Columbus' homeless get relief through new grant

By Tasia Andrews Lantern staff writer

People in poverty or without homes in Ohio will be getting much-needed assistance - $9.3 million in grants is being made available by Ohio's department of development. Director Bruce Johnson announced July 12 that the funding would be available to non-profit social service organizations that work with the homeless.

The money is awarded through the fiscal 2004 Combined Emergency Shelter Grant and Supportive Housing for the Homeless Program. It is used to renovate, rehabilitate, maintain, operate and staff emergency shelters for non-profit organizations based on demonstrated need, Johnson said. The money will also go to help provide families and individuals with permanent Area economists are optimistic about the future of the national economy. Three local economists spoke with Ohio State students and faculty about the current conditions and future direction of the economy at the Fawcett Center Friday. The talks were part of The Fisher College of Business Mid-Year Forecasting Conference.

The conference's panelists were Anthony Chan, James Coons, and James Newton. All of the economists said they had a positive outlook for the future economy. However, they also said there are always unforseen factors which could hinder growth.

"I think the economy is showing real signs of progress," said Anthony Chan, senior managing director and chief economist for Bank One Investment Advisors. "Despite the progress, the economy could still have a pause from time to time

"A major goal of the program is to increase youths' understanding of history," Andrien said. "It is part of the president's initiative to make young people more informed citizens by knowing the traditions of the past."

. CIA Director disagrees with new intelligence chief idea

By Jennifer C. Kerr Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The White House said yesterday that acting CIA Director John McLaughlin was expressing his personal opinion, and not necessarily the view of the administration, when he said there is no need for a new national intelligence chief.

A bipartisan commission investigating the 2001 hijackings is expected to recommend the creation of a Cabinet-level position to oversee the nation's 15 intelligence agencies and control their budgets. The final report will be released this week.

Two members of the Senate Intelligence Committee — Sens. Saxby Chambliss, R-Ga. and Dick Durbin, D-Ill. — said they would be open to considering the recommendation for a new intelligence chief.

"When you take a look at how important intelligence must be for our future, you realize that the current situation is untenable," Durbin said on CNN's "Late Edition." Chambliss cautioned against simply creating more bureaucracy.

The CIA director now has loose authority over the 15 U.S. intelligence agencies. But the commission in a preliminary report found that the director did not hold enough power because the Pentagon controls more than 80 percent of the intelligence budget. As a result, CIA requests to other agencies are often ignored.

The commission's final report, expected to be released Thursday, will highlight intelligence failures by the CIA and the FBI that enabled the Sept. 11 attacks to McLaughlin was quick to point out that intelligence agencies have improved intelligence-gathering and operations since the attacks. 'The intelligence community of that day was for counterterrorism--300 people spread-eagled across a dike. We now have a hundred people who do nothing but watch-listing alone," he said.

Potential attacks disrupted since then were in the early stages of planning, he said. And while al-Qaida has been weakened, the threat to America remains. "We can be successful 1,000 times and these eople have to be lucky only once," McLaughlin said.

McLaughlin, a 30-year veteran of the agency, said he is not actively campaigning to become permanent CIA chief, but will serve as long as the president wants him to. Some key senators have pressed President Bush to name a permanent replacement for Tenet soon. The White House, however, has refused to be pinned down on a

Last fall, a major study showed that having portable defibrillators in airports and other public places can double the chances of surviving cardiac arrest.

Roughly 80 percent of cardiac arrests occur in the home. A study of 7,000 people, funded by the National Institutes of Health, is testing whether at-home defibrillators save lives, too.

Don't change summer classes

Walking to class during the last few quarters has left most students with the impression that the Ohio State campus is rapidly changing. With the massive amounts of construction renovating old buildings and the beloved Oval, the campus people remember from their freshman year will eventually have a new face. However, the amount of change within the OSU campus is not limited to building sites or roadways but it might soon affect how students schedule for summer classes

A proposed summer schedule plan will extend the quarter to September if approved by OSU President Karen A. Holbrook and the Coordinating Council this fall. The new guidelines for the plan include starting summer quarter one week later and extending it to 10 weeks instead of the current nine weeks. The convenient option of taking two five-week sessions will still be offered and finals week will still be the last three days of the quarter. The major difference is the commencement, which will take place the Sunday after Labor Day — instead of the Sunday before, which happens to be a popular vacationing weekend. The whole point of the proposed extension is to give certain students a more convenient Summer commencement.

Since when does the vacationing schedule of a handful of students change university policy?

This proposed summer extension causes more problems than it solves. The university should apologize to students if they cannot go on a cruise with mom and dad during this special holiday weekend, but lengthening summer quarter simply to accommodate their specified convenience is not justified.

OSU students already graduate late in comparison to other universities. This extension only sets back new graduates in applying for jobs and for graduate schools. Even if the idealistic job was already spotted by the new graduate — and he or she could secure it following graduation in the summer, — the odds are the company will look to hire someone who could start sooner.

This presents a whole new dilemma for those needing shelter for another week to accommodate those going to Cancun with their families. Most leases are up at the end of August.

Should they be forced to renew a lease when they had plans to move back home? Or should they find somewhere else to live for a week?

The schedule has major flaws and should not be implemented as soon as the Council is suggesting. The primary reason why the summer schedule needs to be extended is an issue of leisure for a few students, but not the majority. The proposed extension causes multiple problems for graduating seniors. Even if the reasons cited for extending the summer quarter were solid, the Coordinating Council should take more time considering the procedure so the schedule change won't effect students planning to graduate on the current

Closed door policy Public records should be public

No one would ever deprive a doctor of a stethoscope, or a teacher of a chalkboard.

Depriving professionals of tools they desperately need to do their job is not a good thing. However, this is a situation journalists face daily when information that should be accessible to the public is withheld without

As The Lantern previously reported, the Ohio State Board of Trustees voted to extend health benefits to domestic partners — same sex or otherwise — who work at or attend OSU. The measure was passed without dissent or debate. The lack of public discussion came as a result of the trustees holding closed-door meetings that are not a matter of public record.

Why did the Board decide to pass this legislation? No one can truly say that they know, even the board members themselves. Publicly funded institutions such as OSU should be open in their decisions and meetings. What is happening that is so secret that it cannot be heard by the public? The Columbus Dispatch received a copy of a letter from Attorney General Jim Petro telling all Ohio universities and their respective trustees to not hold closed-door meetings not open to the public. However, no other media outlet besides the Dispatch has been able to acquire a copy. In Petro's letter, he warns that meetings taking place in this form are a violation of the Open Meetings Act. However, a spokeswoman for Petro said the letter cannot be discussed because it represents privileged attorney-client

Under Ohio Sunshine Laws a record cannot be withheld from the public due to "right of privacy." This also includes the Open Meetings Act. As long as the document does not contain personally identifiable information, then it should be made available.

All trustees in Ohio received the letter from Petro, but only one person showed it to anybody. Calls made to the Board of Trustees at Ohio colleges were unsuccessful. In short, a public letter has not been available to the public.

The most distressing aspect of the situation is the fact that information is being withheld from the general public. The Board of Trustees exists to serve the university and the student body. The salaries of those board members are paid by our stu-vow of silence. It is a protest en masse a way to affect change in the system by their voices heard.

They are responding to OSU Admissions' decision to include a brief essay portion to the undergraduate application. This is part of the university's effort to promote student diversity in incoming classes. School officials hope the essay will also serve as an effective substitute for student interviews. Mabel Freeman, assistant vice president of undergraduate admissions, said a decline in applicants is

"By the simple fact of putting writing in our applications, you automatically lose 10 percent," Freeman said.

Now some 18-year-olds around the state are looking to attend college elsewhere - presumably someplace where a rudimentary command of the English language isn't required.

Who'd have thought that a teensyweensy essay would prove to be such a huge deterrent to potential applicants? After all, we're talking about the glorious progeny of the mid-1980s: weren't these kids zygotes when the Internet first ominities arrived? Haven't communicative tools such as e-mail and Instant Messenger helped promote literacy among young people?

Apparently not.

The essay has acted as a sonic boom These "leaflets" can be found crumpled on classroom floors. These are the calling cards of the irreverent and tongue-tied; they are blank sheets of notebook paper and they stridently voice the concerns of their numerous, apathetic authors.

ago when teens protested Vietnam.

There's more. Emile X, a sophomore from Turtleback Hills with a vague ambition to play tuba in the OSU Marching Band, showcased his disgust for the essay by dousing an effigy of Brutus in gasoline and setting it ablaze on the lawn of his high school

"My older brother was a spelling bee flunkie, yet he got into OSU without a hitch," X complained, hiding amid a colonnade of poplars as he watched school officials extinguish Brutus.
"Perhaps, I'll just leave the state alto-

Despite these made-up scenarios, if the number of applicants continues to dwindle expect admissions to eliminate the essay altogether. OSU has fat revenue streams to maintain, and with costly additions like the new Larkins Center and next summer's renovations to the William Oxley Thompson Library, it is clearly anticipating further swell of the student population.

While I commend the integrity of the application essay, along with other attempts to toughen up admissions standards and lose the flab of incoming classes, these aims will ultimately prove ineffectual if the school is unwilling to refine through the cosmos of high school hall- its academic climate in other areas as ways. I strongly agree with the points made by Cosby. Why would any parent buy $500 sneakers for their kids and not spend half as much on "Hooked on Phonics?" The importance improve on the cycle of wealth and of education seems underestimated in the black community. With the success of LeBron James in the NBA, I expect that a lot of African American kids will quit school with the dream of an NBA career. An NBA career lasts for about a decade — less than 15% of a lifetime. much of their earnings will be mismanaged. The list of rich-gone-broke Africansuccesful athletes had college educations. Take Michael Jordan for example.

I was pleased when I read an article on Emeka Okafor of the UConn Huskies saying he will be just as happy using his brains to earn a living if he could not play basketball in the event of a career-ending injury. How many athletes would say that? Playing a sport is a talent that can be lost abruptly to injury, but education is a gift that can never be taken away.

OSU shows rational side with benefits

The Board of Trustees has shown tremendous courage and leadership in their recent unani-mous decision to approve domestic partner benefits for same-sex couples and their children. There had been tremendous pressure on the university to oppose taking such action, yet in the face of these challenges the Board of Trustees has stood up for fairness, equality and what is right for our faculty and their families.

I am extremely proud that the actions of students, including the Undergraduate Student Government, helped lead towards encouraging the Board to make this decision. The Ohio State University is a community of students, educators, service workers, and administrators and we must all look out for the needs of each other to build the best possible university. This effort shows the positive change we can create

Not only do I believe that all faculty deserve equal benefits out of deep moral conviction, but I also believe that students who may oppose the extension of these benefits should consider that from a very basic economic standpoint it is only rational that we offer these benefits. If we refuse to offer benefits to same-sex couples then we risk losing valuable faculty members who can leave Ohio State and receive such benefits at other universities.

I would like to offer the highest praise for the Board of Trustees for their commitment to equal rights, helping ensure that The Ohio State University continues to attract some of the finest faculty members in the country, and living up to The Ohio State University's academic plan which states, "Academic excellence will be enriched by an environment that mirrors the diverse world in which we live."

University finally makes right call

At the July 9 meeting of the board of trustees, Ohio State finally lived up to a pledge made when the Diversity Action Plan was written in 2000. After resolutions by the three student governments, by USAC, and by the University Senate, after proposals from the Office of Human Resources and the Office of Academic Affairs, after efforts by the president and provost, the Board of Trustees has voted unanimously to extend health benefits to the domestic partners of faculty, staff and students at Ohio State.

There are many OSU administrators who have supported this effort for some time including past presidents and provosts of the university; Larry Lewellen, associate vice president for human resources; Bill Hall, vice president for student affairs; and Barbara Snyder, executive vice president and provost. Each of these deserves recognition and thanks for their commitment to the GLBT community at Ohio What has made the difference this year is that Karen Holbrook and Tami Longaberger had the courage and strength of character to push harder than any previous president or Board chair. Their actions demonstrate a commitment to diversity that Ohio State has not yet seen before. No longer is heterosexism institutionalized at the university. As a gay male, I finally feel welcome in the OSU community.

I have admired both Holbrook and Longaberger since I met them; now my respect for them has grown and deepened. Words cannot express the thanks that I and the rest of the university owe them. Their leadership is making Ohio State a stronger university. When I think of the university's marketing campaign slogan, "do something great," I will always think of what they accomplished at the July Board meeting.

Music phenom ready to rock festival

By Eric Atienza Lantern arts writer

For most people, life up to age 13 is not exciting. The preteen years are often filled with school, homework, early curfews and living vicariously through a television screen. However, Drew Miller Davis — in addition to being a typical teenager performs at numerous bars, clubs and other venues across the Columbus area, and she released her first full-length album, "Lil' Bit of Everything," with 13 original songs at age 11.

This weekend offers her yet another chance to show case her talent. She will be performing Saturday at Ohio State on the Spotlight Artists Stage during day three of the 30th annual National Women's Music Festival.

The festival is set to draw many of state, but Davis is no stranger to larger audiences. She has opened at Promowest Pavilion and has are really musical," she said. played at both Rockin' in the Streets and Comfest.

Welcome to The Ohio State University is the message of the Lantern's Buckeye Bound special issue that will be mailed directly to the homes of over 7,000 new undergraduate students coming to Ohio State for the first time this Fall.

Buckeye Bound provides a perfect opportunity for your business to reach the students before those chaotic first weeks of their new life at Ohio State. Thanks to Buckeye Bound, by the time the new students arrive on campus they'll already know where to shop, where to eat and where to go for entertainment.
