Earthquake victims prepare for return to their homeland

By Tomoko Kotaka

After surviving the December 7, 1988 earthquake in Armenia, two of the three children who came to Children's Hospital in Columbus for medical treatment will be returning to their native country today.

Nine-year-old Andok Kartashian along with his aunt Satik Kartashian, and Garen Mazmanian, 10, with his mother Rose Gambarian, will be leaving today to catch a 9 p.m. flight departing from John F. Kennedy Airport in New York.

They will be joined on the trip to their homeland by 12 other Armenian children and their guar-dians who received treatment in other states

Erikna Khanegian, 14, will be staying at Children's Hospital for further treatment on her hands. She is with her father, Shalyko Khanegian.

During an emotional speech addressing a press conference at Children's Hospital yesterday, Robert Clark M.D., chief of orthopedics at Children's Hospital expressed a great fondess for the children.

Pausing frequently to gain his composure, Clark said that if one word could describe his experience with the Armenian children, it would be the word "sure."

"Sure" was the answer everyone gave when asked if they would help the Armenians. When Clark first asked the hospital if they would help the victims, Clark said they were supportive. "When I asked the prosthetic and orthodic people in the community if they would donate lished an excellent relationship, which surpassed the call of duty. "We have a 14-year-old girl who was taken from her community, her country and brought here. The relationship which she established with the nurses, was some-thing beyond a nurse," Clark said.

Kartashian suffered from a leg and foot injury requiring a cast something, Clark said, Kartashian was not too fond of.

Clark said through this, the doctors discovered Kartashian had developed an acting ability.

"When we went to get a shoe, we found he couldn't get in a regular shoe because his foot was so sensitive. I think that was the reason.

"Once again, his acting ability must have worked," Clark said as he pointed out the new Nikes Kartashian was wearing. Mazmanian, who lost his right arm in the earthquake, waited patiently for his arm to be made, Clark said.

He gained range of motion from his new arm with the help of occupational and physical therapy, he added.

"He became an expert in yo-yo," Clark said.

Clark said, Khanegian, who was suffering from severe contractions of her hands when she arrived, will not be able to return to Armenia yet.

With the help of physical therapy, she has gained a substantial amount of motion in her hands, he said

A Columbus police officer was found guilty Tuesday of forcing an Ohio State student to perform fellatio after arresting her on drunken driving charges. Cornelius E. Cummings, 3952 Geormar Dr., was charged with two counts of sexual battery and one count of kidnapping. He was not convicted on the kidnapping charged charges. Edward W. Morgan, assistant prosecutor, said Cummings could be given probation or sentenced two to 10 years in prison. Cummings was released until sentencing, sometime around June 20, according to visiting Judge

Michael Moser. Cummings, 28, arrested the woman at around 1:30 a.m. on March 18, 1988. He took her to jail where she tested 0.171 per-cent on the breathalyzer. A person who tests 0.10 is legally drunk. The woman testified Cummings did not allow her to make a phone call and said he would take her home. Instead of taking her directly home, she said he brought directly home, she said he brought her to a dead end near West Mound and Levee streets, where the sex act occurred. In his closing arguments Mon-day, Morgan said Cummings used deception to kidnap the woman. Morgan argued that Cummings said he would take the woman home from jail, but took her to the dead end first. Morgan said Cummings was found not guilty of kidnapping because the jury was confused about the deception charge. The woman hugged her mother as the jury left the courtroom. She told reporters she was still

'We will choose one of these plans by the end of this week," said Joe Ridgeway, acting director of the Public Service Department for Columbus.

Ridgeway was named acting director after Gisela Rosenbaum stepped down as director on Friday. She and Mayor Dana G. Rinehart mutually decided she should quit after disagreeing about the original detour plan. Rosenbaum supported the original plan, which would have rer-outed I-71 traffic down Indianola and Summit Avenues while the highway was being repaired.

Rinehart told city officials to scrap that nine-month plan, which would have involved the Clintonville area, where Rinehart lives.

Steve Welk, city traffic engineer, said the city has been considering several different plans for the I-71 detour

• Scrap I-71 construction plans permanently.Delay construction until 1994-95.

• Close the interstate completely for one year, diverting traffic to I-670, Rt. 161, Morse Road and Cooke Road.

Close the southbound lanes for two years while leaving the northbound lanes open. South-bound traffic would use city arterial routes, including Indianola

Southside citizens' groups announced earlier this week an end to their disagreement with officials who are building a new steel processing plant in their neighborhood. About two weeks ago, residents told the Columbus City Council they feared the LS-II steel facility would being automatic facility to build in the area, but asked the company's officials to meet with the residents.

On Monday, Margaret Willis, vice president of the Marion-Franklin Civic Association, told the council she was now happy with the agreement but discussions with the company would continue.

"This is only the beginning with the LS-II officials," Willis said. "We still have some questions about the health and safety of our community. We do not want the community at large to think we just have a piece of

Fire causes center to be evacuated

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) - A small equipment room fire forced the evacuation of about 600 workers from a building housing the space shuttle launch control center Monday, but it was quickly extinguished.

NASA said the blaze would have no impact on Friday's sche-duled liftoff of Atlantis on a planetary mission.

The fire was on the fourth floor in a room that supplies air conditioning to part of the four-story building. The launch control center is on the third floor.

Space agency spokesman Dick Young said material used to insulate equipment caught fire, but caused only "minimal" dam-age. The workers were evacuated as a precaution and were back inside the building within an hour. The blaze was under investigation.

During the evacuation, he said, a skeleton crew remained in the control center to monitor Atlantis' systems

Panel study of black men is questioned by women

By Reggie Anglen

A new commission designed to study problems facing black males is being criticized by some campus and community black women who say black men have been studied enough

Mari Nelson, coordinator for developmental education in University College, said she thinks the commission will be a waste of time, energy and money because problems concerning the black male have already been identified.

"I think it is nice window dressing, but I don't think it's going to get any deep change," she said. "I'm not so sure the commission is going to do any-thing. The commission will probably get some surface change, but I'm talking about some down, deep change.

According to Gov. Richard Celeste, the commission is being created to study what he calls the black male's "vicious downward spiral of alienation and despair."

state's total population, he said. Ann B. Walker, director of Christian Education for Bethany Presbyterian Church, said she thinks there is no need for another panel or commission to study the plight of the black male in society.

"There are sufficient materials already," she said. Lois Burke, a counselor in the OSU Office for Disability Services, said black men and women should not be fighting about a study. "If you help black men, you're professor in the OSU Department of Black Studies, said she thinks the governor's commission is one of the most visionary steps she has seen a public official take.

"However, if the task force is going to be implemented, it needs to have some power in terms of implementing whatever ideas it comes up with," Myers said.

Elected officials, civic and community leaders, as well as representatives from the judicial system, schools and health agencies will make up the bulk of the commission.

Patricia A. Williams, assistant to the university ombudsman, said she hopes the commission uses information that has already been gathered.

"We don't have to reinvent the wheel," she said.

A preliminary report from the commission is due in six months. A final report will be sent to the governor within one year.

Alpha Kappa Mu Honor Society opens doors to public

Aria Ala-U-Dini/the Lanter

By Nadine Collins

After three years, the Alpha Kappa Mu Honor Society will open its doors to the Ohio State University community on Thursday for the first time. Gwendolyn Garvin, a graduate student majoring in communication from Norton, Mass., is president of the society. She said the open house will orientate the community to the organization in terms of its educational goals

"We want to introduce to the com-munity of OSU a black network of scholars," Garvin said. Alpha Kappa Mu is a historically black honor society that was founded at Tennessee State University in 1937, in Nashville.

Today, there are 76 chapters of Alpha Kappa Mu on college campuses through-out the U.S.

The OSU chapter was the first in the Big Ten. Its idea was initiated by former Vice Provost of Minority Affairs and Special Assistant to the President, now Professor Emeritus, Frank W. Hale Jr. Alpha Kappa Mu is open to minority juniors, seniors and graduate students. Juniors and seniors are required to maintain an overall grade point average of 3.3, while graduate students must maintain a 3.7.

The honor society is an organization that combines academics and community networking, Garvin said.

According to Garvin, the organization participates in service projects throughout the year. One year, the organization featured a collection of displays of prominent community black artists in Bricker Hall.

Each spring quarter, the society parti-cipates in the Academic Leadership Service and Recognition Awards Prog-Affairs. New members are inducted during the awards program. Charles Washington, a graduate student from Milwaukee majoring in music composition, said it would be difficult to be recognized on a large campus such as OSU if it weren't for the society.

"I don't think I would have certain opportunities if AKM did not exist,' Washington said.

He said members meet national and local role models, which gives them a sense of their own outgrowth.

EDITORIALS SYMBOL: A milestone decision

The Ohio State University is notorious when it comes to producing scholar-athletes who don't succeed. Monday, in a Chicago courtroom, this longstanding tradition took an unusual, yet positive twist.

When a federal judge sentenced former OSU wide receiver Cris Carter to a $15,000 fine, three years of probation and 600 hours of public service for lying to a grand jury about his illegal involvement with agents, he provided a symbol of hope for a vulnerable part of our society - our youth and college athletes.

"... you can do something for society better than anyone else I know can ...," the judge told Carter after he sentenced him.

The judge was right. With Carter as a spokesman against incompetent agents who prey on empty-pocketed 18- and 19-year-old athletes, many young athletes might have a chance.

These agents lure athletes with dollar signs and trick them into signing improper letters of representation with the threat of physical harm.

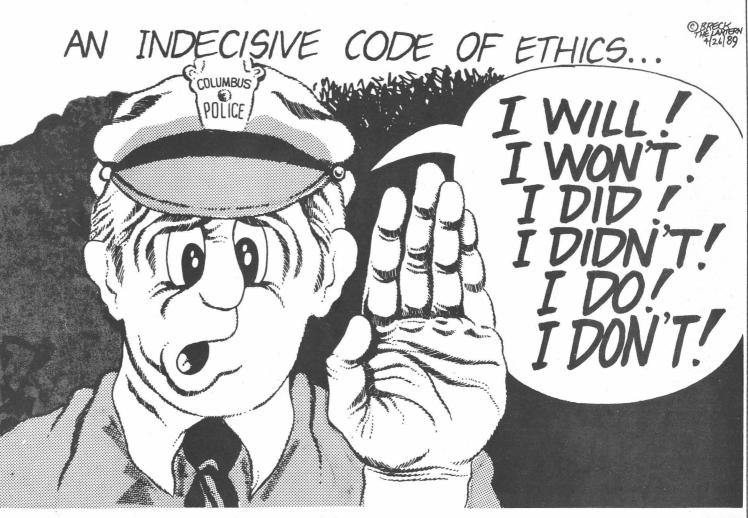

Two of these "pimps," as described by Carter's judge, were convicted on charges of racketeering, conspiracy and mail fraud in connection with two universities.

Carter said.

Because there are many agents out there who are aware of their responsibilities, yet don't care, the weight of Carter's task will be staggering.

If a bill regulating sports agents is ever passed, that weight could be reduced. Agents would have to make a public disclosure of contract details between college and professional athletes alike. The large majority of nonattorney agents would be reduced.

Carter's milestone-day in court may not be one of OSU's bragging points now, but with the aid of legislation and a new image, Carter, as a role model, will again prove himself to be a true Buckeye.

Roev. Wade, yea and nay

It has long been my view that on most public controversies, most people believe both "yes" and "no." The position we take depends on which of our contradictory views is coaxed to the fore.

For evidence, you need look no further than the question of abortion, which the Supreme Court will reexamine this week (April 25). Surveys, opinion polls, conversations with friends and my own conflicted thoughts lead me to conclude that the typical American is a pro-choice rightto-lifer.

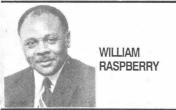

It all depends on how the question is asked.

Ask us (as a recent Media General-Associated Press poll did) whether a woman should be allowed to have an abortion if she wants it and her doctor agrees, and most of us will say yes. Ask us if we think unrestricted access to abortion for any reason whatever is a good idea, and we're likely to say

We answer one way if the focus is on a woman's right to control her body; another way if the focus is on the unborn child.

As Jason DeParle puts in the current issue of The Washington Monthly: "It's hard to hold these two important

"It's hard to hold these two images - the dismembered body of the fetus and the enveloping body of the mother, each begging the allegiance of our conscience - in mind at the same time." One of the overriding difficulties with the abortion debate is that we rarely try, preferring at least in our public utterances to eal in onedimensional thinking: "To one side, visions only of women in crisis, terrified and imperiled by an invasive growth; to the other, only legions of innocent children, chased by the steely needle."

The burden of DeParle's piece — he is pro-choice — is that the militants on his side of the debate refuse to acknowledge the moral (as opposed to the merely legalistic) implications of their position.

"The declaration of a legal right to an abortion doesn't end the discussion of what our attitude toward it should be," he asserts. "It merely begins it." The need, he says (quoting moral philosopher Daniel Callahan) is to preserve the "moral tension" implicit in an unwanted pregnancy. "This is something that too few members of the pro-choice movement are willing to do."

And yet, "moral tension" describes precisely our ambivalence on the question of abortion.

The law may be incapable of reflecting this tension — which is why partisans on both sides of the issue fear that the Supreme Court in its reexaminaton of Roe v. Wade will move toward an all-or-nothing position.

But if judges cannot deal in moral nuances, the rest of us must. Are we talking about a woman for whom giving birth — whether she keeps the baby or not — means broken health, impoverishment, a ruined mariage or a wrecked career? Or are we talking about a couple who wanted a boy rather than the girl amniocentesis reveals the wife to be carrying? Don't we look at the two cases differently even those of us who finally conclude that the decision must be left to the mother?

Only the militant partisans will insist there is no moral distinction between the two examples, no matter how similarly the legal system must view them. One side will deny that we are talking about taking human life at all; the fetus is merely "tissue" — no matter, as DeParle puts it, that the "pregnant woman, even talking to her doctor, doesn't call the growth inside her an embryo or fetus; she calls it a baby.

The other side still insist that even a newly fertilized egg is a human being, deserving of the full protection of the law.

Both sides will stand firm even when their positions are pushed to absurd limits: one arguing that a newborn baby was, a few minutes ago, mere tissue; the other insisting that an ovum fertilized in vitro, is a human being entitled to the full panoply of rights.

In one sense, DeParle's own position is absurd. He argues both for the humanity of a fetus and for the mother's right to abort it. He insists only that we recognize a moral dilemma that goes beyond legal right. " ("Of course, having the legal right to do something doesn't tell us whether it's a desirable thing to do. Women have the legal right to smoke and drink heavily during pregnancy, but few of us would hesitate to dissuade them from doing so. Why don't more feminists take the same view toward abortion — defending the right, but urging women to incline against it whenever possible?")

Supporters of Roe v. Wade can be excused for concluding that DeParle only wants to lay a guilt trip on any woman who opts for abortion. His argument finally is against what he calls "abortion-without-qualm," against the contention that a fetus isn't human unless we want it to be, and that our moral obligations to it don't exist unless we want them to.

His position will win him no friends among the activists on either side of the abortion question. But many in the conflicted majority may find themselves nodding in agreement.

DONATE:

The red and blue balloons released Monday contained a bit more than just helium.

Instead, the 200 balloons were filled with organ donor cards in an attempt to provide awareness for the National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week.

Sponsored by University Hospitals and Lifeline of Ohio Organ Procurement, the designation of such a week is to increase public awareness for the need of organ donors.

Nationally, there are about 14,000 patients in need of kidney transplants, 1,100 in need of heart transplants and 650 in need of liver transplants. In Central Ohio, there are 176 patients in need of kidney transplants, 21 in need of heart transplants and three in need of liver transplants.

The current statistics reflect the growing need for organ donors. Although it isn't pleasant to think about one's own death, the opportunity to become an organ donor is there for everyone.

The lack of organ donors is a serious problem, but easy to overcome. To become a donor, contact Lifeline, a non-profit organ procurement organization serving patients in 56 hospitals in central and southeastern Ohio and "Parkersburg, W.Va.

Becoming an organ donor is an unselfish act. The serious implications that result from apathetic individuals who choose not to donate, however, won't do a bit of good for those in berious need. The chance to save a life is critical.

Noon air raids on Wednesday?

A few weeks ago, I was startled by the sirens - traditionally sounding Wednesdays at noon - at 10:30 a.m. Advice I had received as a freshman reverberated through my mind: "Those are air raid sirens. They go off every Wednesday at twelve to keep the air-raid detection and communication system clear. Don't worry unless they don't sound at noon, or unless they sound at another time instead. That means EMERGENCY."

The identity of the source of the advice was long gone, but the words are in my mind as if they had been smeared in wet concrete.

Television and radio stations participate in an emergency broadcast system, and it made complete sense to me that a large university campus would cooperate with a city protection and prevention system, so I never questioned it. Nor did I have any reason to question it until that Wednesday.

When I thought I heard the sirens go off that morning, my mind flooded with questions.

Was there really a problem, since the air emergency system sounded off early?

And if there were a problem, was it merely a malfunction in a timing mechanism or could it be something more severe?

And if there were a severe problem, what could I do as a student unknowledgeable in air-raid protection or evacuation procedures?

Because I didn't know what to do and because I was in a closed environment (safe from an air raid), I

This time, instead of getting a migraine headache, the sirens gave me comfort.

While my mind was being put at ease, I couldn't help wondering how many other people were affected as I was after hearing the sirens.

Were they even aware of their existence and purpose?

I called the Columbus Chamber of Commerce to find out the truth about the sirens, because while some of the explanations floating around campus sound plausible, others are downright amusing.

Some thought it marked a free hamburger promotion since one of the speakers for the sirens is behind a fast-food joint.

Turn-So-You-Won't-Burn-On-Your-Wednesday-Sunbathing- Adventure theory.

The Chamber of Commerce helped me find straight answers. They said that the sirens are indeed a public broadcasting system to alert the people of large-scale dangers like air raids or severe weather conditions.

According to them, when you hear the sirens at other than the intended testing time of Wednesday at noon, the best response is turning on your radio or television to first verify an emergency (because there are timing malfunctions) and then to receive instructions tailored to the particular incident.

I can't think of an easier or less expensive method to reach.large amounts of people. Someone knew what they were doing when they started sounding the sirens.

The unfortunate part of this is that while sounding these sirens are an important safety action, many people aren't even aware that they're around, or if they are aware, they have no clue why they're here.

The more people who know about the sirens, the more effective this mode of emergency communications will be. So next time you hear them, check to see if it's Wednesday at noon.

Letters Deserves chance

Recently, Sen. Gary Suhadol-nik, R-Parma Heights, proposed a legislative action that would ing as foster parents for adopted children. His reason is that the child would face undue emotional trauma from the com-munity. My question is: will the emotional trauma be any more than that faced by a child born of a different culture, different religious background, different value system or with a physical disability? In each situation, society, because of its lack of compassion and open-mindedness, will teach the child if he is different. He will have to prove he is better to be equal. To put it more bluntly, he will have to earn his acceptance into society. Without a doubt, this legislation which makes the generali-zation that if you are gay, then you are unfit to be a parent, not only stereotypes people, but demonstrates fears that stem more from plain ignorance or hatred rather than reality. Let's face it, adoption like medicine, deals with people and people aren't clones. Thus, each case must be acted on individually. Some homosexuals will qualify to be parents, others won't. Either way, they should be given the chance. The take home message: we need to open our minds and hearts so that we may not only see, but perceive.

Naive comments

We would like to respond to the letter "Spared Animals" con-cerning the abolition of animal experimentation. The remarks that animal experiments don't prevent harmful drugs from reaching the market are both ludicrous and naive.

The slow development of new medications is due to extensive safety testing to determine the drug's therapeutic value, dosage and toxicity. This process would be made impossible without animal subjects resulting in far more dangerous side effects than these listed in "Spared Animals." This might be likened to playing Russian Roulette with a syringe Medical scientists are hardly sadistic madmen who enjoy watching animals suffer. Every effort is made to keep the subject as comfortable as possible. Unfortunately, there are few other tests that allow researchers to avoid animal experimenta-tion. However, if Ms. Clifford or Ms. Newberry would like to volunteer to save a lab rat or two, it could possibly be ar-ranged.

It would be disasterous to discontinue animal research at this time. We are on the edge of exciting new advances in finding cures to many of the most tragic diseases known to man. If it would come down to a decision between a cure for my mother's cancer or some laboratory mouse, I'll take the former

While we sympathize with some of the positions held by animal-rights activists, I fear the dangerous trend that threatens to extinguish much of basic medical research. We must use common sense and understand the costs that must be paid in order to reap the benefits that will continue to come from animal experimentation. If ignor-ance is truly bliss, then these two animal-rights activists must be very happy!

"Free?"

This letter is a rebuttal to the charges against animal research and testing, specifically the alle-gations of Melissa Clifford, on the opening of Animal Liberation Week. Ms. Clifford and her "informed" partners are at tempting to demonstrate that the use of animals in research is both unnecessary and cruel, and according to many statements from the groups they represent, the product of a backward society. I think it would be proper at

thinking about "freeing" all la-boratory animals, to take a moment to reflect on how much of their lives have been positively increased through the use of animal research. Their is scarcely a person in the world today whose lives have not been influenced through medical science, whether through taking aspiring for a cold, or going through surgery. Many of these animal-rights groups seem to forget that it was through the process of animal experimenta-tion that many of these medical techniques came about. Science is not a process of guessing in the dark; rather it is a constant series of ever-guessing questions based on facts which are slowly-gained and hard won. I wonder if these animal "rights" groups are really willing to stand up for their beliefs. My suggestion: the next time a member of POET becomes very ill, stay away from the hospital or doctors. Chances are, the treatment prescribed will have been tested first on an animal, and no doubt your conscience will not let you deal with it. Clifford, in her letter, presented a list of drugs and their side effects. Her allegation, in my interpretation, was that test-ing drugs on animals is useless because the effects on the tested animal, namely a rat, will be different from the effect on a human. The complete side effects may not be known. However, it does give the researcher a much broader area of knowledge about the drug to work with. It seems that members of POET and their ilk are completely against the use of animals for the testing of experimental drugs completely bypassing the use of animals and going directly to the human subject. I congratulate them on their courage.

Finally, in their never-ending quest fo the Dark Ages, these animal-rights groups are forget-ting that 90% of animals used in Desearch are mice and rats. Speaking of the Dark Ages, I believe it was the 14th century when rats spread the Black Death all through Europe. No doubt the members of POET are happy to let al manners of rodents, not to mention the ever-popular cockroach (why is an insects' worth less than a mammal?) run through their homes, never bothering to call an exterminator. One last though. The POET members are still not convinced about the value of animal research. Researchers have found a way to prevent diabetes in mice. I would suggest to all members to POET that they take a nice, Sunday afternoon to find a member of their own species suffering from this disease and talk to them about the worthlessness of animal research. I would recommend my uncle, but he died last December. He had been a diabetic for 20 years, kept alive for that lenght of tim by research sponsored by the Diabetes Foundation.

Pure vulgar

On April 20 I read the Lantern, including the magazine section. There was an extensive article related to skinheads. If the intent of the author was to shock people with the vulgarity of quotes, he succeeded. The vulgarity of quotes added no-thing to the opinion of the individual expressing his thoughts. Maturity would dictate some discretion in writing the article. The author could have established the points even if expletives were deleted by leaving blank spaces instead of using a multiplicity of four letter words.

R.G Rohner, Jr. West Jefferson

Melissa Clifford and Cynthia Newberry challenged us in their letter Monday to "think again" if we "think that animal exper-imentation benefits humankind." So I thought again and I believe now, more than ever, that this is an enormous benefit to us all Clifford and Newberry listed 27 drugs that passed lab animal tests, but later proved them-selves hazardous. I would like to serves hazardous. I would like to list the drugs that went through animal testing and are now used safely and effectively to relieve misery and save lives, but I can't. The most recent (1988) list published by the Food & Drug Administration took up Drug Administration took up 262 pages! Equally impressive would be the list of dangerous chemicals that failed lab animal testing and so were never used on humans. It is virtually certain that within our generation medical science will develop effective therapies – even cures – for cancer, AIDS, and many birth defects, provided that lab animal research is not restricted I find it ironic that Clifford and Newberry belong to an organiza-tion called Protect Our Earth's Treasures. Maybe treasure, like beauty, is in the eye of the beholder, but I for one can beholder, but i for one can think of no greater treasure than to protect the life of an "incurably" ill child. Yet to an animal rights activist, the "rights" of a lab rat or a pound dog supersede anyone else's right to exist! to exist!

If we take the animal rights movement seriously, we must even curtail some efforts to save endangered species. It is often possible to implant embryos of endangered animals into "surrogate mothers" from related, more common species. This tech-nique promises to boost some populations that would otherwise be hovering on the brink of extinction. But animal rights activists would forbid this research! Recently a conservationist group was trying to protect an endangered plant species. A plot of ground was set aside for cultivation of the plant, but muskrats were destroying the plot. When the conservationists set out traps to discourage the muskrats, an animal rights group protested, saying that it would be better for the plants to become extinct than for a few muskrats to be harmed! Such is the topsy-turvy "moral-ity" that a well-organized minority wished to force on us all. Let us retreat from animal "rights" to the saner ground of animal welfare and responsible use in research, husbandry, and environmental management.

The only player who remains today from the original group is bassist Brad Houser.

Bassist Brad Houser. Guitarist Kenny Withrow hooked up with the band shortly after lead vocalist Edie Brickell joined. Edie gained courage to join the band after downing a shot of Jack Daniels at a local Dallas after-hours club where the band was playing, Withrow said. The whiskey and encouragement from a college friend prompted Brickell to jump on stage and improvise lyrics with New Bohemians.

"She didn't realize how good she was," Withrow said. Drummer Matt Chamberlain, percussionist John Bush, and rhythm guitarist Wes Martin were soon recruited.

New Bohemians never expected to rise so quickly on radio. They thought they would remain underground, in college charts with a slow rise to fame, Withrow said.

MUSIC

ELIZABETH WOODS

"We aren't trying to be a retro-sixties band, but we still like to play nice chords," Withrow said.

Part of Withrow's musical training is in jazz. Brickell, With-row, and Houser attended the same high school in Dallas. The high school was a performing arts school, similar to the one portrayed in the television show "Fame"

"People didn't dance and sing on the tables during lunch though," (at the high school) Withrow said.

While attending high school, Houser and Withrow formed a small jazz band. One of Withrow's musical influences is jazz-guitarist Pat Metheny.

Withrow asserts the band is doing what they want to do, and are not following any molds. New Bohemians left their Texas home after three years of club-playing to record their debut album in Wales, entitled "Shoot-ing Rubberbands at the Stars".

Along the way, the band lost a guitarist and changed the name of the band to, Edie Brickell and New Bohemians

Foundation awards two art scholarships

Two $500 scholarships were awarded to first-year art students during the 1989 Foundation Prog-ram Exhibition at Hopkins Hall Gallery Monday night.

Kimberly Stout, a sophomore from Alliance, and Sharon Shultz, a senior from Russellspoint, each received the awards for outstanding works entered in the exhibition.

Both students are in the Department of Art Foundation program consisting of first-year classes which concentrate on the basics.

Stephen Pentak, an assistant professor in the Department of Art and director of the Founda-tion program, said, "We teach what is fundamental to all visual experience. There are classes in drawing, two-dimensional, threedimensional and special projects areas.

ALTHOUGH THE classes feature basic principles, the students are not limited by the class structure. "Basically it's all beginning techniques, but they let you experiment and develop," Stout said. "There's a lot of room to do your own thing.

The judged show consists of exemplary works from the classes as selected by the class instructors

Pentak said that the number of works are cut down to fit the gallery and then a panel of three faculty members judge the show. Stout has several drawings, paintings and a sculpted piece on display

SHULTZ, WHOSE work is also on display, was not present at the program.

Stout is majoring in general fine arts and plans to go to graduate school. She said it sounds like a cliche, but her artwork is a way to discover more about herself."

Bob Shea, chairman of the Department of Art, awarded the scholarships, and said, "It's okay not to tell your parents that you won the money and then use it for art supplies, but it's not okay to not tell them and then use it to buy beer.'

Several smaller awards were also given including an outstanding faculty member award.

We give it every year, it's basically tongue-in-cheek but the intention is heartfelt," Pentak said.

ROBERT SCHWARTZ, associate professor of art, was the recipient of the award which was a children's book of red barns.

Hopkins Gallery, 128 N. Oval Mall, will be showcasing the exhibition through April 28.

The show features works in almost every media, including sculpture, video, audio, lights, paintings and drawings.

"We're flexing our creative muscles," Pentak said.

One piece is an old car door that laughs and another is an audio/visual piece depicting a legend of monsters who used to do battle on campus.

FOUND MATERIALS, class exercises and an array of sounds are featured in the exhibit which includes several pieces made of tennis balls and tennis shoes.

For more information on the exhibition, call the University Gallery of Fine Art at 292-0330.

Arts, will also appear in the play.

The OSU Theatre Company will perform one of Shakespeare's most comical plays, "Twelfth Night," in the last production of the season.

"Twelfth Night" is the story of a twin brother and sister, Sebastian and Viola. The play opens as the twins get separated during a shipwreck. Viola is saved by the ship's captain and brought to the island of Llyrie. She disguises herself as a man for safety reasons and becomes the messenger for the Duke Orsino. Meanwhile, Sebastian appears and this sets the stage for confusion as the other characters mistake Sebastian for Viola and vice versa.

"It's basically a play about mistaken identity and misplaced love," said Thomas O'Connor, a graduate student in fine arts.

O'Connor is one of five members from the OSU Theatre Donald Harris, the new dean of the College of the Arts.

"It is music that comments on the play itself and that happens between the scenes," O'Connor said

Harris's music almost serves as a 20th century perspective on the play, O'Connor said. Whereas, the traditional music that is integrated into the action is a whole different style.

Costumes were designed by Dennis Parker, an OSU faculty member, and the set was designed by Jeffrey Smart, a graduate student in fine arts.

The performance will be held in the Stadium II Theatre at Drake Union and opens Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. Performances will run through May 13 and will begin at 8 p.m. Matinees will begin at 2 p.m

Tickets range from $5 to $6 for students and $7.50 to $8 for the general public.

'Pet Sematary' needs a space in graveyard for terrible films

"Pet Sematary" is another unsuccessful attempt to adapt a Stephen King book to film.

The movie is based on a book with the same name, written by King and published in 1983. It follows several other forgettable follows several other forgettable film adaptations of King's work such as "Cujo," "The Dead Zone" and "Christine." "Pet Sematary" tells the story of Louis Creed (Dale Midkiff), a doctor from Chicago who moves with his wife, Rachel (Denise Creachy) and their two shidton to Crosby), and their two children to a rural Maine town.

When they arrive at their new home, the Creeds discover a path home, the creeds discover a path leading into the woods behind their house. Their new neighbor, Jud Crandall (Fred Gwynne), takes them down the path which leads to a small graveyard local children have built to bury their nets pets

A SMALL sign outside the graveyard is misspelled "Pet Sematary," hence the title.

During this scene, the movie achieves some of the depth King provides in the book. Crandall some of the dark humor King included in his book. When the family cat dies, Cran-dall takes Creed into the woods past the pet cemetery to an Indian burial ground. Creed buries the cat there, and the next day the cat shows up back at the bause alive but with a rather house alive, but with a rather nasty temper. It seems that, as Crandall says in the movie, "some things are better off dead." HAD THE movie continued in this way, it may have been a success. It seemed as if the director, Mary Lambert, wasn't satisfied to let the movie succeed on the merits of the story.

The first half of the movie is thought-provoking and well done, but the second half abandons this completely and tries to repulse the viewer by showing blood. This leaves the viewer feeling cheated when the movie ends. One scene that was done very well, is when Creed's son is hit by a truck and killed. Not one drop of blood is shown, but it is easily the most disturbing scene in the movie.

Lambert doesn't take advantage of other opportunities to improve the movie. For example, she almost totally ignores the mental conflict Creed goes through as he decides whether or not to resurrect his son.

On the positive side, Fred Gwynne gives a good performance as Jud Crandall. He delivers his lines in a New England accent, and makes his character believable. He also gets to display a little of King's humor with lines like, "You only stop melting the frost on where you're laying when vou're dead.'

KING'S MAJOR strength in his books is character development, something which is difficult to do in a 90 minute movie. He takes ordinary people and makes the reader care about them by telling the character's thoughts and feelings and telling about the character's past.

Lambert tries to use flashback scenes to provide background to the characters, but fails miserably. These scenes only confuse the viewer and hurt the film rather than help it.

Scenes of a young Rachel Creed taking care of a dying older sister seem out of place, as does a fight between Louis Creed and his father-in-law. They would prob-ably seem senseless to someone who had never read the book

4 Buckeyes hope for NFL career

Four former Ohio State football players were taken in the National Football League college draft this weekend.

All-American center Jeff Uhlenhake and running back Vince Workman were drafted in the fifth round. Defensive tackle Derek MacCready and wide receiver Everett Ross were both taken on the second day of the draft. Uhlenhake was the choice of the Miami Dolphins while Workman was selected by the Green Bay Packers.

MacReady went in the ninth round to the Detroit Lions and Ross went to the Minnesota Vikings as the last player chosen

"I think I'm going to make the Miami Dolphins," Uhlenhake said at the Woody Hayes Athletic Center. "It's just I have to go down there and do my best." Uhlenhake was selected as Uhlenhake, who was selected as first team All-America by The Sporting News last season, reports to Miami for rookie mini-camp this Thursday.

Uhlenhake joins former Buckeye Eric Kumerow who was a first round draft choice of the Dolphins last year.

Workman said he was surprised the Packers chose him as early in the draft as they did. He said he expected to be drafted in the sixth or seventh round.

Like Uhlenhake, Workman has been keeping in shape at the Hayes facility.

Hayes tacility. "I've been running, working out and running patterns with (former Buckeyes) Jim Karsatos and Chris Spielman," Workman said. "I feel I've got just as good a shot as everybody else to make the Pack-ers." ers MacCready and Ross were unavailable for comment. Uhlenhake was rated as a second or third round choice by most scouting reports.

Although he is 6-feet-4, 275 pounds, the reports said Uhlenhake was lacking some of the size and strength of a professional lineman. "I thought Jeff Uhlenhake would go between the second and third round," said Buckeye coach John Cooper. "He had a great year for us. What do you mean strong? He's plenty strong." "I don't always take a lot of stock in what those people (se-outs) say," said Jim Colletto, offensive coordinator for the Buckeyes. "He's certainly in my opinion strong enough to play." Then there is another factor - speed. Colletto said the biggest difference going from the college Fortunately, Coletto said, "For a big man, Jeff is very quick." Quickness is one thing Workman does not have to worry about. He runs a 4.5 second 40-yard dash. Workman will have to worry about what effect a one-year layoff from the sport will have on him. He played in only one game last season, an opening day vic-tory against Syracuse, before be-ing suspended for taking money from sports agents.

"I still have my versatility," Workman said. "I can do a lot of different things. I can return punts, return kickoffs, run the ball, catch. I can even threw the ball if I have to."

Workman said he was a key part of the Buckeyes' trick play-book his junior year when he would fake run and pass. Uhlenhake said one of the problems with trying out for the Dolphins is missing school. He is a senior from Newark majoring in hotel management. He said he may have to drop out this quarter and finish next winter.

Softball team drops two more games

By Gary Hunt Lantern sports write

The OSU softball team lost both games of a doubleheader with Indiana Tuesday at North Field

The losses drop Ohio State's record to 8-26 overall, 2-14 in the Big Ten. Indiana, which came into Tuesday's games tied for second in the Big Ten, improved to 24 15 10 c 24-15. 10-6.

In the first game, the Buckeyes took an early lead, scoring two first-inning runs after retiring Indiana in the top of the first. Carolyn Urse began the first-inning rally when she singled with one out. After another single by

Shauna Bowman, Susan Gahn singled to score Urse. Two more singles by Colleen

Kennedy and Cathy Hansen brought in another run and prompted Indiana Coach Diane Stephenson to bring in a new pitcher.

Indiana escaped from the first inning without giving up any more runs and immediately went to work on OSU starting pitcher Lori Capozza.

The Hoosiers got two runs on three hits and a walk before Capozza ended the rally by striking out the final Indiana batter with the bases loaded.

After retiring Ohio State in order in the second, Indiana again rallied in the top of the third. With one out, the Hoosiers struck for four hits and a walk to score two more runs and end the day for Capozza oor showing, unusual for her this year, was caused by a lack of concentration.

"Lori just tried to guide the ball a little bit too much and got herself into some trouble," Davenport said.

Buckeve bats were silent until buckeye bats were shent until the bottom of the seventh, when Edie Bargar hit a pinch-hit triple to lead off the inning. Cathy Boettcher's double scored Bargar, tying the game at three. Boettcher then advanced to third when a fly ball was dropped by the Indiana left fielder.

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) - By her count, Dr. Ruth Barnett performed 40,000 abortions over a half-century, all during a time when the practice was illegal.

 Police raided her clinic again and again. She served two terms in the county jail, one term in the state prison, but insisted always, "I never really broke the law."

She died in 1969, never living to see the U.S. Supreme Court's Rqe vs. Wade decision, which changed the law to give women a constitutional right to an abortion.

Now, the high court is considering a Missouri case that could change the landmark abortion ruling. On the eve of Wednesday's opening arguments in the case, people who knew Barnett remembered the doctor and her crusade.

To some, she was "Ruthless Ruth." To others, especially her patients, she was an angel of mercy.

. At age 16, Barnett became pregnant and had an abortion. In her 1969 book, "They Weep At My Doorstep," she told about breaking the news of the pregnancy to her boyfriend.

"He was sympathetic at first, then resentful. He was not to blame, he said . . . 'You got yourself that way, now get yourself out of it."

The experience persuaded her to learn a method practiced by one of the first female surgeons in the Northwest, Dr. Alys Bixby Griff. Barnett was trained to perform abortions, and in 1932 she was certified as a doctor of naturopathy.

She developed her code of ethics: Every woman had the right to choose a safe, sanitary abortion over an unwanted pregnancy

"Helen" was 18 when she went to see Barnett in 1946. Today, she's a grandmother.

"I wonder in God's name what would have happened to me without Dr. Barnett. I was so manslaughter of fetuses by abor-determined," said the woman, who tion and maintaining a public spoke on condition that her real nuisance. One of the clinics raided name not be revealed.

She learned of Barnett through a girlfriend. Her boyfriend gave her $400 for the abortion. "Never at any time was I ambivalent," she said. "It was no choice, not pro-choice ... It was a sobering event, I didn't take it lightly. To me, it was immoral to get married because you were pregnant."

Helen married her boyfriend and together had two children, "both welcome, both planned," she said

Barnett's practice flourished during the Depression and through World War II, when many women joined the workforce

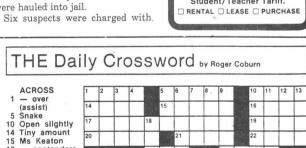

But in the 1950s, police began to crack down on Portland's abortion clinics.

Police were helped by The Oregon Journal's ace investigative reporter Rolla J. Crick. Crick said in an interview that in 1951 he and a policewoman posing as his pregnant girlfriend made the rounds of the clinics. They gave their findings to the district attorney. On July 6, Crick's byline ap-eared under a banner headline, "POLICE CRACK DOWN ON ABORTION NESTS."

Crick told how police "thundered at the doors of half a dozen suspected abortion mills in simul-taneous raids." Partially clad women ran screaming from the premises as suspected abortionists were hauled into jail.

nuisance. One of the clinics raided was Barnett's but she was not arrested because she was not there.

There were no figures on the number of women injured or killed by illegal abortions, Crick said

He said he remembered that Barnett ran a clean operation and her work was respected by the medical community. Barnett herself claimed 70 percent of her patients were referred by doctors.

Barnett was flambovant, often dressing like a showgirl in furs and fancy jewels. Detractors claimed Barnett performed abortions for the money. But others said she performed many abortions for free.

During her career, she made $9 million, but with her resources exhausted by high living and legal fees, she died at age 77 with less than $15,000.

Only when she was dying of cancer in the Oregon Women's Correctional Center did she agree not to perform another abortion.

OSU professor awarded for NASA program work

By Jannette Dugan

An OSU professor was recently granted a distinguished service award as part of a ceremony held in Washington, D.C., by Universi-ties Space Research Association. Gerald M. Gregorek, OSU pro-fessor of aeronautical and astro-nautical engineering received the nautical engineering, received the award because of his pioneering leadership in the NASA/USRA University Advanced Design Prog-

He began his career at Ohio State in 1960, and teaches under-graduate and graduate classes and heads the USRA Advanced Air-craft Design Project.

A 62-member university consor-tium chose Gregorek based on his leadership in a national search for excellence in university research, implementing the advancement of space science and technology.

"Its something I really love to do and it's great to be recognized for it also," Gregorek said. Paul Coleman, USRA president and nationally recongnized space scientist, presented the award to Gregorek during the ceremony commemorating 20 years of USRA service to the nation.

The Advanced Design Program is a unique national program that brings together NASA engineers, students and faculty from universities with aeronautical engineering programs. Schools that participate select a space- or aeronautics- related design project, and students work on it as a design team in collabora-tion with a NASA center. Ohio State works with the Lewis NASA

Research Center in Cleveland. Gregorek said the OSU program consists of four teams of seven students who make continual oral and written presentations to various corporations in their field. Tuesday the group visited the General Electric aircraft division in Cincinnati and presented some of the ideas they had been working with during the program. "It gives students a chance to practice oral presentations, interact with professionals and learn to work as a group," Gregorek said.

Gregorek said the pilot program Ohio State is involved in consists of one quarter of a seminar series, a quarter of a four-hour design lab and then the last quarter of the program is a three-hour design lab.

"The whole program is self-motivated. There aren't any deadlines, but you do have presenta-tion due dates that must be met," said Robyn Reuss, a graduate student from Ashland participating in the USRA design program. Carl Dever, a senior from Brecksville and a member of one of the aeronautical program teams, said the experience he has gained has given him a chance to see what will be expected of him following moducing see what will be cape-following graduation. Gregorek said the OSU program will be officially receiving a grant that is awarded to six of 28 universities associated with USRA Money from the grant will be used for travel purposes and a teaching assistant. Gregorek and Ohio State have been part of the pilot program since it was initiated in 1986.

Students show their dairy best

By Amy Snow Lantern staff writer

Elsie the Cow might not show up for the Buckeye Royal competi-tion, but some of her colleagues will be proudly strutting their stuff with the help of some OSU students.

The Buckeye Dairy Club is sponsoring the annual Buckeye Royal, a contest where students participate in a showing competition of dairy cattle. "The purpose of the Royal is to get more people familiar with the dairy animals and Agriculture campus," said Julie Lemmermen, chairperson of the Buckeye Royal.

The Buckeye Dairy Club works in conjunction with Animal Science 100, the domestic animals in the service of man. Lemmermen, a junior majoring in dairy science from Tiffin, said the students in the class have a being of either experiments choice of either competing in the competition or writing a paper. The Royal is open to OSU students, faculty and staff. There are two classes - one for people with experience in showing dairy cattle, and one for those who are not, she said. The students who compete are assigned animals and have two weeks to train and prepare the cattle for show.

Christa Peters, a freshman in animal science from Urbana, said there are demonstrations twice a week for the students during the training period so they know what to do.

Peters said she is walking and washing her animal every day, getting it ready for the show. She has never shown dairy cattle before, but has shown steers.

"It's a little different, but you use the same concepts - like you use the same concepts — like you walk dairy cattle slower, and you hold a steers head up when you show it," she said. "I really like working with animals and I think it's interest-ing and fun. Besides I won't have to do a term paper if I show." The students will be judged on

The students will be judged on how well the animal is cleaned and clipped. There are basic grooming techniques that should be followed, Lemmermen said. Lemmermen estimates there will be about 45 people competing in the contest. The preliminary showing will be held at 10 a.m. Saturday in Plumb Hall, and the top five contestants will then compete at 1 p.m. The winners of the finals will receive trophies, she said.

Kelly Easterday, a freshman dairy science major from Roches-ter, Ind., is showing in the experienced class. She is not in the Animal Science 100 course, but has shown dairy cattle in the Fulton County Fair in Indiana Fulton County Fair in Indiana and has won in the master, senior, junior and beginner divi-sions of the showmanship competition.

Easterday said the judges look for a person who is calm. The cattle knows when a person is nervous or upset and it shows in the performance of the cattle.

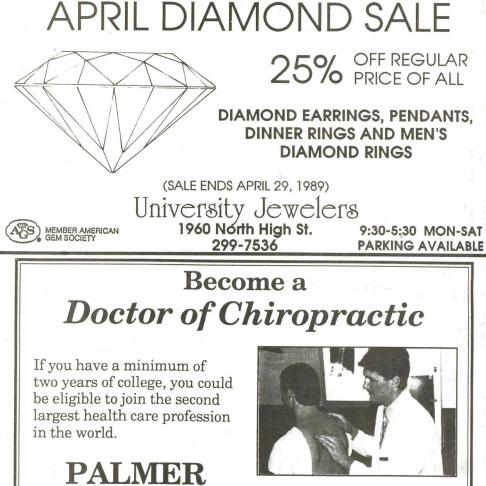

A good showman should know how to best present the animal, and should also be knowledgeable about the animal so he or she can answer any questions the judge might have, she said.

this globally competitive society." He concluded that speech by saying, "We are a university essential to the success of a knowledge-based economy...We are a university of vision and opportunity...We are the model for the American university of the 21st century."

The topic of your essay is how a large university like The Ohio State University responds to the challenges President Jennings has provided.

To Learn More Call 1 (800) 44-CHIRO 1(800/442-4476)

We're Ready

As a starting point, your essay might address questions like: How does the university prepare students for a "globally competitive society"? Is a university "essential to the success of a knowledge based economy"? How is The Ohio State University "a model for the American university of the 21st century"?

The essay is limited to 500 words, double-spaced, typewritten or submitted from a word processor. Handwritten essays will not be considered.

All essays must be received in the Lantern Business Office, Room 281-E Journalism, 242 W. 18th Avenue, Columbus, OH 43210 by 5 pm Friday, April 28th.

The judges will select a first place winner and three honorable mentions. The first place winner's essay will appear on the editorial page of the Lantern one day in May, together with a photograph of the author.

All winners must be OSU students who will be required to submit proof of student status before receiving their awards. The first place winner will receive $150 and each honorable mention will receive $50. Branch campus students are encouraged to submit essays.

Essays will be judged on originality of ideas, expression and development of thought, and proper grammatical usage. Employees of the Lantern or students currently enrolled in Journalism 421.01, 421.02, or 421.03 are ineligible.

Individuals from the following entities will serve as judges: Lantern Editorial Staff, English Department, College of Medicine, College of Engineering, College of Business and Long's Bookstore.
