Rinehart, then Franklin County treasurer, had sexually assaulted her when she was babysitting his children. Rinehart denied the charges and was not indicted.

The council report states that Morgan attempted to discredit Pardue and her family for purely political reasons, and to help Rinehart gain the endorsement of the Fraternal Order of Police.

It also states that there is no evidence that Rinehart, city officials or the FOP directed or participated in Morgan's investigation.

The council's report cited several reasons that Morgan's activities were unlawful or improper.

●Morgan's investigation was not related to his duties as a police officer and involved the use of city property and facilities.

●Morgan did not put his name in a conspicuous place on the report, so the report violated a campaign literature law.

●The report attacks the Pardue family, members of the police department and others even though Morgan was aware his findings could have been false.

●Morgan unlawfully obtained the arrest records of certain members of the Pardue family. He also obtained and published information about Kenneth Pardue's bank accounts without Pardue's consent, a subpoena, or a search warrant. This violated a federal banking records disclosure law.

●Morgan disclosed circumstances surrounding his investigation of Pardue at a time when she was 13 years old. This disclosure violated a juvenile privacy law.

Half of USG ballots vacant, write-in candidates needed

By Jannette Dugan
Lantern staff writer

Although 16 out of 32 Undergraduate Student Government Assembly seats do not have any official candidates running, students can still qualify as write-ins.

Matt Hecmanczuk, director of the student elections committee, said students wishing to run as write-in candidates do not have to inform USG they are running, but he said it would be best if they called the USG office to obtain more information about the Assembly.

"Just because they choose to be write-ins, doesn't mean complaints can't be filed against them," he said. "They have to follow election rules also."

If Assembly positions are not filled by write-in candidates, representatives will be appointed by USG after the election.

Presidential teams who are seeking office had to meet certain requirements stated in the election bylaws in order to qualify to run on the ballot.

The election bylaws state:

●To be a candidate, a student must be a registered undergraduate student, who is not on disciplinary or academic warning or probation from the first day of campaigning through the first day of election terms.

●Each team must obtain at least 1,000 signatures from registered OSU students in order to appear on the ballot.

●Each team has a limit of $800 for campaign expenditures.

●The period for posting and distributing any campaign material shall begin at 8 a.m. on the first day of spring quarter and material must be removed within 48 hours following the close of elections.

According to the USG constitution, the new president has a non-voting seat on the Student Assembly and the University Senate, but acts as a voting student representative on the University's Steering Committee. The president also serves on various other boards and committees for USG and has the power to remove any administrative assistant or department directors from office, if necessary.

The vice president's duties include assuming the responsibilities of the president if he or she is incapacitated and making sure that all committee representatives attend all meetings and file reports on issues discussed at those meetings. The vice president also convenes these committee representatives in a general assembly at least twice each quarter.

Election complaints can be filed anytime throughout the elections until April 14 at 5 p.m. by contacting Steve Mortinger, university court chief justice.

Hecmanczuk said complaints should be placed Mortinger's mailbox in the College of Law.

"There haven't been any problems as of yet with complaints or candidates not following rules," Hecmanczuk said.

Elections will run from April 11-12 on regional campuses and from April 12-13 on main campus.

AIDS quilt brought to Columbus; 50 central Ohioan's names added

By Sonia Kelly
Lantern staff writer

Trish Howley knows how it feels to lose a loved one to AIDS. Howley's uncle died two years ago.

In the memory of her uncle, Howley, along with her mother and daughter, designed and contributed a 3-by-6 panel of multicolored quilting to the NAMES Project.

The panel has the name "Jerry" stitched on it in navy blue.

His name joined 2,049 others in the NAMES Project quilt that were displayed Thursday at the Woody Hayes Athletic Center.

"It was a project that we could do together and work through the grief and anger about his death," she said.

The quilt was started two years ago in San Francisco as a memorial to Americans who died of AIDS and to illustrate the human toll of the epidemic.

Earl Simmons, who was diagnosed as having AIDS in March 1988, said he traveled from Cleveland to attend the ceremony.

Simmons said he came to the opening as a symbol of support for many of his friends who have died of AIDS and for people who are currently suffering from the disease.

He said since he has contracted the disease, his life has dramatically changed. Simmons said he has lost his job, friends and has experienced the stigma that people associate with AIDS.

"My family has been extremely supportive," he said. "I am one of the lucky ones because there are many who lose their families."

Lynette Molnar, local coordinator for the display, said 2,000 of the 13,000 panels were displayed at the center. Howley's panel and 49 others were added to the quilt Thursday to commemorate Central Ohioans who died from AIDS.

These panels will travel on with the quilt to Boston as it continues its national tour, Molnar said.

As the quilt was being unfolded, in front of about 3,000 people, the names of those memorialized on the panels, were read by Sen. David Hobson, R-Springfield, Archie Griffin, special assistant to the director of athletics, Cynthia Cecil-Lazarus, city council member, Janet Jackson, municipal court judge, Joel Teaford, Board of Trustees member and AIDS volunteers.

"I think we all know what a great problem AIDS is in the country and I think it's important that a broad range of people be involved and we not try to say that the problem is confined to one sector of society," Teaford said. "That's why I am here."

Inspired by the American folk tradition of quilting and sewing bees, the quilt was first exhibited on Capital Mall in Washington, D.C., in October of 1987, Molnar said.

The panels are made from pieces of denim, suede, silk, gingham and other fabrics. Some panels had photographs, jewelry, stuffed animals and hats sewn on, she said.

Molnar said the response to the NAMES Project by Columbus area residents has been "overwhelmingly supportive." And though the AIDS epidemic in Columbus is not as severe as it is in New York, Los Angeles or San Francisco, bringing the quilt here may convince people of the need to practice safe sex.

"If they come to see the quilt, then I think that it will help them make different choices about their own personal lives and hopefully in the end save someone's life," she said.

Rod McDaniel/the Lantern

A section of the NAMES project quilt that will be on display at the Woody Hayes Athletic Center until Sunday.

Molnar said she thinks that it is important for the quilt to be displayed on campus because more students will go to the Woody Hayes Center than if it were displayed anywhere else in the city.

Goals of the NAMES Project are to raise funds for local agencies that provide care and services to people with AIDS as well as increasing public awareness about the disease, Molnar said.

Kate Capps, marketing representative at University Press and member of the University Volunteers Committee, said the quilt is the culmination of more than a month's activities on AIDS awareness and education sponsored by the university and various student organizations.

Pete Rose Weather

Pete was not in a very good mood. Besides being constantly hounded by the media, a joker was leaving phone messages on his door telling him to call Jerry Tarkanian or Art Schlichter.

Pete scratched his head and remembered why else he was mad. "I can't believe that pencil-neck Letterman," Pete said. "How can he make fun of my hair?"

To make matters worse, Pete looked out the window and realized he'd lost the bet. You see, he and Marge love to bet on the weather. Whoever came closest would win the $5.

Pete looked outside to find ugly, gray skies. The temperature was to plummet as the day progressed, meaning the drizzle would change to a wet slush by the afternoon.

"Aw, who cares anyway," he said as he flung an autographed photo of Bob Trumpy across the room.

Suddenly Pete realized that he would no longer bet on the weather. "It's difficult," he thought, "I'd much rather hurdle into Fosse again."

Pete would tell his tipster the news — a man he only knew as the Coz.

NEWS BRIEFS

Command plans B-1B bomber tests

OFFUTT AIR FORCE BASE, Neb. (AP) — The Strategic Air Command plans another round of tests on a sample of B-1B bombers before clearing the planes for flight, an air command spokesman said.

The command grounded the 97 planes Monday after a Texas bomber crew noticed an internal fuel tank on one of the bombers was punctured.

Command officials found no malfunction on the first inspection of a sample of 25 of the planes, said Maj. Dennis Pierson on Thursday.

"We've completed the first inspection and now the engineers are developing another test," said Maj. Dennis Pierson on Thursday.

Pentagon officials had said the fuel tank damaged during a routine pre-flight check at Dyess Air Force Base appeared to have been punctured when the mechanism that sweeps the bomber's wings back and forth malfunctioned.

The inspections are focusing on the wing-sweeper gear sub assembly, command officials said. It's the gear box inside the swing wings that gives the plane the power to sweep the wings back for supersonic speeds.

Pierson said command engineers were developing a test for a component of the system that regulates hydraulic pressure.

Pierson said he did not know when the new round of tests would be completed or when the planes would be cleared for flight.

Government wants to start sex survey

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government wants to ask 2,300 Americans when they last had sex, what they did and whether their partner was a man or a woman.

That's not all. Scientists want to know other intimate details of respondents' sexual lives, such as: How often do they have sex? Was a condom used? How often do they masturbate?

Scientists and public health experts recognize these are sensitive matters, but they say the information would paint a comprehensive picture of Americans' sexual behavior essential to the fight against AIDS, the lethal disease spread by sexual contact.

Such answers also would help

Anchorage Daily News cops Pulitzer for public service

NEW YORK (AP) — The Anchorage Daily News won the 1989 Pulitzer Prize for public service Thursday for a series on alcoholism and suicide among native Alaskans. The Philadelphia Inquirer and the Chicago Tribune each won two prizes.

The public service award "will give us a chance to reiterate the point of the stories done in the first place: we've got a serious problem up here," said Pat Dougherty, city editor of the Daily News. The newspaper also won the public service award in 1976 for a series on the Teamsters union in Alaska.

Donald L. Barlett and James B. Steele of the Inquirer won the national reporting prize for a 15-month investigation of provisions in the Tax Reform Act of 1986 that gave special tax breaks to many politically connected individuals and businesses. The Pulitzer Board said the series aroused so much public indignation that Congress rejected such breaks.

The Inquirer's David Zucchino won in feature writing for his series "Being Black in South Africa," described as "richly com-PELLING" by the judges. The Pulitzer Board had switched his entry from the international reporting category to features.

It was the 16th Pulitzer in 14 years for the Inquirer and the second such prize for Barlett and Steele, who won in 1975 for reporting on the Internal Revenue Service.

The Chicago Tribune's winners were Clarence Page in the commentary category, for his columns on local and national affairs, and Lois Wille for editorial writing.

The Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal was awarded the prize for general news for coverage of a church bus crash that claimed 27 lives and its examination of the accident's cause.

Bill Dedman of the Atlanta Journal and Constitution won the Pulitzer for investigative reporting for "The Color of Money," an investigation of alleged racial discrimination by the city's lending institutions. After the series, a consortium of banks announced programs for lending at least $67 million at low interest, especially in black neighborhoods.

The Pulitzer for explanatory journalism went to reporter David Hanners, photographer William Snyder and artist Karen Blesser of The Dallas Morning News for their report on a 1986 plane crash and its implications for air safety.

Edward Humes of The Orange County (Calif.) Register won the prize for specialized reporting for his coverage of the military establishment in Southern California.

The Pulitzer Board awarded two prizes in international reporting. One went to Glenn Frankel of The Washington Post for reporting from the Middle East; the other went to Bill Keller of The New York Times for coverage of the Soviet Union.

C.K. Higgins of the Chicago Sun-Times won for his editorial cartoons.

Short videos about the NAMES Project are running in the Drake and Ohio Unions, Lincoln and Morril Towers, Larkins Hall and add/drop areas, Capps said.

The student body has taken an active role in planning some of the activities, she said.

The Undergraduate Student Government raised enough funds to create 5,000 buttons that are being distributed on campus as a way to make people aware of the NAMES Project, Capps said.

"Some of the faculty members have been incorporating AIDS education into their courses," she said.

Capps also encourages disabled students to attend the quilt display. Wheelchairs donated by University Hospital will be available to those in need and the Woody Hayes Center is wheelchair accessible, she said.

Capps sees the quilt as a spark and a good place to start thinking about the ramifications of the disease.

"No one will remain unmoved if they go to see the quilt," she said. "It's very easy for us to say it's someone else's problem, but the quilt is an extremely human form, from which one can draw some enlightenment."

mond said the purpose of the inquiry was not to attack the Rinehart administration, but to show that a misuse of power had taken place.

"I don't agree that it was an investigation of the mayor," Hammond said. "It was an investigation of John Morgan."

Gunther Lahm, one of Morgan's attorneys, declined to comment.

Although the report states that Morgan acted alone, Hammond said the council's inquiry indicates that several people knew about the existence of Morgan's report before September 1988, when Rinehart officials acknowledged that they had copies of it.

"It's clear, based on the testimony of some people, that representatives in the Rinehart campaign knew of the existence of the report," Hammond said. "We were never able to determine who that was."

The council's report cites testimony from Michael Curtin, a reporter for the Columbus Dispatch, along with Richard Kim-mons and Mary Webster, reporters for the now-defunct Columbus Citizen-Journal.

Curtin testified before the council that he received a copy of the report from a high-ranking member of Rinehart's campaign staff in 1983. Kimmons and Webster testified that they interviewed Rinehart on September 29, 1983 and showed him the report.

Rinehart said he did not recall discussing a report with the reporters, according to the council's findings.

Hammond said it could never be proven that Rinehart knew about the report. He added, "I would suspect that if it were given to a high ranking member of my staff, I would have to have some knowledge of it."

Although Morgan was granted immunity from criminal suits, he is named in a civil lawsuit by Vicki Pardue's stepmother, Linda Pardue. She is suing Morgan for an undisclosed amount in a suit that also names Rinehart, the City of Columbus, and Franklin County.

The suit states that Rinehart and Morgan, with full knowledge of city officials, conspired to invade the privacy of the Pardue family.

Center designers vie for panel nod, money

By Lois Wright
Lantern staff writer

Two of three designers made their final bids Thursday to win the Downtown Convention Center Design Competition held at Mer-shon Auditorium.

Designs from the Trott-Eisenman architectural team and Holt Hinshaw Pfau Jones Architects submitted their ideas to a 10-member jury and a crowd of about 200 spectators. The third design, by Acock Schlegel Architects, will be presented at 9 p.m. today at Mer-shon.

The jury will then decide on a winner and submit its recommendation on Tuesday to the Franklin County Convention Facilities Authority.

The jury includes three members of the convention facilities authority, a member of the North Market Commission, a member of the Italian Village Commission, an operational representative, a visual arts representative and three professionals.

"The jury was chosen to be a representation of the Columbus community," said Linda S. Readey, planning coordinator for the center.

Readey said even if the authority does not decide to use the recommendation, the winner will still get a $245,000 award. The losing teams will receive $45,000 each under the rules of the design contest, sponsored by Leslie H. Wexner, founder and chairman of The Limited.

Dan Graveline, consultant for the Trott-Eisenman team (Richard Trott and Partners, of Columbus, and Eisenman Architects, of New York), emphasized the function of the center over the architecture during his presentation.

"A convention center consists of a basic box (exposition hall) that includes several smaller boxes (meeting rooms) and a main entryway to the box," he said.

Graveline said the most important thing he has learned from this contest is that the perfect building has not yet been built.

Peter Eisenman said his center represents a new style of architecture.

"It is a new architecture that is non-monumental and non-static, unlike earlier architecture that was built for only the higher class of societies," he said.

Eisenman said this design would set Columbus apart because it would be "a world class image that has never been seen and may never be seen again."

The Trott-Eisenman team concluded their presentation with a laser light show, as an example of the art that would be included in the center. The light show was the only event that prompted the audience to applaud.

Mark Yonosko, a junior from Columbus majoring in industrial design, said the Trott-Eisenman design is more "user friendly" than the Pfau Jones building. Yonosko also said the curvilinear design of the Trott-Eisenman building fits in better with downtown Columbus.

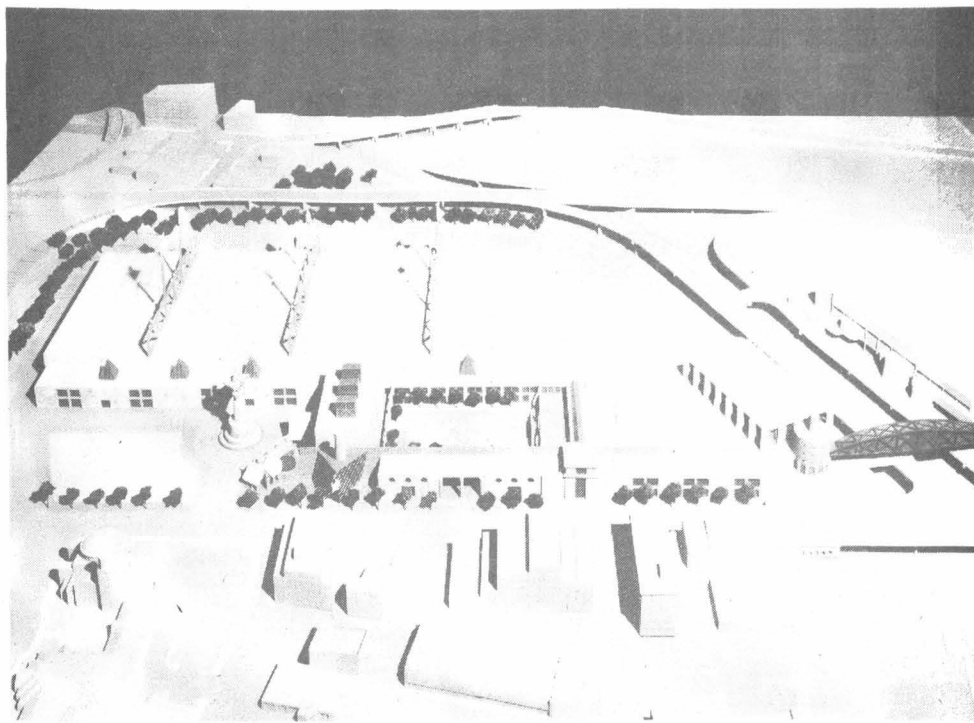

Representatives for Holt Hinshaw Pfau Jones, of San Francisco (working with John E. Foster and Associates, of Columbus), said their design would give a sense of respect to the Columbus community.

"Our building is about exhibiting things," said John E. Foster.

The team explained their futuristic design by using a mechanized model and a slide show they said symbolized the landing of a spaceship in downtown Columbus.

Although the Pfau Jones design has been criticized for exceeding the $80 million budget, Brian Geiser, an architecture major from Pandora, said he liked it most.

"You can't always put a price on something that is good," Geiser said. "I think this design is much more innovative than the earlier (Trott-Eisenman) one. This design is moving into the future with Columbus in mind."

be on display tonight at 9 p.m. in Mer-shon Auditorium.

Wayne Schlegel, of the Columbus-based Acock Schlegel

Architects, said the third design will include a slide lecture that will take the audience on a trip through the facility.

"Our team will emphasize the nautical image of our design," he said. "We want the jury to understand that we have just begun the design process and there will be time in the future to refine our ideas," Schlegel said.

Bush education plan unfair to students, Jennings says

By Rebecca Mugler
Lantern staff writer

The education proposal made by the Bush administration does not reflect genuine increases in grants for the neediest students, President Edward H. Jennings said Thursday before a meeting of the Ohio House Sub-Committee on Education.

Jennings said there are no proposed increases in the budget for Pell and Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants to help students with exceptional financial needs meet the inflated cost of tuition.

Rep. Thomas Sawyer, D-Ohio and Rep. James Jontz, D-Indiana met in Columbus with community leaders to discuss the possible impact of the Bush administration's proposed budget for education.

"The President has asked for a slight increase in federal funding in education over last year's appropriation," Sawyer said. "But this amount will not be sufficient to pay for an increase to maintain the cost of running programs at current levels."

The U.S. House Education and Labor Committee is holding regional hearings throughout the nation on education proposals recommended by the Bush administration for the fiscal year 1990.

Mary Haldane, director of Student Financial Aid, said although a small number of new students may still be eligible for the Pell Grant, the amount of money given to those students who need it the most will remain the same, even as the cost of room and board, books and tuition increases.

There are approximately 3,500 OSU students who receive the maximum Pell Grant and 980 students who receive the Supplemental Grant.

"Cost increases remain a reality but are not recognized, and have not been for several years in the federal government," Jennings said.

He also said the elimination of new money for the Perkins Loan Program will force the university to drop 10 percent of the borrowers from the program. There are 3,500 students currently receiving aid from this loan.

Gould blasts multi-species data

Scientist claims racial differences merely skin-deep

By Denise Affolter
Lantern staff writer

A well-known paleontologist said he wanted to argue against the old consensus that black people and Indians are of a different species than Caucasians Thursday night at Mer-shon Auditorium.

Stephan Jay Gould, a Harvard zoology professor and author, said he disagreed with scientists who support the idea of intellectual inequalities among different races.

He said these claims have never been based on valid scientific data, but there is new and exciting data indicating the invalidity of the claims.

He explained the existence of these claims saying that until recently scientific research has been done almost exclusively by privileged white males.

"There are visual differences between racial groups but they are no more than skin deep," Gould said.

President Edward H. Jennings, who introduced Gould, said Gould is "one of science's most important ambassadors to the greater public at large." He also said Gould's works reflect the necessity of interdisciplinary approaches to today's problems of imprecise thinking, bigotry and ignorance.

Gould came to OSU to deliver the Inaugural Distinguished Research Lecture, sponsored by the Office of Research and Graduate Studies and the research committee of the Council of Research and Graduate Studies.

Jack Hollander, vice president of research and graduate studies, said the purpose of the Distinguished Lecture Series is to bring some of the finest minds in research to the university.

Dick Stoddard, special assistant to the vice president of research and graduate studies, said they chose Gould to speak because he is a very well-known scientist and is of interest to both a general and specific group of people.

Gould is also the curator of invertebrate paleontology in Harvard's Museum of Comparative Zoology. He has been at Harvard since 1967.

Quilt builds AIDS support

The answer to the question of how crucial safe sex is today can be found on 2,050 panels of a quilt.

The NAMES Project Quilt is a memorial to Americans who have died of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome. Out of approximately 9,000 individuals in the United States, 2,050 names of men, women and children have been inscribed on the NAMES Project Quilt. The quilt will be on display until April 2 in the Woody Hayes Athletic Center.

The quilt brings the deadly disease to life — instead of reading statistics about the tragedy of AIDS, there are panels that represent over 2,000 individuals with one characteristic in common. They have all died of AIDS.

The project provides an incentive for the community to see AIDS for what it is — a destructive and growing threat to everyone. It is a remarkable way to communicate to society how much help is needed, as well as how widespread the disease is.

Donation jars will be passed along to provide funding for direct care programs in Columbus for local health organizations as the AIDS Task Force and merchandise such as posters and books will be sold to provide the financial means to keep the quilt alive and moving across the country.

A passive community is of no use to those individuals who actively support and understand the implications of AIDS. Whether it be through volunteer work or by donating money for research, all must step forward to do what they can.

Awareness is the first step in conquering the spread of AIDS, but more is needed. With enough support, more projects such as the NAMES Project Quilt will be formed to promote awareness, knowledge and possible a cure for the disease that has devastated society with more deaths than the Vietnam War.

TESTIFY:

Reagan won't talk

According to the attorney of former President Ronald Reagan, unless Oliver North's lawyers can show that Reagan has exclusive information that can help defend the former Marine lieutenant in his trial, Reagan should not have to testify.

Wednesday, the Justice Department echoed the attorney's reasoning by filing a brief stating that North's defense had not shown any justification to honor a subpoena for Reagan's testimony.

It is surprising that Reagan is not jumping at the opportunity to help the man whose hand he held high for his role in the Iran-contra affair, a role for which North is now being tried on 12 criminal violations.

Instead, the former president is letting a legal controversy come between himself and the man he dubbed a national hero just two years ago.

Those who side with the former president argue that limitations might be put on a president if what he said during his term could be reviewed in court after retirement. Others, however, question Reagan's immunity from testifying — does it apply to the office of the president or the person who holds it?

When Reagan applauded North's exploits, in opposition to congress and the will of the people, he turned his back on controversy and the U.S. Constitution.

Now he's turning his back on North.

Reagan should be forced to face the music and thus put an end to an unsavory moment in our government.

Nixon did in 1980 when he testified in a trial of two former FBI officials — he was also a former president.

No frisbees: Keep off the grass

The decision seems near. Athletic Director Jim Jones has said that he is leaning toward replacing the artificial turf in Ohio Stadium with grass.

Jones has said that many issues need to be considered, among them the intramural sports and recreational activities that now take place on the artificial turf.

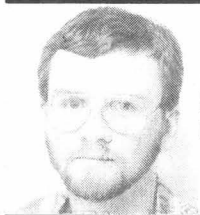

It is good to hear the Athletic Department is at least thinking about the everyday people who use the football field. I just hope they don't forget about the rest of the university community when they make the final decision.

Many times over the past several years I have played frisbee, aerobee or touch football in the stadium. In almost every case there were many other students enjoying the benefits of the athletic department's open stadium policy.

If the artificial turf is replaced with grass, the stadium field will be off-limits for almost all uses except football.

It seems clear that if grass is installed, the department will make arrangements for other sports that currently use the field, like field hockey, soccer and lacrosse, to play somewhere else.

But what arrangements will be made for the rest of us? Several times, we have been chased off the large grass fields just south of the stadium when we wanted to throw a frisbee around.

I can understand that the football coaches and players like grass better. Many coaches believe grass is safer, and reduces injuries. Apparently studies of football injuries have not been conclusive and have not proven that grass is safer. Some football fans think the game is better if played on grass.

Since the athletic department installed the artificial turf in 1970, they have had an open stadium policy that allows anybody to use the field if there are no games being played.

When vandals spray-painted parts of the field in October 1987, there was some talk of closing the stadium. At the time, superintendent of athletic facilities Michael Dolan stated the athletic department was firmly committed to the open stadium policy.

Since then, a new athletic director and head football coach have entered the scene.

According to reports, football coach

John Cooper likes the idea of grass. Cooper has said the trend is to go back to grass, and that most of the top ten college teams are playing on grass now, and perhaps Ohio State should too.

Is this a good reason to rob the rest of the university community of the benefits of Ohio Stadium? There are just too many great events other than football that are held on the field of Ohio Stadium to justify closing the stadium.

Closing the stadium might result in a major asset of Ohio State sitting idle for most of year, when there are other groups that could be using the stadium.

Jones has said that recreational activities do need to be considered. But when you really think about it, the words recreational activities apply to a lot more than frisbee and pickup football. They also apply to activities that entertain thousands and make money for the university.

University officials have expressed hopes that more concerts could be held in the stadium. What would happen to these hopes? Does grass doom Pink Floyd to being the first and last rock concert at Ohio Stadium?

When I think about this issue, it brings to mind the time that a friend and I had come to the stadium to toss a frisbee around on a warm summer evening.

We found the field full of people. Some, like us, were tossing frisbees and other objects around either for exercise or enjoyment. A couple of people were intently practicing soccer goals. But the most intense group were some small boys, about six to eight years of age.

As a couple of their dads watched from the stands, the boys played a game of football. Their determination was easy to see. Sure they wanted to win the game they were playing, but their real goal was something altogether different.

With every step, each boy was living a dream that they might play in that stadium someday. They didn't see or hear the other people on the field. All they saw and heard in their minds was the masses of people and the roar of the crowd.

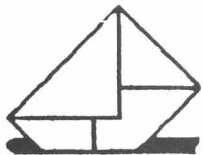

They saw a dream that they might someday play ball in Ohio Stadium.

Ohio State is always in search of ways to recruit both students and student athletes. This will become more and more important as the sizes of high school graduation classes shrink in the coming years.

The chance that any of those boys will grow up to play college football is slim.

But there is a chance that they will remember that night, when they were their own heroes in Ohio Stadium.

Letters

Remove boxes

In reply to Michael Willins editorial on March 10:

To imply that the removal of solitary confinement boxes from a classroom leads to the violent crime of rape is not only absurd, it belies Mr. Willins total lack of understanding regarding childhood discipline. I suggest the opposite is more likely. Isolate a child for hours in a box used to humiliate, lower the child's self-esteem, "control" him, and we will produce children bent on venting their frustration violently.

A teacher's job is not to control the classroom, but rather to awaken and inspire a desire to learn.

Lack of discipline is not the problem. It is merely a symptom of a hidden disease. A teacher's attempt to control is regarded by the children as a statement that "this is a contest and I'm going to win." The entire traditional teaching method currently in practice, euphemistically called "contemporary," is at fault.

"I'm the teacher. You do as I say, when I say, where I say, how I say, and only if I say. We will all read from the same inaccurate, out-dated, dry text or basil reader together. Don't read ahead or you'll spoil my anticipatory event for next week.

There will be 100 possible points for book reports. Get all the points and you get an 'A.' Well, you also learned how to write a book report but your real motivation should be for the grade. Go to your reading group — yes, you are a crow — never mind that every one in the class knows that's the lowest group."

Labeled in kindergarten! What are we doing to our children?

"Stand in line. Don't chew gum. Don't talk. Stand in line. Sit where I say. Stand in line." When was the last time your mother required these things of you at home? What employment opportunity, military service excluded, requires this behavior? School is a strange place for children. Nowhere else are they subjected to such dehumanizing procedures.

I used to wonder why I am so driven for grades, why the '80s produced the "yuppie," why there appears to be little regard for social reform or service. I don't wonder anymore. I grew up in a typical American school system. I excelled, but my motivation was never to learn. It was for recognition. I submit that our school system produced the "yuppie," a person driven by external motivation. "Get the grade, get four gold stars, get the car, get the dollar."

There is a better way, a better method where teacher and student together decide what is appropriate behavior; where the teacher supplies a stimulating environment and together the class decides what large topic to study; where all areas of the curriculum are integrated into that topic; where, much like the Honors Distinction program at OSU, individual students choose a specific area of the larger topic for in-depth study; where inquisitive minds are rewarded with knowledge; where children are given a great deal of independence; where no basil readers exist, but high quality children's literature abounds; where frustrations and conflicts are met with understanding; where disruptions in the classroom are resolved by the class; where creativity is fostered, self-esteem raised, independence encouraged and fulfillment comes with true academic accomplishment.

At OSU, this method is called Educational Programs for the Informal Classroom or the Integrated Curriculum and is an elective strand of course work in elementary education. Three of my five children attend such a school in Grove City. Highland Park Elementary in Southwestern City Schools, as well as Barrington and Wycliffe in Upper Arlington, and Indianola Avenue in Columbus are producing mature, internally motivated, creative, independent thinkers.

It's time we diagnose the disease, choose the effective remedy, and throw away our Band-Aids!

Doors close

Once again, we've been shown that all good things must come to an end. For those of you who don't know, I am referring to the closing of Gyro Chef. Actually, closing is not the best word for this situation. However, almost two weeks later, the Gyro Chef sign remains in place. Don't be fooled! The quality of the food now served there does not even deserve to be compared to that of Gyro Chef's. This is not the first time the little man has lost to Albert J. DeSantis, nor will it be the last.

Now don't fret too much. Rumor has it that the operators of the original Gyro Chef will open a new store before the beginning of Autumn quarter. The location has yet to be announced. Four or five months is a long time to be without the familiar Gyro Chef's sandwiches and fries, not to mention the employees, but those of us who were loyal customers will weather the wait. It will be easier to wait then to put more money into Mr. DeSantis' bank account.

New Chinese film sets precedents

At the end of the Chinese film "Red Sorghum," the eclipsed blood-red sun reappears and shines on a new era for China in which the communist government would not have allowed this film to be made.

But in the past few years the Chinese government has granted greater artistic freedom. It allowed "Red Sorghum" to be made despite concerns that it didn't support communist ideals enough and depicted sexuality in a manner the conservative Chinese film industry has never dared to do.

Winner of Best Film at the Berlin Film Festival in 1988, it is the first Chinese-made film to receive such high recognition, and is now being distributed for mass audiences in the United States.

The director, Zhang Yimou, is a 1982 graduate of the Beijing Film Academy and a member of the Chinese film industry's young and rebellious "Fifth Generation" that is revolutionizing Chinese cinema.

The film is based on the legend of a woman who became head of a sorghum wine distillery in the 1920's and 1930's before the Japanese invasion of China. Red sorghum is wine made from the corn-like grain sorghum.

"Red Sorghum" is well-filmed and full of sustained shots of beautiful and haunting images, and is tame by Hollywood standards because the sex and violence occur off-screen.

When the heroine (Gong Li) is seduced by her sedan-bearer (Jiang Wen) in the middle of the sorghum fields, the camera cuts to the sun beaming through the tall stalks that seem to come to life and bow, as if in prayer.

MOVIES

A cheerful wedding procession, a tense holdup, a seduction and Japanese atrocities all happen in the dark-green sorghum fields that stretch unbroken into the horizon.

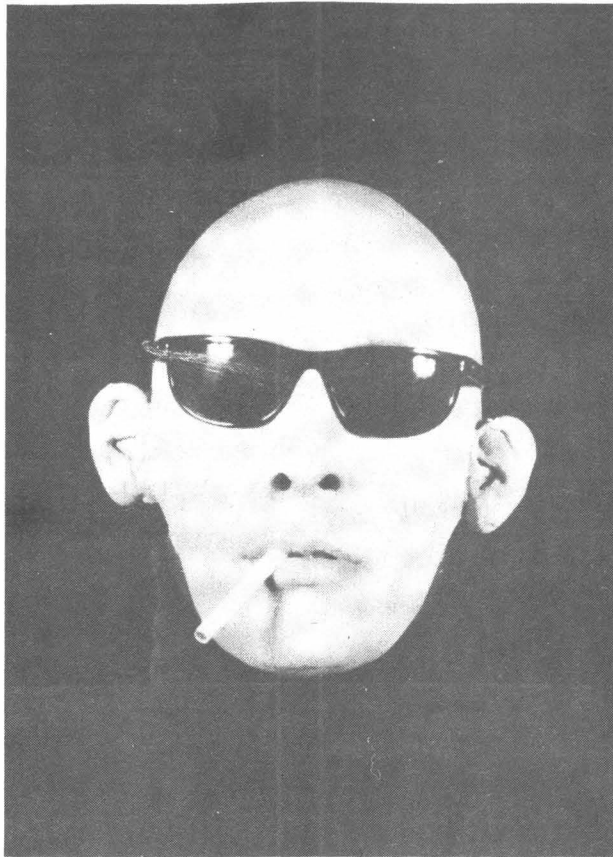

The heroine is brave and independent. When she is to be married to a leprous owner of a wine distillery, she protests. When she finally takes charge of the distillery, she offers the workers a share of the profits to stay.

In the aftermath of a pitiful raid on the Japanese infantry by the distillery workers, who hurl molotov cocktails filled with the wine, the red sorghum wine stains the corpse-strewn ground.

The only thing technically wrong with this film was the sound effects. The footsteps, door slams and punches too often sounded like a pillow case full of broken dishes being smacked with a tennis racket.

The film is in Mandarin Chinese with easy-to-read English subtitles. The film is not rated but does contain some violence.

"Red Sorghum" opens in Columbus Friday at the Drexel North, 4250 N. High St., and will run for one week.

Lou Reed grumbles on vinyl

Lou Reed

Late last year, Bobby McFerrin told listeners (about a million times), "don't worry ... be happy." On Lou Reed's "New York" album, Reed tells listeners to worry ... be pessimistic.

"New York" is a 58-minute bitch session in which Reed attacks popular targets such as politicians, drug-dealers, evangelists, racists, rich people, the Vietnam War and the treatment of whales, oceans and the ozone layer.

Reed doesn't pull any punches in "New York," and most of his attacks are aimed at easy targets. One of his more daring jabs focuses on the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

The raw, garage-band styled music on "New York" suits Reed's monotonous talking/singing perfectly. Reed, who plays guitar, is backed up by guitarist Mike Rathke, bassist Rob Wasserman and drummer Fred Maher, who co-produced the LP with him.

Reed's poetic and angry lyrics effectively criticize a wide variety of subjects.

On the first single, 'Dirty Blvd.,' Reed talks/sings about a kid named Pedro. Pedro lives in a Wilshire Hotel room that has glassless windows and cardboard walls with his nine brothers and sisters and a father who "beats him 'cause he's too tired to beg."

Reed blames society and the 'Statue of Bigotry' for Pedro's terrible life in the $2,000-per-month, government-paid room. However, as with every song on "New York," Reed doesn't offer any solutions.

MUSIC

On 'There is no Time,' Reed says that now is not the time for celebration, optimism, defending your country, saluting flags or political speech. Now is a time for action, Reed says, but doesn't say what that action might be.

On 'Busload of Faith,' Reed says you can't depend on your family, friends, intelligence, God, or good-hearted or wise men, but you can depend on the worst always happening. Maybe that is why he doesn't offer any hope.

Reed doesn't pull any punches in "New York," and most of his attacks are aimed at easy targets. One of his more daring jabs focuses on the Rev. Jesse Jackson:

On 'Good Evening Mr. Waldheim,' Reed questions whether the 'common ground' that Jackson spoke of during the Democratic National Convention includes Reed or the PLO. He then says, "If I ran for President and was once a member of the Klan/Wouldn't you call me on it/The way I call you on Farrakhan."

On 'Sick of you,' Reed criticizes the Ayatolla, NASA, Oliver North, William Secord, the purchasing of American companies by the Japanese, doctors, inside traders and Donald Trump before saying, "I'm sick of it, and I'm sick of you."

After hearing that last line, this reviewer could only think, "Ditto, Mr. Reed."

Lou Reed will perform at the Palace Theater Friday at 8:00 p.m. The opening act will be The Feelies.

NBC airs true-life 'Hillside Strangler' saga

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC may have developed a reputation for sensationalism thanks to the Geraldo Rivera special and some racy made-for-TV movies, but "The Case of the Hillside Strangers," about the real-life murders of 10 young women, avoids exploitation in favor of crack storytelling.

The movie, airing Sunday, benefits from superb performances all around, especially Richard Crenna as real-life homicide detective Bob Grogan.

Steven Gethers, who directed the movie and wrote the script, based on the Darcy O'Brien book "Two of a Kind: The Hillside Strangers," gives his actors gritty dialogue and realistic scenes. What more do we need to know about Grogan when he gets out of bed and goes to the refrigerator to find nothing but a solitary pickle floating in a jar?

Dennis Farina, a former real-life cop and good-guy star of "Crime Story," is evil incarnate as Angelo Buono, the upholsterer who with his cousin, Kenneth Bianchi, was eventually convicted of murder.

Billy Zane as Bianchi seems at the beginning of the movie almost too much the charming pretty boy, but by the end of it his character has become a malevolent manipulator.

Gethers effectively follows both the cops and the killers through the events of 1977-79.

The heart of the story belongs to Grogan, a tough-talking cop obsessed with his job to the detriment of his marriage. When he comes in to the office before dawn, the first thing he does is pour himself a stiff drink and complain to a colleague (James Tolkan) that his estranged wife is demanding he lead "a normal life — and wear pajamas."

Karen Austin plays J.D. Jackson, the would-be witness who becomes Grogan's understanding girlfriend and is so caught up in the case she even poses as a customer to get a load of Buono.

The movie opens with the handsome Bianchi gaining entrance to a woman's apartment by flashing a "police reserve" badge and telling her that her car has been damaged in the parking lot. Her body is found dumped on a hillside, hence the name of the crime wave that shocked and fascinated Los Angeles, as well as the rest of the country in late 1977 and early 1978.

Grogan immediately makes two accurate assumptions — that there are two men involved and that they are raping, torturing and murdering women for fun.

The psychopaths Bianchi and Buono are outwardly normal guys. At one point, Buono shows his cousin his collection of rare fish and recalls how he and his third wife awakened their 6-year-old daughter to watch one of the fish give birth to live offspring.

"They shoot 'em out like a rocket," he says admiringly, adding, "It was great sex education for the kid." Bianchi tells him he's a great father.

For Buono, there was a psychological reward in not getting caught. But Buono's downfall eventually was his cousin's need for recognition.

Buckeye Classic underway today

By Gary Hunt
Lantern sports writer

The Ohio State women's softball team will compete with four other schools today and Saturday in the second annual Buckeye Classic at North Field.

Ball State, Dayton, Indiana State and Penn State will join OSU in the tournament, which began play this morning at eight. A game will begin every two hours, with the last game of the day starting at 4 p.m.

The tournament is to be played in round-robin fashion, with each team playing the others once, and the winner to be decided by best overall record.

The Buckeyes, who currently have a record of three wins and ten losses, opened the tournament this morning hosting the 10-13 Indiana State Sycamores. No team statistics were available from Indiana State.

Ohio State will then take on Penn State at 10. The Buckeyes will be considered the visiting team in that game, which means Ohio State will go to bat first in each inning. Each team will be a visitor and home team an equal number of times to negate any advantage that a team might gain from having the last at bat in each game.

Penn State, 2-15, is led by catcher Donna Devaney, who has a batting average of .340 with eight runs batted in. As a team, the Nittany Lions are batting .201 and have an earned run average of 3.50.

On Saturday, Ohio State will play 10-7 Ball State, a team which OSU Coach Gail Davenport believes is the team to beat in the tournament.

"They have what I consider to be one of the top pitchers in the region in Bernie Coffman," said

Davenport. "She's the type of player who can carry them, she's that good of a ball player."

Coffman has an ERA of 0.62, and 8-4 on the season. Ball State's pitching staff as a team is strong, with an ERA of 0.76.

Davenport also cited experience as an asset for the Cardinals, an assessment which Ball State coach Jeri Findlay agrees with.

"We are real deep beyond nine (starters) this year, and I'm real happy with that," Findlay said. "The nice thing is I can sit here and tell you who I think will be big this weekend, and we'll turn around and everyone else will be. Right now we're just trying to figure out when it is people are going to be (playing well)."

Findlay said that the team in the tournament she is most familiar with is Indiana State, a team which Ball State defeated last weekend.

"We beat them, but that doesn't necessarily mean that we can do it again," said Findlay. "I think we respect them."

The Buckeyes conclude the tournament Saturday by facing the 7-2-1 Dayton Flyers. Dayton began the season with seven straight wins before getting the tie in a game called because of darkness. The Flyers then dropped their next two games to Bowling Green.

Davenport said that her team does not take Dayton lightly.

"Dayton has not been a very strong team in the past, but I think in any type of tournament situation you kind of throw out what's happened in the past," she said.

Kelly Lyman, who plays third base for the Flyers, leads the team with a .333 batting average, and is closely followed by shortstop Melanie Hubbs, who is batting .321. Dayton is led on the mound

OSU football coach John Cooper in a game last season. Cooper has the team pointing toward a new season after a 4-6-1 finish last year.

by Jody Crunette, who is 5-1 with an ERA of 0.75. As a team, the Flyers are batting .237 and have an ERA of 1.35.

Davenport thinks Ohio State has a chance to do well this weekend.

"We're playing at home, and I think we're probably going to be a better team at home than on the road," she said.

In addition to the competition among the five teams, players who do well in the tournament individually will also be recognized. Awards will be given to the top hitter and pitcher.

All tournament games will be played at North Field, which is located behind the Woody Hayes Athletic Center.

Gahanna freshman starts practice early

By Aaron Buckles
Lantern sports writer

Freshman linebacker Don Davis isn't taking anything for granted when it comes to playing football at Ohio State.

Davis said he knows getting to play goes hand in hand with hard work.

"I'm here to play," Davis said. "But I don't expect anything, I've got to work at playing."

Davis, 6-foot-4, 235 pounds, graduated from Gahanna Lincoln High School early last year and enrolled at Ohio State this quarter so he could participate in spring football practice and have a head start on his competition.

"I think these 20 practices will help me," Davis said. "Right now I'm just trying to learn all the stuff I can from watching and getting in as much work as I can."

OSU Coach John Cooper said

whether or not Davis moves up from third string depends on how much improvement he shows. Cooper said he likes what he has seen so far.

"We like Don Davis," Cooper said. "We liked him out of high school and we like what we've seen of him since he's been over here."

In high school, Davis, a three-year starter, was on the All-Ohio Capital Conference, All-Central District and All-Ohio Division I first team defenses as a senior. He still holds the Gahanna school record for tackles with 325.

Davis said his main concern at this point is learning the defense.

Davis has many attributes that Cooper likes.

"We've only been here two days but his strength is not only his athletic ability, it's his size, speed, he's got good instincts and he loves Ohio State," Cooper said.

OSU men's tennis coach predicts success

By Leslie Mendelsohn
Lantern sports writer

The OSU men's tennis team is expecting a good season this spring after starting the season with a record of nine wins and four losses.

The team's record shows that they are capable of a winning season, said coach John Daly.

The coach has a positive attitude for this spring.

"The outlook for this season is great," Daly said. "We have already beaten some good teams. With the addition of Ty (Tucker), it is going to make us that much stronger in singles."

Tucker, a freshman, is now eligible to play on the team after being on the sidelines winter quarter because of grades.

"Ty did an outstanding job academically winter quarter," Daly said. "The whole team had an outstanding quarter with a 3.15 average for the team."

Tucker is expected to play high in the lineup this weekend in an away match against West Virginia.

"Ty was one of the best recruits this year and we are lucky to have him," said teammate Chris Gatt.

The doubles teams have been the highlight and the surprise of the season, Daly said, with a record of 28 wins and four losses.

Juniors Kevin Dibelius and Steve Miguel have played in the No.1 slot in doubles this season and have a record of 7-3. Senior Ulf Hartwig and junior Enrico Sartori are playing No.2 doubles and are 11-1. The brother combination of Ted and Kostis Glavas make up the third doubles team this season. They are 6-0 going into this weekend.

It is still hard to say who will be the No.1 singles player, Daly said. The six positions can be interchangeable.

Both Daly and teammates agree that the performance of the team as a whole will not be disrupted if the ranks are changed.

"Everybody so far has had both highs and lows," Daly said. "No one is undefeated in singles or crushing all of their opponents, they are improving week by week."

There were some injuries early on in the season and the team has been adjusting to playing both indoors and outdoors and on different surfaces.

Right now with in the Big Ten, Michigan, Northwestern, and Indiana have been ranked in the top 20 in the country.

"All of the Big Ten teams will be tough to beat," Sartori said. "With the exception of maybe Michigan State and Purdue."

The Big Ten has not traditionally been this strong, Daly said.

"It is a first for the Big Ten to have that many teams ranked that high," Daly said. "I don't see any reason why we can't beat those teams."

Gatt has an optimistic approach to this spring season.

"I have been really optimistic this year. We have a lot of talent on the team," he said. "We have a good shot at winning the Big Ten championship. That is being very optimistic though."

If the team wins the championship, it goes to the NCAA tournament. Gatt thinks that if all of the team members play well on the same day, then they can beat any Big Ten team.

To accomplish winning the Big Ten championship, the team must first remain healthy. There has been a history of the players getting to the tournament and having illnesses or injuries, Daly said.

"It is important that in the dual meets we finish in the top four. It makes the tournament that much easier so that we play the easier teams early in the tournament," Daly said.

The team's positive attitude is also very important in order for them to do well in the season, Daly said.

"We have a very good team who must believe in themselves in order to win," Daly said.

To Daly, confidence and intimidation go hand in hand. The top eight players this year average 6-foot-2 and 180 pounds. He thinks this will help the team have a psychological edge against their opponents.

"We have to believe in ourselves to win," Sartori said. "An easy shot is always an easy shot, but if you can do it under pressure and with consistency, that is what matters."

Women gymnasts eye national meet

By Richard McAninch
Lantern staff writer

Since the beginning of the season, the OSU women's gymnastics team has set its sights on winning the NCAA regionals which qualifies a team for the nationals.

Saturday, the team will try to regain the NCAA regional women's gymnastics title at Penn State University in State College, Pa.

Last year, the women's gymnastics team finished second behind Penn State in the regional finals. Both universities have won three regional titles in the last six years.

OSU Coach Larry Cox said everyone on his team has to hit their routines and perform to the best of their potential for the team to go to the national competition.

"We have to win the NCAA regional championships and we have a team capable of doing that," Cox said. If the team performs its best, it will not lose, he said.

"We have a team capable of performing at a real high level and if we score as high as we can, nobody can beat us," Cox said.

Cox has not yet decided which six gymnasts will compete in the regional competition and will not make the decision until today after practice at Penn State.

The team can also win an at-large berth for the nationals. A team's seasonal scoring average combined with its average in the regional meet determines the at-large berths.

Monica Stavros, a senior from Westland Mich., does not think the team will go at large.

"I think as a team we will win because it's an exciting meet for us and Penn State is a big rivalry and we enjoy beating them," Stavros said.

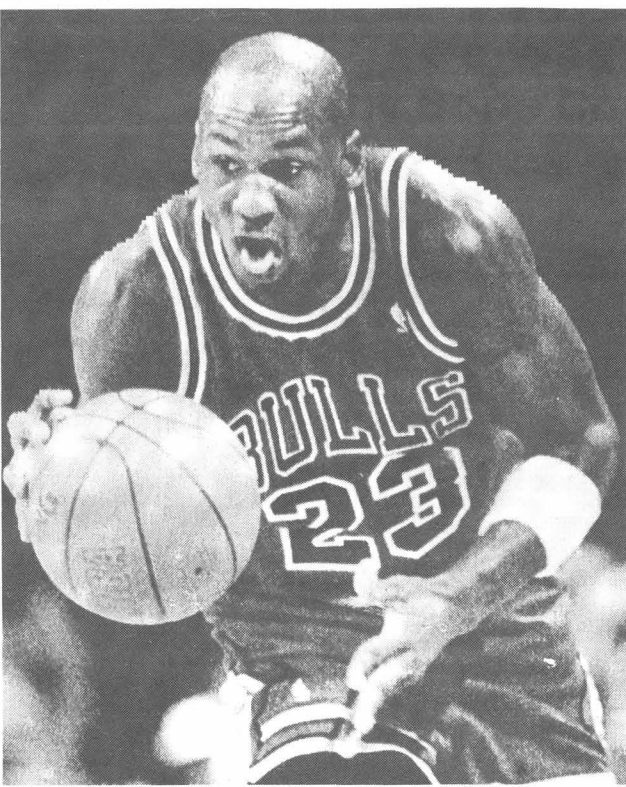

Stavros said she has trained hard this week and is ready for the regionals.

"Practice has been great but I was disappointed with the Big Ten meet because we didn't win and I wasn't happy with my performance so I've been working harder," Stavros said.

Stavros does not think she will dominate any single event.

"It depends on what event I hit that day, right now they're all pretty equal," she said. "It's a team meet and I want our team to win."

If the team does not qualify for the national meet, members of the team can qualify to compete individually.

All-American gone, but not expectations

By C.R. Barclay
Lantern sports writer

The OSU womens track team begins its outdoor season without All-American Bridgette Tate, but not without high expectations.

Although the team has lost Tate, a Big Ten title is not out of the question, said assistant coach Cathy Sellers.

"We're already in the top four. We're looking for the team to rise to the level of the top of the Big Ten and move up," Sellers said.

Tate, who placed third in the NCAA championships in the 55-meter hurdles, will be missed, but not irreplaceable, Sellers said.

"We don't have any one person who we can say will get that 10 points like Bridgette did," Sellers said. "What we may have is two or three people getting that same amount of points."

Sellers said that this team is versatile and matches up well with the Big Ten indoor championship, Illinois.

Ohio State's strengths are in its long jumpers, high jumpers, hurdlers and shotputters. The most notable members of the team are freshman high-jumper Barbara Kester and long-jumpers Kim Tyler and freshman Iris Keith.

Keith, a sophomore from Painesville, Ohio, qualified for the conference long jump competition in the indoor season. Due to a case of chicken pox she could not participate in the event.

In the Big Ten indoor championships, Ohio State regrouped from having a single point on the first day of competition to finish fourth overall. The team outscored every school except Illinois on the second day of competition.

"It'll be tough but we'll challenge," said sophomore Staci Leach. "We have a lot of really young people doing well."

Leach, from Thousand Oaks, California, said the team is ready for a good outdoor season.

"I expect to have a good outdoor season as I also think the team to have."

Sellers says that she likes this teams chances at the title.

"At this point I would put Indiana at the top, but I don't know. You cannot turn your back on this team because they're liable to go straight on up," she said.

The team weaknesses are in the distance events in which the Buckeye runners are not up to par with conference favorites Indiana, Wisconsin and Illinois.

The Buckeyes finished fifth in last year's Big Ten outdoor championships.

Ohio State travels to Penn State Saturday for a match with the Nittany Lions.

Donald leads by shot, seeks 1st win on tour

THE WOODLANDS, Texas (AP) — Mike Donald, seeking his first victory in nine PGA seasons, shot a 5-under-par 67 Thursday to take a one-shot lead after the first round of the $800,000 Independent Insurance Agent Open.

Donald birdied three of the first four holes he played, sinking putts of 25, 12 and 15 feet on the 10th, 12th and 13th holes of the soggy, windswept par-72, 7,045-yard TPC Course.

Brad Faxon recovered from a bogey on his first hole to shoot a 68, matching Mike Hulbert, who shot his 68 in the afternoon after the winds increased.

A group of seven golfers headed by Spain's Seve Ballesteros and defending champion Curtis Strange were tied at 69. The group also included Buddy Gardner, Roger Maltbie, John Inman, Don Shirey and Brad Bryant.

"The key was to drive in the fairways and as wet as it is, that helps," Donald said. "I shot a 67 in the first round here last year and ended up seventh."

"When you get off to a good start, it takes the cut out of your mind. I'll have a lot more patience now."

Donald has missed the cut in five of his nine previous tournaments this year.

He also had good opening rounds in the Hawaiian Open and the Players Championships, but faded before finishing in a tie for 19th in Hawaii and a tie for 21st at the Players Championships.

"It was difficult to put the right club in your hands because of the wind," said Ballesteros, playing this event for the first time.

Illini harvest state's talent

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — In a state known for its fertile farmland, the asphalt playgrounds of Illinois' cities have produced one of the most popular crops this spring: basketball players.

The Fighting Illini have reached the NCAA Final Four by relying almost exclusively on home-grown talent — 11 of the 12 players dressing for Illinois are natives of the Land of Lincoln.

"We're very pleased that the talent we've got are all from the state. It's exciting," Coach Lou Henson said Tuesday.

In the past, many of Illinois' budding basketball stars were harvested by universities in other states. Henson estimates at least 25 top players were wooed out-of-state in his 14 years at Illinois.

But that trend has been reversed, due largely to the work the past six years of Henson assistant Jimmy Collins, who is described by the players as "a father figure and the emotional key to the team."

Collins, 40, personally recruited nearly every member of the squad and has developed a rapport with the players that has made him more than just a coach.

"I used to be a big brother to them, but the older I get, the more they call me a father figure," Collins joked Tuesday as the team went through a light workout in a campus gym.

"There's not anything mystical about recruiting. It's a 24-hour-a-day job. It's just hard work and persistence. You have to know how to reach each kid. And every kid is different."

Clad in a warmup suit and basketball shoes, Collins still looks comfortable on the basketball court, whether talking quietly in the corner with a player, huddled on the sideline with other assistant coaches or joking at center court with the team.

It hasn't been that long since Collins was in the players' position. The Syracuse, N.Y. native was a star at New Mexico State in 1970 and led the Henson-coached Aggies to a third-place finish in the Final Four.

Collins became a first-round draft pick of the Chicago Bulls and it was during his years there that he first met many of the local high school coaches he would later call upon in his recruiting work.

"I used to play pickup games with a lot of the coaches and I stayed in touch after my playing days when I worked as a probation officer in Chicago," Collins said.

Collins connects with the players on a personal level and has forged deep bonds with them.

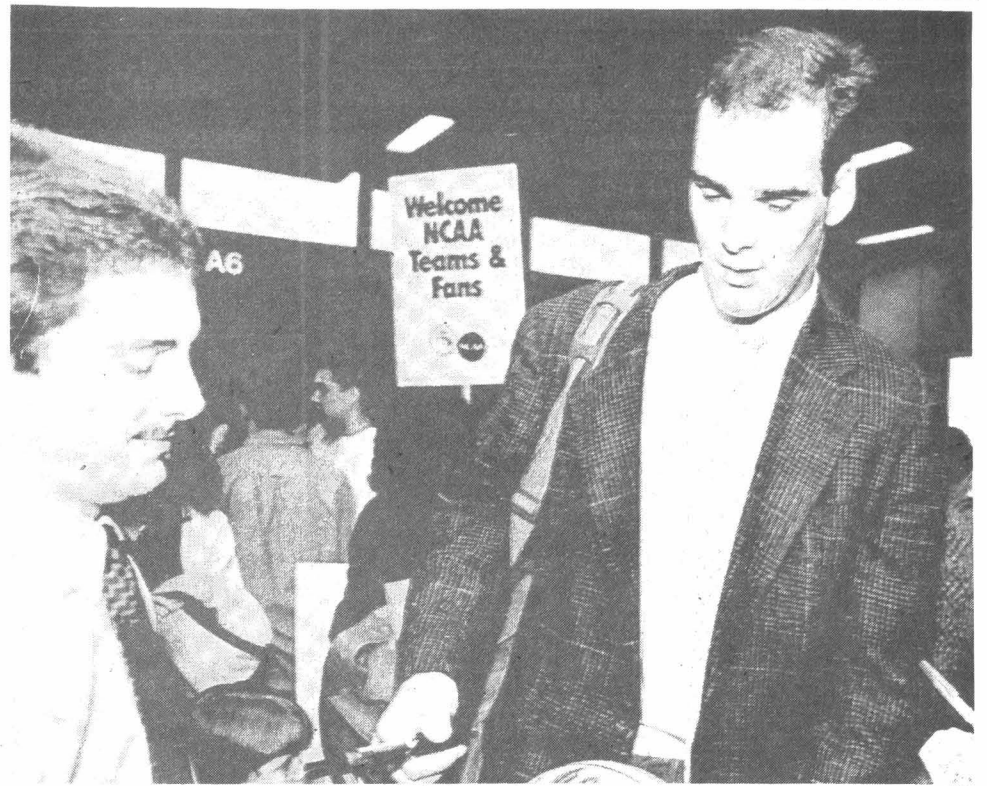

"Coach Collins is a very, very important part of the team," said Stephen Bardo, a junior guard from Carbondale. "He's the emotional key to the team. He's a father figure to a lot of the guys. He's played at every level and he knows the game. A lot of the guys wouldn't be here now if not for Coach Collins."

Senior center Lowell Hamilton, of Chicago, said Collins "is respected by the whole team and he deserves it."

Junior guard Kendall Gill, of Matteson, said Collins is most important when things are going badly.

"He talks to us when we're down and he offers support on the bench," Gill said.

The Illini, 31-4, take on Michigan, 28-7, in Saturday's second semifinal game in Seattle, and the two teams know each other well. Illinois beat Michigan 96-84 and 89-73 during the Big Ten season.

Big Ten baseball season begins; Ohio State plays Fighting Illini

By David Myers
Lantern sports writer

When the Ohio State baseball team opens its Big Ten season at home this weekend against Illinois, it will be facing a team that has been inconsistent despite an impressive record, said Illinois Coach Augie Garrido.

Ohio State, with a record of 11 wins and 11 losses, plays Illinois in doubleheaders Saturday and Sunday at Trautman Field. Illinois is 17-3 and on a 15-game winning streak.

"We haven't done anything in particular very well so far," Garrido said. "When things are said and done, though, we should be able to play good defense and have a fairly balanced offense."

Garrido said his starting pitchers for this weekend's series will be, in no particular order, Bubba Smith, Rich Caparelli, Mark Dressen and Rich Hyde.

Garrido, in his second year at Illinois after leading the Illini to a seventh-place finish in the Big Ten last year, said he has been impressed with the play of his junior second baseman Mark Dale-sandro.

Garrido was head coach at Cal State Fullerton University, where he led the team to two national titles, before coming to Illinois last year.

Ohio State Coach Bob Todd said Garrido has completely revamped the Illinois baseball program, bringing several West Coast players with him and stressing what Todd calls a "short game."

"They like to bunt a lot and put pressure on you to make the plays," Todd said. "The best way to beat a team like that is to get the lead, make the easy defensive plays and pretty soon you have taken that type of strategy away from them."

Buckeye junior left fielder Mark Pfaff agreed that Illinois likes to be the aggressor and said that their revamped lineup makes them hard to prepare for.

"They are a very young team and they might be a different team than they were last year," Pfaff said. "Last year they bunted run at a time."

Scoring runs in any fashion has suddenly become a problem for Ohio State.

After averaging over six runs per game at the Pan Am Tournament over spring break, the Buckeyes returned home Wednesday and scored only one run in two games against Wright State.

Still, Garrido said he is impressed with Ohio State.

"I have a great deal of respect for Coach Todd and the job he has done," Garrido said. "I was very impressed with them last year and I'm sure that they are going to be an outstanding team this year."

Last year, Illinois won three out of four games against Ohio State at Champaign, Ill. in the opening Big Ten series for both teams.

The series record between the two teams is tied at 56-56-2.

Saturday's and Sunday's games begin at 1 p.m.

Michigan's Rice shuns spotlight

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — It took a while for the organizers of the University of Michigan's most recent news conference to prod Glen Rice into the spotlight.

When they finally got the Wolverines' star to come out like teammates Sean Higgins, Loy Vaught and Demetrius Calip had done for more than an hour to meet with reporters and photographers Tuesday, there was a slight change in the format.

"I do not expect to keep Glen Rice for as long as I had the other players, so we are going to gang him at once right here," Sports Information Director Bruce Madej said as he motioned reporters to the center of the conference room in Crisler Arena.

It was example of Rice's disinclination to puff out his chest and run to the microphones every time someone asks about the ability he's displayed — like the 34 points he scored Thursday against North Carolina in Michigan's 92-87 NCAA tournament quarterfinal victory.

"He works with a quiet sort of resolve," said interim coach Steve Fisher, whose Wolverines, 28-7, are scheduled to leave tonight for Seattle where they will meet Illinois, 31-4, in an NCAA semifinal game Saturday.

"By nature he would prefer not to come out and deal with the media, but the responsibility comes with his position," Fisher said.

It's true that Rice, whose 24.8 average in Big Ten play made him the conference scoring champ for the second straight season, likes to find the shadows when he can.

Two weeks ago, when the Wolverines were at Detroit Metropolitan Airport getting ready to leave for their first tournament game in Atlanta, Rice tried to politely dodge a reporter.

Asked his name, the 6-foot-7 senior forward said, "Terry Mills," and proceeded to spell the other Wolverine forward's name. Then he smiled, said his own name and took a seat in a lounge away from reporters and photographers.

Rice said his shyness is one reason he often steps out of the spotlight. But he also says he's thinking of the team.

"I really don't want to be getting too focused in the media because I really just want to concentrate on the games that we have to play," said Rice, who's sure to be a media darling in Seattle.

He also said his mother and friends have influenced his reaction to the attention.

Wall Street junk bond trader faces over $12 billion in fines

NEW YORK (AP) — Prosecutors are seeking staggering prison terms and more than $12 billion in penalties against junk bond wizard Michael R. Milken and two others in the largest criminal action against a Wall Street trader.

The Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. executive was indicted by a federal grand jury Wednesday along with his 40-year-old brother, Lowell J. Milken, and Bruce Lee Newberg, a former trader for Drexel, the nation's fifth-largest securities firm.

The long-expected indictment charged the three with turning Drexel into a billion dollar racketeering enterprise that used Drexel's junk bond department for a series of securities frauds with various unindicted co-conspirators. Among them are the imprisoned Ivan Boesky and members of the defunct investment partnership, Princeton-Newport Partners.

Among other things, the indictment accused Milken of using illegal inside information about merger proposals to arrange deals and manipulate stocks.

U.S. Attorney Benito Romano said the racketeering penalties were the most ever sought against individuals under the 19-year-old federal Racketeer Influenced, Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO).

But defense lawyers attacked the 98-count indictment as an abuse of prosecutorial power and a tool to wrench cooperation from other Drexel employees.

They called the charges a "per- version" of the racketeering act, which was established principally to combat organized crime but is used increasingly to prosecute white-collar criminals.

"I think it is outrageous to use RICO in a circumstance like this," said Michael Armstrong, an attorney for Lowell Milken. "They applied the statute to behavior which for the most part has not been considered even to be criminal, much less the subject of a racketeering indictment."

The three defendants denied wrongdoing and said they would plead innocent.

"I am now eager to present all the facts in an open and unbiased forum," Michael Milken said in a statement.

Milken, 42, has headed Drexel's junk bond department since the mid-1970s and is credited with revolutionizing corporate takeovers by relying on the highly risky, high-yielding securities, turning them into a $175 billion annual market. The bonds also are often used to help small and medium-size companies grow.

The indictment described the Beverly Hills, Calif.-based junk bond department as "the driving force behind Drexel's business" noting that between 1983 and 1987 it accounted for nearly half of Drexel's profits.

If convicted on the racketeering counts alone, each defendant would face maximum fines of $3.7 billion, roughly double their alleged illicit profits. All three face maximum prison sentences of 20 years on each of two racketeering charges, prosecutors said.

In addition, the three are subject to forfeiture proceedings on virtually all money they have made through their Drexel dealings since 1984, an estimated $1.85 billion. That includes $1.2 billion in salaries, $112 million in Drexel stock, $205 million in corporate finance fees, $37 million in trading profits on allegedly tainted deals and $257 million in interest.

Michael Milken also was charged with all of the 96 non-racketeering counts, which include numerous mail, wire and securities frauds. His brother was charged with 11 counts and Newberg with 20 counts.

If convicted of the non-racketeering charges, each would face a maximum penalty of five years in prison and at least $250,000 in fines per count, making Michael Milken subject to $24 million in fines and a total of 520 years imprisonment.

Ethics issues debated on animal rights at meat production forum

By Rebecca Snyder
Lantern staff writer

The issue of whether animals should be used in meat production was discussed at the Ethics and Economics of Meat Production Forum Wednesday night.

The forum, sponsored by the Agriculture and Natural Resource Student Council, began with presentations by four guest speakers. Both sides of animal rights issues were discussed. The four speakers were divided into two teams with opposing views.

NED PARRETT, professor of animal science, and Matt Lane, a senior from Washington Court House majoring in animal science, said the use of animals for meat products is justified.

Daniel Farrell, professor of philosophy, and Melissa Clifford, a senior majoring in political science, spoke for animal rights.

Each speaker was given five minutes to present facts to the audience. Following the guest speakers, the floor was opened to the audience for questions and comments.

Clifford, who considers herself a vegan, a person who does not use any animal products, said the animals should not be bred and we should let the animals be free and let nature take over.

"I am more certain that livestock, how we are taking care of them now, are in much better shape than they would be on their own," Lane said.

SOURCES OF protein other than animal meat are deficient in a number of amino acids. Parrett said the only complete source of protein is meat.

"We are supplying a product in demand," Lane said. "What we are doing is producing a quality product."

He said animal rights have

ing. Therefore, no stress is present when they are kept in a controlled environment.

Clifford said 80 percent of the corn grown in this country is used for feeding livestock, but instead of feeding it to the animals then butchering them, people should be eating this corn.

Farrell said he is speaking on behalf of the animals because he thinks they do have rights and even though the animals did not ask for him to stand up for them, he thinks one does not need permission to stand up for the rights of others.

JIM STICKLEY, a junior from Covington majoring in animal science and mediator of the forum, said the object of the discussion was to let people know about the ethical and economic issues involved with meat products.

Former Nazi guard deported after 30 years in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former SS guard at the Auschwitz death camp during World War II who had been living in the United States for the past 30 years has been deported to Austria, Attorney General Dick Thornburgh announced Wednesday.

Josef Eckert, 65, who had been living in La Puente, Calif., flew out of the country Tuesday night but did not show up in Austria as expected, said Justice Department spokesman Loye Miller.

"That wasn't a problem for us, as long as he was gone, but we found out today that he went to sleep at Heathrow (Airport in London) between planes" and missed his connecting flight, Miller said.

Eckert had been scheduled to fly to Switzerland and then on to Austria, and "He's somewhere between Heathrow and Switzerland and Austria," Miller said.

The department's Office of Special Investigations, which pursues former Nazis who may have participated in war crimes, sought Eckert's deportation in 1987.

U.S. asks Soviets to limit influence

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State James A. Baker III appealed to the Soviet Union today to limit its export of arms and ideology to Latin America.

"We are looking for signs of new thinking," Baker said. "The Soviet Union now has an opportunity to demonstrate it in Central America."

Baker's appeal was in a speech prepared for a conference in Atlanta hosted by former Presidents Carter and Ford.

Baker said the Bush administration was committed to work with leaders of the hemispheric democracies to promote political solutions to armed conflicts.

He cited as an example last week's accord with Congress providing aid for Nicaraguan Contra rebels and support for regional peace efforts.

However, Baker said, "the United States will never support a paper agreement that sells out the Nicaraguan people's right to be free." Nor, he said, "should any other democracy in this hemisphere."

Directing his remarks to the Soviet Union and others who support the Marxist government in Nicaragua, Baker said, "We must send a clear message to others outside this hemisphere: This is not a dumping ground for their arms or their failed idealogy." Baker made no direct reference to the military aid the United States has given to the Contras in their attempt to overthrow the Sandinista government in Managua before Congress ordered a cut-off.

He said the United States supports dialogue between the two sides and also between the U.S.-backed government in El Salvador and Marxist guerrillas in that country "so the guns of war can stand silent through Central America."

His appeal to the Soviets for "new thinking" appeared timed to the visit Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev will make next week to Cuba, the Soviets' closest ally in the hemisphere.

Baker, a former treasury secretary, also said there was no "magic solution" to the economic problems in Latin America.

He said hard-pressed countries must reform their "bloated state-dominated economies," keep up with debt obligations "and satisfy the needs of their citizens."

He acknowledged, though, that this was "a nearly impossible juggling act" and gave assurances that the United States was prepared "to hear your calls for help."

Bonjour offered to French visitors

By Patrick J. Geyer
Lantern staff writer

About 100 students this quarter are trying to put a different accent on business — a French accent.

In a program sponsored by the College of Business, 95 business students from the Ecole Supérieure de Commerce de Nantes (ESC), are attending Ohio State this quarter.

Each of the students are enrolled in three business classes and one elective.

Jay Yutzey, program coordinator, said, "The three business courses that they are taking are from among 40 or 50 different ones. What we try to do by design is to involve the students in a wide variety of classes."

The program was started seven years ago as an exchange program between Ohio State and ESC to give business majors an opportunity to study abroad.

About 25 OSU business students will study at ESC during the summer.

ESC is a business school located in Nantes, which is about 30 miles from the western coast in France. The students are enrolled for three years and coming to the United States is a requirement for all second year students.

"We are very happy to come to the United States to meet other people," said Sylvie Durault, a student from ESC.

The French students are staying with OSU students in various residence halls on campus.

"The intent is to maximize the kind of interaction they have with their American cohorts," Yutzey said.

Before coming to OSU, the students watched a video about the university, Columbus and life in the United States.

They were able to learn about Ohio State from ESC students who have already participated in the program.

The students arrived last Wednesday and had two days of orientation.

"We spend time talking to them about scheduling, how classes work, how to find their classes, and how the bus system works," Yutzey said. "We try to have them reasonably well prepared, so when classes started Monday, they could slip right into the mainstream."

Each student was paired up with winter quarter with an American host who had similar interests.

The hosts provide information and support to the visiting students during their stay here on campus.

The French students are all fluent in English, as well as several other languages. Sometimes language will become a problem, but the biggest problem often involves American food.

When asked about the food, ESC student Fabienne Velly replied, "The salad bar is excellent!"

French people typically eat a small breakfast, large lunch, and a late dinner. It is sometimes difficult for the students to adapt to the heavy American breakfast, light lunch and early dinner.

"We often eat without being hungry," said Sylvie Bretesche, another ESC student.

Many of the students will stay in the United States and travel during the summer.

Durault, Velly and Bretesche are planning to take a trip across the United States. Attractions such as Los Angeles, the Grand Canyon and Chicago are on their list of sights to see.

Humble poop scoops often steal the show

WASHINGTON (AP) — The kids at the circus gasp at the Whirling Wheel of Death and ooh over the amazing Tahar, the alligator tamer from Morocco, but they usually save their biggest ovations for the lowly elephant sweepers.

That's show biz. When the ringmaster at the visiting Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus introduces the next act — "a million pounds of performing pachyderms" — 16 elephants lumber gracefully into the spotlight, followed by a half-dozen anonymous men in blue jumpsuits and carrying brooms and shovels.

For the next few minutes, 16 elephants dance through their intricately choreographed routine with sequined showgirls. Meanwhile, the sweepers are performing their own desperate minuet, dodging a swaying trunk or a thundering hoof to keep the three circus rings nice and tidy.

The kids in the bleacher seats, and many of the grownups, howl with delight, especially when a man in blue smilingly holds his shovel under an elephant's tail.

"Sometimes the sweepers get more applause than the performers get," said Scottish-born stablemaster Tommy Henry, 56, who's swept up his share of elephant manure during 40 years of circus work.

"The public likes it," he said. "They think it's funny. Most of the guys think it's a big joke."

A million pounds of performing pachyderms produces a lot of pounds of manure.

Ringling's entire animal menagerie, in fact, fills a 30-cubic-yard metal trash bin every day, says general manager Mike Melssen. A private contractor is paid to haul it away, except when the circus hosts a "manure giveaway" as a promotional gimmick.

"Elephant manure is the most potent fertilizer in the world," said circus spokeswoman Kim Turpin Davis, with the unabashed hyperbole for which Ringling is famous.

Environmental Protection Agency Administrator William Reilly briefs reporters Thursday in the White House press room on the oil spill in Alaska. Behind Reilly is Coast Guard Commandant Adm. Paul Yost, who also addressed reporters.

Spill grows; fishing industry waits

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — With the nation's largest oil spill growing to 500 square miles, the governor said he hopes it snakes out of Prince William Sound instead of "bouncing around like a pinball" and polluting for years.

Desperate commercial fishermen deployed booms in the sound to protect salmon hatcheries, and state officials worried about the fragile image of Alaska's billion-dollar fishing industry.

The oil spewed from the 987-foot Exxon Valdez when it struck a charted reef 25 miles from Port Valdez after loading 1.2 million barrels of crude oil from Alaska's North Slope.

Exxon said about 450,000 barrels had been transferred from the grounded tanker to the Exxon Baton Rouge by Wednesday evening, and loading of the remaining oil into another vessel was to begin today.

The Exxon Valdez may be refloated this weekend, company officials said.

Exxon, which has been heavily criticized for its response to the 10.1 million gallon spill, said it will re-evaluate how it handles such problems.

"Now that (the spill) has happened, it's incumbent on us and the industry to profit in the maximum extent from the experience," said William Stevens, president of Exxon USA, the parent of the Exxon Shipping Co. Inc., on Wednesday.

"Certainly we will be going back to relook at contingency plans, not only here in Valdez, but in other sensitive areas," said Stevens.

President Bush, meanwhile, was to meet in Washington today with the three senior administration officials he had sent to Alaska to decide to order a federal takeover of cleanup operations. Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater, however, said the president was leaning against such a step.

On Wednesday, a private oil cleanup firm hired by the state dropped more than 20,000 feet of boom to fishermen trying to protect three pink salmon hatcheries and other environmentally sensitive areas in the sound.

Gov. Steve Cowper said, "I think it's clear that we're going to have to have some kind of test, and that the people who buy our fish are going to have to be assured that those fish are not going to be contaminated because of oil." Gov. Steve Cowper said.

The oil is headed toward the Montague Strait, an outlet to the Gulf of Alaska, and Cowper said that is where everyone hopes the oil goes, "rather than bouncing around like a pinball in Prince William Sound and polluting it for years."

Once in the gulf, however, the oil could jeopardize valuable fisheries around Kodiak if it continued to move southwest.

Valdez Mayor John Devens has estimated the loss to the fishing industry at $150 million.

Rick Steiner, a spokesman for Cordova District Fishermen United, said at least 30 fishing boats would be out today trying to protect sensitive areas around several islands on the west side of Prince William Sound.

Wind and currents have stretched the slick into ragged patches of shifting iridescent oil on crystal blue water. Oil can be found 60 miles from the grounded ship. The heavy goo surrounds several islands — gravel beaches and rocky points smeared with a black band of oil.

Exxon spokesman Don Cornett said Wednesday that only 6,000 barrels of oil had been recovered from the sea.

By nightfall Wednesday, at least half a dozen tankers remained near the entrance to the sound, awaiting their turn to pass through the reopened harbor and load crude oil at the pipeline terminal.

Old Nevada brothel to be publicly owned

RENO, Nev. (AP) — America's best-known brothel is on the verge of becoming publicly owned, but for the Mustang Ranch's working women, bedroom business still interests them more than any Wall Street transaction.

"Basically, we don't keep up with all that," said 21-year-old Gina, a prostitute at the ranch for the past three years.

The six-week bid to make the ranch the nation's first publicly held bordello through a $23.3 million stock offering at $20 a share is about 80 percent sold, and the offering should close in about a week, said the president of the firm handling the sale.

Eric Walloga, whose Tampa, Fla.-based American Wallstreet Securities Inc. is overseeing the offering, said he expected the issue to sell out once Nevada joins the nine other states and the District of Columbia where the stock is being offered.

Judith Allan, education and research coordinator for the Nevada Securities Division in Las Vegas, said a decision on the stock was expected by Monday.

"I feel that with Nevada coming in, we'd be able to close in a few days," Walloga said.

At the Mustang Ranch, the impending sale means more than a new boss for 23-year-old Peaches. It means losing the friendship of owner Joe Conforte.

"I love him as a boss," she said. "If you have problems, you can go and talk to him like a friend."

For Conforte, 63, the sale will not only free him from the burdens and occasional legal hassles of running the brothel 10 miles east of Reno. It will finally let him pay off the longstanding tax debt that led to an 18-month imprisonment.

Conforte and his wife, Sally, have been trying to sell the 105-room brothel and the 440 acres of land on which it's located since Conforte was released from prison in early 1985.

The Confortes, who opened the ranch in the early 1950s, will receive $13 million for the brothel and the property plus $5 million for agreeing not to open a competing bordello.

The prostitutes rent their rooms for $10 a day and keep half their earnings, which start at about $80 for a half-hour, paid by cash or credit card in advance.

Prostitution is allowed in 11 of Nevada's 14 rural counties, but is forbidden in the counties where Reno, Las Vegas and Carson City are located.

Since the offering was approved by the Securities and Exchange Commission in mid-February, the stock had been approved for sale in Florida, Georgia, Illinois, New Jersey, Maryland, New York, Connecticut, Colorado, Hawaii and the District of Columbia.

Once the offering is sold out, the brothel can officially change hands and the stock will be traded over the counter, Walloga said. The stock is being offered by Mustang Ranch Inc., an investors' group composed primarily of Reno businessmen and attorneys.

Doctors must ease deaths of patients

BOSTON (AP) — Doctors should ease the dying of their hopelessly ill patients by giving them as much pain medicine as they need and even helping them commit suicide, if they wish, a report today concludes.

The report, drawn up by a panel of prominent physicians, contends that doctors have an obligation to help terminally ill patients have "a good death," just as they help them lead a healthy life.

"We really think that the physician has a responsibility to be actively involved in creating an environment in which a peaceful death can occur," said Dr. Sidney H. Wanzer, principal author of the report.

The most controversial of the group's conclusions was that "it is not immoral for a physician to assist in the rational suicide of a terminally ill patient."

Wanzer said doctors can ethically prescribe sleeping pills or other drugs to dying patients, knowing they will use them for suicide, and even tell them how big a dose is lethal.

The doctors said such assistance is "certainly not rare." However, they added that if physicians tend to their dying patients' comfort and dignity, suicide requests should be infrequent.

Two doctors on the 12-member committee disagreed with the suicide guideline.

"I don't want a blanket statement to say it is not immoral. I can accept that someone else may say it is moral, but I want to be able to say I don't like this," said one of the dissenters, Dr. Jan van Eys of the University of Texas System Cancer Center in Houston.

The report is the second from the committee, which was chaired by Dr. Daniel D. Federman of Harvard Medical School, former president of the American College of Physicians. It was published in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

Its first report, issued five years ago, also dealt with the ethics of obeying patients' final wishes, including removing feeding tubes. Some of its recommendations have since been widely adopted by doctors and courts.

The doctors noted that one of the greatest concerns of the dying and their families is that doctors won't give enough painkillers. They said this fear is largely justified.

The group said that allowing a patient to experience unbearable pain or suffering is an unethical medical practice. When death becomes inevitable, the importance of relieving pain outweighs the risk of hastening death.

Center wants no movie ads, asks officials to review laws

WASHINGTON (AP) — That beer your favorite movie star quaffed in his most recent film may be part of an "insidious" advertising scheme, according to an advocacy group that wants to require moviemakers to reveal when they're being paid to show commercial products.

The Center for Science in the Public Interest says the movie "Bull Durham" included 21 shots of Miller Lite beer, "Superman II" featured the Marlboro cigarette logo, and "E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial" prominently displayed Reese's Pieces and Coors beer.

While the center didn't know if money changed hands between filmmakers and manufacturers on all these movies, it said Philip Morris paid $42,500 to get its Marlboro logo into the Superman film.

On the coming James Bond movie, "Licensed to Kill," Philip Morris paid $350,000 to have Lark cigarettes shown on screen, center staff attorney Charles Mitchell said.

The center is asking state attorneys general to determine whether the undisclosed placement of commercial products in films constitutes deceptive advertising that violates state laws.

It also said broadcasting movies on television in which there are paid placements of cigarettes violates a 1971 law that prohibits advertising of cigarettes on TV.

Mitchell said the center urged states to require filmmakers to state at the beginning of a movie, for example: "Notice. This film contains paid advertising for Marlboro cigarettes."

The center also said it would ask state officials to determine whether the placement of alcoholic beverages and cigarettes in youth-oriented films should be prohibited because youths cannot legally buy such products.

The group said it was petitioning the Federal Communications Commission to rescind a rule that exempts theatrical films from the general requirement for television programs that paid product placements be disclosed.

"The paid placement of junk foods, alcoholic beverages and cigarettes in movies is one of the most insidious forms of advertising," said Michael Jacobson, the center's executive director. "Advertising in movies is blatantly unfair to audiences who go to be entertained, not advertised to."

Elizabeth Barnes, a spokeswoman for the Motion Picture Association of America, said the association had no comment.

Rep. Tom Luken, D-Ohio, on March 17 asked Attorney General Dick Thornburgh to investigate whether paid placement of cigarettes in movies made for theaters and then shown on television violates the 1971 Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act that prohibits cigarette ads on TV.

A senior aide to Luken, who spoke only on condition he not be identified, said the $350,000 and $42,500 payments from Philip Morris were made directly to the producers of the films. Liggett & Meyers also paid $30,000 to have its Eve cigarettes appear in "Supergirl," the aide said.

"Our position is that if you show 'Superman' or 'Supergirl' ... on TV you violated that law," the aide said.

Violating the act is punishable by a fine of up to $10,000.

Steven Weiss, a spokesman for Philip Morris U.S.A., said the $350,000 payment was the total for a six-month promotional campaign that was to coincide with the Bond film's premiere in Japan, where Philip Morris markets Lark. He said the product placement portion was only a "small amount" of the $350,000.
