Ohio unemployment down

Franklin County's rate down to only 4.8 percent, job market is hopeful

> By Adam Konvalinka Lantern staff writer

Unemployment in Ohio has been slowly decreasing over the last year, but the latest figures show the job market is still competitive.

Ohio's unemployment rate rose .1 percent in April to 5.8 percent, with Franklin County's rate at 4.8 percent. However, the overall U.S. unemployment rate fell .1 percent during the same period to 5.6 percent.

The theme, "Taking Back Responsibility: Redirecting, Protecting and Celebrating Our Community," will unite hip-hop artists and rap moguls with the community to discuss important societal issues and to encourage people between the ages of 18 and 40 to regis-

"It's about getting the community involved, especially inner-city youths," said Tracy Taylor, promotions director at Radio One Columbus, a media sponsor of the event. "Getting them out to register to vote is the first step.

The summit will feature a panel of artists such as Russell Simmons, Layzie Bone, Reverend Run of Run DMC, Kayne West, Loon and the Diplomats. The musicians will be available requirement, but it is encourto comment on certain issues like the war effort, why it is important to vote and other topics that affect the community, Taylor said.

The discussions will be directed to a specific individual on the panel.

Dr. Ben Chavis, president of the Hip Hop Action Network, called the actions that will take place at the Summit "edu-tainment."

This is education and entertainment mixed; this is the remix," he said. "We are mixing the values of higher education with truth and power through the poetry, through the youth and through the music."

Chavis said he is hopeful the Ohio Summit will be the most successful out of the 23 summits he has produced in the past three years. About 1,000 Ohioans have been registering to vote per day in conjunction with the hip-hop summit, he said.

"Everybody always likes us because we're so cheap," said Karen Davis, student manager of the Dairy Store and a sophomore in marketing at Ohio State. "You can get a hot dog, chips and a Coke for $2.

Also on the menu are soups, deli-style sandwiches, barbecue chicken and pork sandwiches, ice cream, sausage and more.

The store, located in the Parker Food and Science Technology Building at 2015 Fyffe Court, is not for profit. The proceeds are either used to pay student workers their wages or are invested back into the store, in ways such as purchasing new refrigerators and picnic tables.

Many of the customers said they enjoy the value and convenience of the Dairy Store.

Police presence

Greek senator opposes substation

Among many options being explored in the quest to improve off-campus safety, one of the more popular and probable possibilities is the establishment of a Columbus Division of Police substation. Undergraduate Student Government passed a resolution Thursday to create this substation, which will likely be placed at the current Long's book store site once the store is relocated to the University Gateway.

However, not all memebers of USG were in favor of the Drewe Niehaus, USG greek senator, said she was against the location of the proposed substation because of the "high greek population on 15th Ave.," according to a Lantern article. She also said she "wouldn't want her sorority sisters to be walking home from a bar and have to be concerned with higher police presence.

Niehaus also averted to another reason the substation had no place on the corner of 15th Avenue and High Street: "the crime is more of a south campus problem," according to the article.

Officers would be the prime candidates of protection against those who would normally attack sorority girls on their way home from other High Street venues. Except in the cases of the most inept of criminals, most would-be fondlers, gropers and other sexual deviants would most likely be turned off by the massive concentration of badges and firearms merely a short sprint away from Sorority Row.

Perhaps another worry the greek senator has is potential buzzkilling of parties with over-aggressive officers even closer to the action. With a nearby substation that could supply reinforcements and also be used for regrouping, policemen may be better-rested and more jumpy at the sight of possible empty keg-induced fights. Again, this is doubtful.

In fact, the only real danger sorority girls are put under by the possible substation is the one they put themselves in risk of every night as is — being caught for public, underage drunkenness. Every night, sorority girls — along with a great number of Ohio State underagers — constantly put themselves in the line of fire by finding ways to get drinks at bars or at house parties. Putting a substation right on the corner of 15th and High puts every weekend war-

The comments made by Niehaus show no actual concern about the physical safety of her sisters, but merely their legal safety. The only good point she made was that crime was more abundant in South Campus, though that fact is covered up by that a 15th avenue street hub would be able to equally service both south and north campuses, as well as the off-campus area east of High Street.

rior at risk as they walk down to their respective sorority house.

Niehaus' comments bring concern to the voters behind her election. The greek senator is elected to protect the interests of the greek community — while trying to protect her sisters from arguably deserved punishment is certainly admirable, perhaps real issues of sorority safety should be higher on

No New York

Paris best choice to host Olympics

The International Olympic Committee announced May 18 the five cities that will be competing for the 2012 Summer Olympics. Paris, New York, Madrid, Moscow and London were all selected as candidates for hosting. Of these five cities, one stands out as the least deserving of an Olympic

There are simply too many logistical problems that would arise if New York were chosen for the Olympics. Being the largest city in America and one of the world's largest cities creates unique problems that don't exist in the other bidding cities. New York's massive size and location on the cramped eastern seaboard of North America create enough traffic problems without the introduction of thousands of visitors from

There is also the threat of terrorism in New York. Since the tragedy in Munich in 1972, Olympics have been prime targets for terrorist attacks. And New York presents an especially appealing target, because it has already been the site of the most lethal terrorist attack on American soil ever. The security precautions that would have to be put in place to prevent another attack would have to be very tight, and with a city the size of New York, they may not even work.

Physical facilities are another issue. Even if a planned football stadium for the New York Jets, which would double as the main Olympic stadium in a New York Olympics, gets built, other facilities will be harder to find and build if neces-

There is also the fact that the United States has gotten its fair share of Olympics in the past eight years. The Summer Olympics were held in Atlanta in 1996, and the Winter Olympics made it to Salt Lake City in 2002. Giving it to America again will ruin the special effect an Olympics has on both a city and a nation. Give it to another country that hasn't hosted the Olympics in recent memory.

A city like Paris. Of the countries whose cities have been nominated for the 2012 Olympics, France hasn't held a summer Olympics since 1924, in Paris. It would be Paris' third Summer Olympics, but it would also be London's third Olympics if it were chosen, and Spain hosted the Summer Olympics in 1992 in Barcelona. Paris has had success in running international events in recent years, successfully hosting 1998 World Cup matches, including the final, and the 2003 World Track and Field championships. It also has a track record of successfully running large annual events, like the final stage of the Tour de France as well as the French Open in tennis. Paris is more than prepared for the size and scope of an Olympic event, and more than deserving of the honor.

Survival of the fittest

the laborious planning and execution of what is often the bane of students' college extracurricular existence: fundraising. Any individual actively involved in a student organization understands that without the funding, their organization and cause could cease to exist entirely on this campus.

And yet, despite all those fundraising events, in addition to the meager funds provided by the university, they still seem to somehow monetarily fall short. At one point or another, most student leaders will have spent money from their own collegestudent pockets. It is a hard life.

And guess what student leaders of Ohio State? Thanks to the newly proposed funding guidelines by the Council on Student Affairs, it may just get a whole lot harder.

Under the new proposal, all campus organizations will basically be divided into three groups, or essentially, tiers: unregistered student groups, new and re-established student organizations, and established student organizations. Based on which group or tier the organization is in, funding and university resources may or may not be used or distributed. Obviously, the established student organization status will reap the most benefits, including the right to use Ohio State's name on paper and up to $2,500 for programming fees. The others groups, depending on their status, would receive anywhere from $1,000 to nothing at all.

For smaller and underrepresented groups on campus, however, the goal of one day receiving established student organization status is unlikely. The following is a glimpse of some of the problems that exist due as a result of the new proposal.

A minimum of 25 members is needed for established group organization status. It is often the case, however, that many amazing things on this campus are done as a result of small, student groups with a passion for their cause. The quality and worth of a student group should not be, in this case, based on the quantity. It is interesting lood, sweat and tears often go into to note, however, that Greek organizations are exempt from this requirement and may have less than 25 members and still receive established group organization standing.

The concern among student leaders is greatest with those who lead small and underrepresented groups. Changes in funding practices will hit these groups the hardest because they are, well, minority and/or underrepresented groups. Thus their organizations tend to be smaller in size.

And as students at a university that loves to herald itself on diversity, equality and openness, the new proposal measures are a slap in the face.

Although to the average Joe, $1000 of funds granted to an organization may be considerable, it is considered child's play for student leaders. Angela Chang, president of the Asian American Association, breaks down the costs needed in order to fund a good program: $300 toward food, $1,000 speaker fee, $300 transportation for the speaker, $300 in publicity and fliers, $300 facility fee and a $200 fee for equipment. The total costs for a large event hosted by the AAA costs approximately $2,400.

Chang understands that due to the number of members and other small-print stipulations proposed by CSA, groups such as AAA and others could potentially never receive established student organization status and its accompanying benefits.

There is much irony in the given circumstances because the new proposal is a small-scale example of how in the real world, minority and other underrepresented groups can be often unintentionally stifled while the same culprits simultaneously hail themselves on their advancements in diversity and equal opportunity.

CSA should engage in real conversation with the groups that will be hit hardest, not just hold open meetings where an already done plan is established and then defended by its creators from angry throngs of student leaders. Perhaps then we can truly take steps forward in embracing and equalizing the playing field for all on this campus — not just the majority.

Gene plans more 'sci' than 'fi'

Back in the politically quieter Summer of 2001, a few, evi-dently shortsighted, pundits suggested that President Bush's decision on stem cell research would be the most momentous of his tenure. After all, what could possibly be so controversial, what could so preoccupy commentators, as how we treat the very seeds of human life?

That fall, of course, the deaths of about 3,000 people in the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks changed what Americans — and their president — saw as important. Since then, the political and economic fallout of the attacks not to mention the invasions of Afghanistan and Iraq - have eclipsed most of the media attention once allocated to bioethics issues. Yet, cutting-edge biological research - work that often raises thorny moral questions — has progressed unabated, albeit under the surface of popular consciousness.

For example, shortly after Sept. 11, the Center for Human Reproduction announced that it would offer gender selection by in vitro embryo creation and testing at its clinics in New York and Illinois

For some time, couples have been able to stack the genotypic odds of having a child of a preferred sex. For example, spinning a sperm sample in a centrifuge often does the trick: Heavier, X chromosome, girl-spawning sperm is spun to the outside; while the lighter, Y chromosome, boy-making sperm sits in the middle. Some companies claim an 80 percent success rate with this method, but it's still far from foolproof. Suppose experts and society accept this technique. Issues of gender discrimination aside (such concerns are obviously important, but are outside the scope of this piece), it's not much of a leap from picking zygotes by sex chromosomes to selecting zygotes by genes, or even modifying individual genes. A zygote, a cell formed by the fusion of a sperm and egg, undergoes mitosis, successively splitting to form an embryo.

Genetically "fixing" a zygote's predisposition for hemophilia, leukodystrophy, progeria or any other of a myriad of genetic disorders, should be acceptable to all but the most restrictive interpretations of how man should be allowed to tamper with nature (whatever that might mean). But what about less "essential" traits, those that don't (or shouldn't) materially affect quality of life? Should a parent be able to pick eye color or hair color? What about handedness? Height? Skin color?

Previously hypothetical discussions about many bioethical dilemmas are becoming very applicable, and demand the public attention they haven't received in recent years.

The future, it seems, is now, and we ought to start discussing it accordingly.

Appreciate our heroes

s our boat touched sand and the ramp went down I became a visitor to hell." — Pvt. Charles Neighbor, 29th Division, Omaha Beach, Sixty years ago this Sunday, the amphibious invasion of Normandy, Dday, marked the beginning of the end of the Third Reich. It was a costly victory. By day's end, 1,465 Americans lay dead, with thousands more wounded or missing. Tragic as it was, we know now that such sacrifices turned the tide of war, and thanks in large part to American resolve, the enemies of freedom did not prevail.

Prior to the attack on Pearl Harbor, however, Americans were predominately isolationists. In a 1941 speech, the famous aviator Charles Lindbergh spoke out strongly against joining "the fiasco of this war," citing a survey showing that 80 percent of our citizens opposed intervention. Even with growing threats across both oceans, most Americans preferred to watch from the sidelines.

But the Japanese attack that December changed everything — the entire country went to war footing and never looked back. Military recruiting soared, industry switched from butter to guns, and the civilian population did whatever they could to aid the war effort.

Even celebrities did their part. Hollywood actors weren't leading protesters in anti-American chants — they were fighting alongside their fellow countrymen. Jimmy Stewart and Clark Gable flew bombing missions over Germany. Henry Fonda joined the Navy. Ronald Reagan and John Wayne, who couldn't fight for health reasons, devoted their time to producing instructional films for the military and inspirational war films for the public.

Baseball greats Joe DiMaggio and Ted Williams, both in their peak during World War II, missed three full seasons to serve their country. Even Lindberg came around and applied for re-commission in the Army Air Force. Though Roosevelt refused his request for political reasons, Lindberg went to the Pacific as a "civilian technician" to teach pilots how to extend the range of their fighter aircraft. He also ended up flying 50 combat sorties and downed a Japanese Zero — just don't tell

Unlike today, Americans back then realized that partisanship has no place in war. The media, in its pre-Vietnam form, didn't actively work to undermine American military goals. They didn't declare the war a quagmire after we lost Guam, Wake Island and the Philippines to the Japanese early in the Pacific campaign. Politicians didn't suggest impeaching President Roosevelt after the surprise attack on Pearl, and they didn't demand the resignation of Secretary of War Henry Stimson after 19,000 Americans were killed in the Battle

It was a time when America, facing the colossal task of liberating an entire continent and half an ocean, came together and did the impossible. Tom Brokaw was right: This really was the greatest generation.

Greatest of all, of course, were the troops. The recently dedicated World War II Memorial in Washington is but a small token of America's eternal gratitude to the men, living and dead, who fought and died during that critical juncture in history. Of the 16 million American servicemen who survived the war, 12 million remain, but they're disappearing by the thousands each week.

Before they're gone, it's important that we fully appreciate what they went through. If you haven't already seen the film Saving Private Ryan, rent it.

The men who fought their way onto the beaches at Normandy, like the men who fought at Lexington, Antietam, Okinawa, Inchon, Saigon, Kabul, Baghdad and every other battlefield in American history, deserve every measure of recognition and appreciation we can give them. We should not forget that freedom is not free — and must never forget those who have paid the bill.

Herbivores at the BBQ

addle up the cornhole set and buckle down the grill—it's spring and what's first on everyone's list besides jump starting your sandal addiction and tossing aside your sweat shirts and long johns for the new Buckeye bikini with strategically placed O's, it's a cookout. Time for rustling up some grub for rustling up some grub.

Besides the oval being packed with the contradiction of bronzed eye candy and preachers, you know it's officially spring when the hish and shizel of meat fills the air alongside the thuds of what I've come to see as neutered horse shoes — cornhole. But to get to this point of fun in the sun, there is the strange meandering of phone calls, grocery shopping and etiquette that need to be maneuvered.

Cookout etiquette may not seem that important in the hierarchy of party hosting when the goal is to burn meat patties as fast as possible then cover up the gas taste with month old ketchup. But unless you've seen the ravenous eyes of eight hungry men attentively watching to see who's going to take the remaining burger, you wouldn't understand that more than a few friendships have been lost over the last temptation of the cookout.

Everyone knows the general idea of a cookout. Find a person with a grill, then talk them into having people over while gently coaxing them into thinking it was their idea. Next, show up with various dishes — most notably four different yet remarkably similar tasting types of potato salad. The chef pulls out an apron that says "kiss the cook" with the second O scratched out and a C drawn over it, and the debacle that is cooking begins cooking begins.

A cookout is a delicate balance of timing and people, because of this, throwing a monkey wrench into the fray could very well end with someone going home with singed eyebrows. A picky eater is not someone you want standing over your shoulder telling you how to flip a burger, and the always prevalent freeloader, complaining about everything from it being too sunny to the height of the grass should be avoided at all costs. So brush up on your Burger

"the blood of a conyour soul"—no care that much be fun to watch the shifting in every general brow bear grateful your frand that the veg stopped a fist fi burger by eating could be worse, wegan—and the new ball game.

Time skills and send these people looking for snipes or headlight fluid. With this in mind, having a vegetarian at a cookout requires the tact of a British Queen at tea time.

The cookout mystery: a vegetarian. Like locusts or raining frogs, a vegetarian at a cookout is a serious matter. Besides being baffled by the concept of cooking meat over open flames, now there are the complexities of what to feed an Atkins antichrist. Boca burgers and cardboard would probably flash across your eye lids along with the thought "why didn't he just bring his own Frankenstein soy concoction." But this is where etiquette comes into play.

Being a vegetarian, I can tell you now that the cookout season is made more difficult when I know that everyone is cooking up some good eats, and I'm left with the always stirring question of would I like a grilled cheese or one of the potato salads. I know that it's partially my fault for being a picky eater and I should bring my own food, but I'm also vindictive if there isn't at least a fruit cup laying around.

Ten hot dogs and only eight buns can lead to some pretty interesting food management, add to the mix a vegetarian with a grilled cheese habit and you're looking down the barrel of a couple of loaded hotdogs with nothing to cover their nakedness but relish. And naked hot dogs are as enjoyable as a curry flavored popsicle.

So how does a host tiptoe around the topic and avoid a hot dog peep show? Simple — don't ask the vegetarian what he'd like on his burger. Chances are you know your friends and what they like and dislike. If you ask me what I'd like on my burger I'd say "the blood of a cow slathered in your soul" — not because I really care that much but because it's fun to watch the uncomfortable shifting in everyone's seats and general brow beating that accompanies stupid questions.

In the end, laissez-faire. Be grateful your friends are there and that the vegetarian stopped a fist fight over the last burger by eating all the buns. It could be worse, he could be a vegan — and that's a whole new ball game.

Mindy and Brian Matlock eat a gourmet meal at Medical City Dallas Hospital in Dallas, May 18, with their new-born daughter, Elizabeth, left. The hospital is trying to turn around the bad reputation about hospital food with menus more on the order of hotel room service.

Hospital food: from yucky to yummy

By Jamie Stengle Associated Press

DALLAS — Welcome to hospital food nouveau, where menus tout salmon with cucumber and melon relish. How about chocolate chip pancakes? Reservations not required, hospital gowns acceptable.

A growing number of hospitals are moving to hotel-style the patient in the center of what room service for patients.

"I think people have that perception before they even come into the hospital, 'Oh it's hospital food. I know it's going to be bad,"' said Mary Ann Moser, director of food and nutrition services for Medical City Dallas Hospital, which recently began its new food service.

The hospital serves about 350 meals each breakfast, lunch and dinner. Patients can call from 6:45 a.m. to 7 p.m. to place orders for food

"Patient satisfaction was really a key for us," Moser said.

Trying to lure patients and keep them happy in a competitive market has inspired hospitals across the nation to start banishing bland food served at set times.

"It's kind of a trend of placing a hospital does," said Alicia Mitchell, a spokeswoman for the American Hospital Association. This is one example of a hospital offering more choice.

Bush revives plan for religious groups o

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush, trying to revive a stalled initiative, said yesterday the doctrine of separation-of-state should not prevent religious groups from competing for government money to help the needy.

"I'm telling America, we need to not discriminate against faith-based programs," Bush told community leaders at a White House conference. "We need to welcome them so our society is more wholesome, more welcoming and more hopeful for every single citizen."

Opponents of Bush's initiative, launched in the early days of his administration, worry that government would wind up paying for religion. They also object to allowing taxpayer-funded groups to hire and fire based on religious persuasion. But the proposal is popular with religious groups, a key political constituency of Bush's, and he is pushing it as an election-year initiative.

"I fully understand it's important to maintain the separation of church and state," Bush said. "We don't want the state to become the church, nor do we want the church to become the state. We're in common agreement there."

"But I do believe that groups should be allowed to access they don't proselytize or exclude somebody simply because they don't share a certain faith," he said. "In other words, there's a way to accom-and state and at the same time accomplish the social objective of having America become a hopeful place and loving place," Bush said to loud applause and shouts of "Amen."

"Bush's support for faithbased initiatives rings hollows," said Jano Cabrera, a Democratic National Committee spokesman. "With his right hand, Bush is providing minimal support to faith-based groups but with his left, he's planning to cut the social safety net whole-cloth if he wins in November."

Thwarted by Congress, the president has sidestepped lawmakers with executive orders and regulations to give religious organizations equal footing in competing for federal contracts. He is still fighting for legislation that would give religious groups access to federal funds as long as their services are available to anyone.

The goal is to make sure grass 0 roots leaders can compete on an equal footing for federal dollars, receive greater private support and face fewer bureaucratic barriers, the White House said.

By Gina Hollan Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court refused yesterday to consider a libel case that asked if business executives like those in recent corporate scandals are a type of "public figure" entitled to less privacy under the mes at such an earloithtiterno

Justices rejected the appeal of a California newspaper that had been ordered to pay $2.25 million to a major stockholder in the now-defunct Santa Barbara Savings and Loan.

Beverly Hills businessman Leonard M. Koss accused the Santa Barbara News-Press of libeling him in 1988 and 1999 stories that said he was investigated by federal agencies. Ross claimed the stories improperly linked him to a former partner who was convicted of investor fraud.

A lower court said Ross was a private figure who had to prove only that the newspaper acted negligently to receive compensatory damages.

The newspaper argued Ross, and other corporate leaders, should be considered public figures who in order to receive damages in libel lawsuits must show that journalists acted with actual malice in their reporting.

Kelli Sager, attorney for the newspaper, said the public benefits when reporters scrutinize prominent people. Business executives influence people's lives in a way that makes them more than private citizens, she told justices in a filing.

"Now more than ever, this court should ensure that the First Amendment strikes the proper balance between protecting the media's ability to publish such proactive stories and respecting businesspersons' privacy in their personal lives," she wrote.

Ross, an attorney in Beverly Hills who represented himself in the Supreme Court case, said the newspaper "would have this court homogenize the wide array of figures targeted by the media so as to provide it a perfect design to defame without liability.

Ross was seeking regulatory approval to increase his stake in the savings and loan when a reporter spent three months researching him for a profile.

His case against the newspaper was tried twice in lower courts. The first time, Ross was awarded $7.5 million. That decision was thrown out, and he received a $2.25 million judgment at a second trial in 2001.

A filing on behalf of media groups, including newspapers and television networks, cited financial woes of Enron and WorldCom. "In the wake of such scandals, surely the press should be encouraged to play an active role in scrutinizing regulated industries and bringing to light the information that it learns," their lawyers said

Rowers fall in NCAAs, finish season No. 8

By Joshua Keeran Lantern-sports writer

A season that began before the ice on the Olentangy River had melted came to an end this weekend as the Ohio State rowing team competed in the NCAA championships.

The No. 3 ranked Buckeyes traveled to Sacramento, Calif., Friday in search of the first championship in team history.

OSU had several crowning moments in the first two days of competition as two boats qualified for the finals.

Before the waters came to a standstill Sunday, however, it was clear that a national championship was not meant to be for the Buckeyes. They finished the tournaments in eighth place, which marked the third best finish in program history away with the result that we wanted," senior Ashley Orr said. "Our goal going out there was to win a national championship, however we got two boats into the grand finals and ended up eighth in the country. That's nothing to be ashamed of."

OSU coach Andy Teitelbaum said he was disappointed the team was unable to surpass the competition, but acknowledged the team had several close finishes fail to go

Buckeyes was the first varsity 4 team, which made it to the finals of the championship, before finishing sixth overall with a time of 7:39.9.

The second varsity 8 failed to make it into the Grand Finals but did earn a spot in the Petite Final — open to those boats not qualifying for Grand Finals — on Sunday where the crew finished 12th with a time of 6:55.1.

Ten seniors competed in their final meet as Buckeyes.

"Being a part of this team has been, by far, the most challenging and satisfying aspect of my college experience," senior Amanda Spires said. "Rowing, at Ohio State especially, demands a level of physical, emotional and mental commitment that is unmatched by the average college student's successes and failures.

For OSU's rowing this season can be looked back upon as one "Obviously we didn't come of success. Not only did the team make its fifth straight appearance in the championships, but also the first varsity 8 spent many weeks ranked atop the country in the standings.

"We had a great season. We had a boat that was ranked No. 1 for five straight weeks, another boat that won a Big Ten championship and we won the central regional championship as a team," Orr said. "We accomplished a lot of things and we did t as a team. That was our No. 1 goal coming into the season."

The team hopes its successful season helps to raise student interest in the sport of rowing.

"The student body should know that rowing is an up-andcoming sport. It is very established over seas, but one of the fastest growing sports in America at the high school level," Orr said. "We put in a lot of time so that we can other time in program history. our practices in the winter before

ATHLETIC COMMUNICATIONS

Senior Dan Taylor hurls a shot put at a meet earlier this season.

By Kevin Hall Lantern staff writer

When one visits the French Field House on Woody Hayes Drive, a man of massive weight and height can be seen hard at work heaving weighted balls up to 200 feet, while under the watchful eye of coach John Smith.

His name is Dan Taylor. He hails from the small farming town of Burton, Ohio, where he attended Berkshire High School. Berkshire H.S. served as a starting point where Taylor Smith is quick to say there is not an automatic watched his talents in track and field blossom. spot for Taylor. With Taylor's size — he weights more than 300 pounds and surpasses 6'4" — he could have played any sport he wanted.

Taylor played Division V football, but after receiving cloudy answers from colleges regarding scholarships and being denied the opportunity to play other sports, he decided his heart belonged to track.

"I was too big to wrestle because of the 275 pound cap, I can't shoot a basketball, and I played football but schools wouldn't give me a straight answer on scholarships," Taylor said. I would have played defense but most schools wanted me to play offense, but in the end track was the better choice.'

At Berkshire, he won numerous awards in track and field. He was the state champion during his sophomore year in discus, the Junior Olympic National champion his record for Division III high school track and field competition at 206'11".

Such a resume could have sent him to any college in the country, but he decided on Ohio State.

'I chose Ohio State because of Coach Smith. I felt that I could succeed under him more than anyone else," Taylor said.

His accomplishments at Berkshire and Ohio State have enabled Taylor to look forward to a berth in the 2004 Summer Olympics through the Olympic trials that involve competing against the best the country has to offer. Coach

"Unfortunately, Dan Taylor has the toughest job in track and field," Smith said. Shotput is the toughest event to make. Dan can make any team in the world; if he can pull out making the USA team then he has a chance to win a medal. Basically, there are five guys competing for three spots and they are all world-ranked throwers," Smith

Ben Leppla, a friend of Taylor, is confident Taylor will make it to the Olympics.

Absolutely. Not too many people at Ohio State know about Taylor's accomplishments in his four years here. I have seen him throw and it is awesome. There is no doubt in my mind that if he has a good trial, he will make the squad," said Leppla, a senior in criminology and sociology

Indians' Martinez approaching all-star status

Cincinnati Reds' Ken Griffey Jr. hits his 492nd career home run off

Florida Marlins pitcher Josh Beckett in the sixth inning, Tuesday, May

The American League is ripe with hard-hitting catchers. Jorge Posada, Ivan Rodriguez, Javy Lopez, and Jason Varitek are all-star caliber backstops who are having all-star worthy seasons. But as the baseball season enters its third month of play, a fifth American League catcher is beginning to emerge as an all-star candidate — the Indians' Victor Martinez.

"We knew he was a good hitter," Indians manager Eric Wedge said. "But we group as (Ortiz and Rodriguez). It keeps didn't expect him to come this fast come along this quickly. Everything we have thrown at him he has handled."

Martinez has stepped into a major league batter's box in just over 100 games now, but is beginning to look more like a veteran hitter than a hitter still adjusting to major league pitching.

and not trying to do too much," Martinez said. "Every time I go to the plate, I'm just trying to put a good swing on the ball. Anytime you do that, good things can happen."

Scouts have never doubted Martinez's ability to hit, but they have always described him as a line drive and doubles hitter. Martinez would agree with their assessment, but he is currently leading AL catchers in home runs.

"In my mind, I don't see myself as a power hitter," Martinez said. "But once in a while, when you put a ball in the air, it keeps going. I'll take the home runs, but I don't have home runs in my mind. I'm just trying to hit the ball hard.

AL BEHRMAN/AP

Not only is Martinez leading American League catchers in home runs, he is tied with his idol, Rodriguez, for the most RBIs among American League catchers and trails only the Red Sox's David Ortiz for the overall American League lead.

"I don't see the stats in the newspapers," Martinez said, "But it makes you feel good to have your name in the same you working hard."

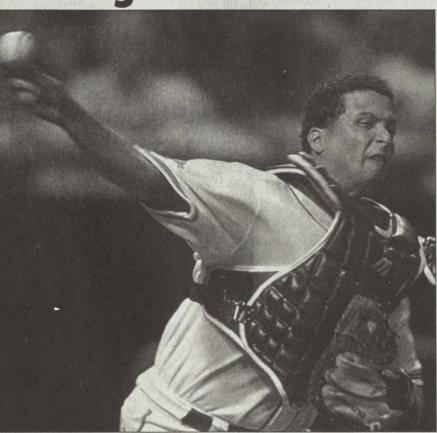

Martinez has been hitting well all season long and not just from the same spot in the order. The Indians were not getting much production from the cleanup spot, so Wedge decided to try his young catcher

Any spot in the lineup is OK with 'A big key for me is going to the plate me," Martinez said. "As long as I am in the lineup, I'm going to feel good.'

Since being inserted into the fourth spot in the order 23 games ago, Martinez has hit .303 with 5 home runs and 29 RBIs.

'We're a team that needs to get it done one through nine," Wedge said. "The one thing we have to have in the middle are run producers and Victor has proven to be that so far."

SEE MARTINEZ PAGE 15

Nobody would argue that Martinez has Cleveland Indians catcher Victor Martinez throws out Seattle Mariners' Randy Winn on a sixth-inning bunt in the Indians' 9-5 win Thursday, May 27. Martinez is using his strong defense and steady bat to make a run at an all-star bid this season.

Is an I-71 Series in the cards?

You heard it here first: The battle of Ohio will take on amazing proportions this season when the Cleveland Indians battle the Cincinnati Reds.

In October.

That's right, I'm calling for what every baseball fan should be dreaming about: The Battle for I-71 Supremacy. All fans will make the trip from northern to southern Ohio as the series shifts from game to game, giving neither team much in the way of home-field advantage.

You probably think I'm nuts for writing this. I'm sure some readers will tell me to stick to writing about hockey. But the longer I sit and think about this, the better it begins to sound to

Not only that, but I begin to realize that this scenario is indeed possible. Both teams find themselves in unique situations as we head into the month of June that could result in either the Indians or the Reds still playing ball in four months.

The more obvious of the two teams is the Reds. The team is among the hottest in baseball right now and currently sits at the top of the National League Central Division on the strength of some impressive batting and a solid-yet-atypical closer named Danny Graves (who used to be an Indian).

So we can see why the Reds have a shot at a title, at least as of right now. In contrast, my beloved Indians are stumbling below the .500 mark, placing them in the middle of the American League Central Division. The team is consistent — it has had winning streaks of five and four games interspersed with a seven-game losing streak. Its bullpen is easily the worst in baseball, having blown more games at such an early stage of the season than I can count on my fingers.

So what does Cleveland possibly have going for it?

Re-read the first sentence two paragraphs ago. The Indians are proud members of the worst, weakest division in baseball. The entire division would finish games behind runners-up in other divisions. Any team can rise out of the Central and make the playoffs, but it's similar to winning an intramural softball game while using an illegal bat: Is it really something to be proud of?

Now, hear me out. The Indians hang within a few games of the division leader as their bullpen steadily improves over the season (it can't possibly get worse). The hitters continue to produce and are led by this year's American League MVP, Victor Martinez. And the bulk of the success will come on the arms of the starting pitching, led by C.C. Sabathia and Cliff Lee.

The Reds continue to play hot baseball, but there is a lot of time left in the season, and this is working against Cincinnati. Expect the Reds to hit a few bumps along the way, but the bats of Ken Griffey Jr. and Sean Casey (who also used to be an Indian) will bail them out. Cincinnati doesn't play in the toughest division in baseball, either.

I do realize that outside of Ohio everyone is pulling for a Cubs-Red Sox World Series. It's hard not to. It would be nice to see two of baseball's most beleaguered teams face off for the title. But think of the positives involved in an all-Ohio series. Fans and teams can drive from game to game rather than fly. And what kind of home-field advantage would either team really enjoy?

Ohio sports have gone far too long without a major title. If Griffey stays healthy and Sabathia's arm doesn't fall off, I foresee an amazing October. And because good pitching always beats good hitting: Indians in six. God bless Ohio!

Griffey passes Gehrig in homers

By Tim Reynolds Associated Press

SPORTS

MIAMI — The history meant little to Ken Griffey Jr., but the victory meant plenty.

Griffey passed Lou Gehrig on the career home run list Monday, hitting a go-ahead, threerun drive in the seventh inning in Cincinnati's 9-7 victory over

It was Griffey's 13th home run of the season and the 494th of his career, moving him into sole possession of 20th place.

Anytime you get a 'W,' that's the most important thing," Griffey said. "I just happened to hit one out." The Reds snapped the Marlins' five-game winning streak and tied Florida for the National League lead at 30-21. Sean Casey homered twice, said. raised his major league-leading average to .394, and had three RBIs. Barry Larkin and Wily Mo Pena also homered for Cincinnati, helping the team overcome a 5-0 deficit. Jeff Conine went 4-for-4, Juan Pierre and Luis Castillo had three hits each, and Mike Lowell had three RBIs for the Marlins, who stranded 11 runners — five in the seventh and eighth innings.

"We just couldn't keep the ball in the ballpark," Marlins manager Jack McKeon said. "We got offense today; we didn't get the pitching."

Cincinnati was down by five runs after two innings.

The Reds got a three-run homer from Casey in the third, a solo shot by Pena in the fourth and back-to-back solo homers from Larkin and Casey in the sixth. Florida answered with two runs in the sixth, going up 7-6 on Lowell's RBI single.

But Griffey struck the final blow, connecting off Florida reliever Justin Wayne (3-2), who hadn't allowed a run in his four previous outings. Larkin singled with one out, Casey walked and Griffey followed with the goahead homer to right-center.

"You make bad pitches and bad things happen," Wayne

Todd Jones worked out of a bases-loaded, no-out jam in the seventh and stranded two more Florida runners in the eighth, and Danny Graves worked a perfect ninth for his 24th save. John Riedling (4-0) got the win, despite walking four while retiring just three batters.

We made some mistakes," Reds manager Dave Miley said. "Obviously, it wasn't the prettiest of wins."

Castillo, Pierre, Lowell and Conine — four of the top five hitters in Florida's order — combined to go 12-for-17 in the game. The rest of the Marlins went 2-for-22, and it was that of Gehrig or moving closer to the half of the lineup that failed Florida in the seventh.

With the bases loaded, Ramon Castro, who lowered his average to .135 with an 0-for-4 day, struck out, as did pinch-hitter Lenny Harris. Castillo today - that big 'ol ring," Griffey grounded into a fielders' choice, ending the inning.

"It comes down to making pitches," Jones said. "Today" made them. Some days you don't."

Griffey said he wasn't drawing inspiration from the pursuit 500-homer plateau. Instead, it was the souvenir World Series championship rings the Marlins handed out to fans.

"They've got something that I want, and they were showing it said. "That's what I play this game for. I want that championship.

"Defensively, he has been as good as anyone, with the exception of his throwing early on," Wedge said. "That's something he has taken care of. He is throwing the ball as good as anyone in the league right now. He has definitely turned the corner and his hard work has paid off for him."

Martinez would agree with

"Everything needs work," Martinez said. "For me it was defense. I worked hard and am getting my defense where it needs to be.' As Martinez continues to

WEDNESDAY JUNE 2, 2004

Gao Xingjian's "Buying a Fishing Rod for My Grandfather" is a translated collection of six modernist short stories spanning the entire spectrum of human emotions, from the happiest first days of marriage to tragic recollections of a car accident.

Each story is strong and endlessly empathetic. Xingjian's language is by no means overpowering or glossy; it is sublime, quiet and sentimental. The book's many and varied characters all in some way represent the political and social tension that a Communist-led government has placed upon its people.

Playwright, novelist, essayist and painter Gao Xingjian was born in the city of Ganzhou in eastern China in 1940. He grew up during the turbulent aftermath of the Japanese Invasion. His father was a bank official and his mother an amateur actress. During the Cultural Revolution of the mid-60s, Xingjian's wife denounced him as a political defector and he was sent to a re-education camp.

In 1986, one of Xingjian's plays was tagged as "intellectual pollution" by China's ruling party, and he escaped into the vast Chinese wilderness on a 10-month walking tour. The tour became the basis of Soul Mountain, the novel that won Xingjian the 2000 Nobel Prize for Literature, the first awarded to a Chinese citizen.

The six stories included in the anthology are fragile displays of love and loss, memory and secrecy. They are beautifully written in the delicate tone of a man who has dealt with the loss of his country and cultural identity. Forced out of China in 1987 after his play "The Other Shore" was banned, Xingjian moved to France, and his legend has grown exponentially since then.

A political dissident, Gao knows what it is like to stray from one's home and never return. Some of the stories in this anthology deal with that very subject while others deal with reunion and reconciliation.

In "The Temple," a newly married couple on their honeymoon decides to jump from the train taking them to their original destination and explore a hidden village on a hillside. Instead of a mystical town void of modernity they find one bustling with commerce.

Lost in the hustle, they long for the quiet land they imagined this place to be. They find an old man who tells them of a temple even farther up the hill, past the houses and huts, where one might find quiet and peace, but warns that the journey is treacherous. After wading through a rapid river and climbing the craggy cliff, they find the solitude they jumped ship for.

"No one else was around, and it was very peaceful. We could hear the mountain wind moaning in the ancient pines in front of the temple, and no one was there to disturb us."

Their tranquility is soon broken by the appearance of a very old man who offers melons and small conversations. A young boy who begs him to catch grasshoppers accompanies him.

The story is filled with natural beauty. Xingjian offers a story of kindness and grace in a harrowing country.

In "Cramp," a man who swims too soon after eating develops a sharp pain in his side while battling a strong current. Xingjian's description is careful and precise. Every one of the man's strokes are forced, and every word is chosen with depth and honesty. The doomed swimmer experiences fleeting moments of acute enlightenment, such as believing each burning star shines as a beacon to help him return to shore.

When he gets back to land, tired and short of breath, he finds no one happy to see him, no one even looking for him. Not even his traveling companion is concerned with his absence. He and weary but stronger and no one is there to share in the glory of his brush with death.

The same can be said for Xingjian. He left his homeland and with it a national identity. He adopted a new individuality with France, one in which he freely share his work, but the yearning for appreciation from his native land

In the title piece, a young man, while returning home from work, buys his grandfather a fishing rod. The purchase becomes more than a gift. It is the vehicle through which the narrator remembers his grandfather. He wistfully recalls his grandfather's gnarled hands rolling tobacco or casting a line into the lake.

Triggered by homesickness, he returns to the land of his youth. When he arrives he finds a world vastly different from the one he left. The old stone bridge he once fished from has been demolished, a courtyard that served as a menagerie for family pets is gone. A mountainside, once draped in lush green forests, is now uncovered, leaving nothing but bare brown slopes. Even the tigers his grandfather hunted have been extinct for a decade. Everything is referred to in the past tense, evoking the constant theme of loss and change

Every story in this book sheds a faint light on how a human, not an economy or foreign policy, is affected by a dictatorial government. Xingjian's heart is with those left behind in China. He knows the pain and uncertainty a parent feels for a child growing up beneath a

The Accident" is a frantic dialogue-driven account of a man on a bicycle being struck head-on by a trolley. The man carries behind him a carriage containing his young son. The boy is unhurt in the accident, however, the father dies, but not before pushing his son from Xingjian writes of sacrifice in its most crucial has returned from a battle that left him bruised and ultimate form: sending a loved one out of certain death and dying in the process. The process of the accident is the other theme in this story. The narrator philosophizes about the nature of the death itself. Was the father acting on some instinctual impulse or did he have a premonition that some terrible event would happen? He concludes quite articulately that it was simply an accident borne of circumstance and not fate; that a speculation of its origins is unnecessary because the act itself ends in death.

The most interesting and exciting piece in the entire anthology is "In an Instant," a non-linear, whirlwind account of brief moments. The story begins with a man resting in a chair near the beach deciding whether to sleep or continue reading. He chooses the former and upon closing his eyes the reader is swept to a completely separate paragraph-length narrative about a woman switching on a light in a dark hallway.

The story then continues in the same frantic pace, bouncing from a story about a child pulling on a string to a woman's failed seduction of a man. Xingjian's description of these minute flashes of humanity could be the script of an avant-garde movie or a camera panning through the often-confusing levels of one's dreams.

Xingjian's narratives are patient. They articulate the hopes and fears of those whose voices have been silenced. Xingjian shows through his writings that humanity still exists in the faceless Chinese government from which he fled. His tales revert to a happier, more innocent time, possibly childhood, when the worries of the world floated by like a feather caught in a strong wind.

Every action and thought of each character s a delicate motion in the hands of Xingjian. He is a student of a world sometimes swept beneath darker clouds, but manages to prevail in finding a brighter ray of sunlight poking

Cafe offers creative outlet

GREGORY L. JONES/THE LANTERN The Clay Cafe offers patrons hundreds of pottery choices for their artistic delight. The Cafe, 1431 W. Third Ave., is tucked behind Gibby's restuarant.

The Clay Cafe, 1431 W. Third Ave., serves up a menu of pottery pieces for its customers to decorate however they choose.

The Grandview-based pottery shop offers patrons a place to express their artistic creativity without spending ten weeks in an Ohio State art class or purchasing supplies that will never be used again

"We have hundreds of different items people can come in and decorate," said Nancy Kanter, co-owner of the Clay Cafe. "They create a design, they paint it and we glaze and fire it.

The cafe has been operating in Grandview since Kanter was inspired to open the business eight years ago.

"I saw a similar place in Cali-fornia and thought it would be a great, fun thing to do," she said.

Kanter approached Julie Byrnes, a Master's of Fine Arts recipient from OSU, about starting the business

Byrnes said this is the perfect job for her and it helps support her sculpture studio.

"It's fun — it doesn't take around other people being creative," Byrnes said.

The pieces make unique gifts for the hard-to-buy gift recipient.

Eleven-year-olds Julie King and Kelly Sullivan said they have created many things at the cafe. King said her father likes trucks, so she decorated a truck for his Father's Day gift.

The unassuming environment at the cafe also makes a great meeting place where food and drink can be brought from home or purchased at one of the many local restaurants for an impromptu picnic or a first date. Alcoholic beverages are also allowed at the cafe.

All decorating supplies are provided with the purchase of the pottery pieces, which range in price from $3 to $50. Studio time costs $6 an hour for adults and $4 an hour for children and students.

The cafe offers many events O where studio time is free and classes where students can get more hands-on assistance. Private party packages are also available with prices varying depending on the group's size and skill level.

The cafe is open Tuesday through Sunday. Hours of operatons of my time, it's a good, cre-tion and other information are ative outlet and it's fun to be available by calling 486-5815.
