As Edwards and Clark concentrated on Virginia and Tennessee, which hold primary elections on Tuesday, Kerry ignored his rivals as he campaigned in Virginia and criticized President Bush's foreign policy.

We deserve a president who understands that working with the rest of the world is not weakness — it is strength," Kerry said, speaking in front of a Roanoke, Va., fire station. The senator from Massachusetts accused Bush of failures on North Korea, AIDS, global warming and the Middle East peace process.

Edwards and Clark were hoping strong showings in Tennessee and Virginia would eliminate the other and turn the race into a two-man contest with Kerry. But polls showed Kerry well ahead in both states.

Dean, the former Vermont governor who was once the party's front-runner, urged Wisconsin voters to prove the polls and the media wrong in that state's Feb. 17 primary and use their "power to choose the strongest candidate to beat George W. Bush."

The media claims this contest is over. They say your voice and your vote don't count. They expect you to rubber stamp the choice of others. But you don't have to listen to them," Dean told an audience of about 300 at a downtown Madison hotel.

Dean began a two-day tour and an aggressive advertising campaign in Wis-

Cohabitation can be thought of as a couple testing the waters before taking the plunge into marriage.

A new study unearthed the surprising results that 40 percent of cohabiting couples take their relationships to the next level with marriage and 42 percent disagree on the future of their relationships.

"I was wondering how couple-level agreement regarding plans for the future, particularly marriage plans, affected whether cohabiting couples actually married," said Sharon Sassler, co-author of the study and assistant professor in the Department of Sociology.

"When you see women's magazines at the checkout counter at the grocery store, they always make it seem like women are trying to chase down men and get them to marry, while men are hiding under rocks or are commitment-phobic," she said. "But that's just something put out there by women's magazines, not supported by Sassler decided to find the truth.

"You could call it a test of the Glamour-Cosmo hypothesis, that men just don't want to marry," she said.

The study acquired its information from the National Survey of Families and Households. Information was collected from 13,008 people, 670 of which were cohabitants. The survey returned four to seven years later to conduct second interviews with each of the participants, Sassler said.

Sassler found 350 people initially questioned did not provide a complete second interview. The majority of those cohabitants whom replied had the highest level of education and income, she said.

What remained was a set that excluded those who were poorer and less educated. This data had to be repaired for the sake of accuracy. To do this, the information from the known population was analyzed and a hypothetical outcome was formed for each original interviewee who did not participate in the second interview, Sassler said.

Ohio State leaders report on Community of Diversity Work, planning must continue to ensure a diverse learning environment

COLUMBUS - The development and growth of educational diversity at The Ohio State University must continue with efforts to reach an even broader audience, members of the Board of Trustees were told today (2/6) in a presentation to the Academic and Student Affairs Committee

"Historically the focus of diversity at Ohio State has been directed toward the recruitment and retention of minority students," said Mac Stewart, vice provost for the Office of Minority Affairs. "But increasingly, our quest for diversity should be considered a journey rather than a goal, one that continuously changes with better understanding."

Stewart said progress can be difficult to measure, but national indicators and aggressive recruiting and monitoring prove that academic excellence and diversity can be jointly attained as prescribed in the university's Diversity Action Plan.

Ohio State's success has been noted in many publications and journals, including Hispanic Outlook, which ranks Ohio State 17th nationally in the number of doctorates awarded to Hispanics. Last year, the university ranked 37th. Stewart added that the Journal of Blacks in Higher Education recently ranked Ohio State highest among the nation's 25 leading business schools in minority enrollment. Enrollment in the Max M. Fisher College of Business is 10.3 percent Christine Ballengee-Morris, director of the university's Multicultural Center, outlined the center's short and long-term initiatives.

"Diversity can be explored as everyone's responsibility -- students, faculty and community," Ballengee-Morris said. "Diversity education becomes a part of world-making, which is an important element for all fields of

The Multicultural Center offers four programs in the First Year Success Series that explore gender issues, race imagery, homophobia and cultural identity. Approximately 5,000 first-quarter students enrolled in one or more courses last year. Many others programs integrating student affairs with academic affairs are offered

"Our strategy is to be embedded in as many units and programs as we can," Ballengee-Morris said.

The Nationwide Diversity Leadership Transcript Program is a long-term approach that prepares undergraduates for leadership in a global society. The voluntary program incorporates academic courses, leadership and service opportunities, and programs that explore diversity. It is a model that many universities across the country are now

"Our charge is to integrate diversity in as many ways as we can to meet the needs of our students today and tomorrow, and through research in and out of the classroom Ballengee-Morris said, "We do this through partnerships and collaborative practices."

The direction of diversity based on demographic shifts and its future role in a broader community was outlined to the trustees by john a. powell, executive director for the Kirwan Institute for Race and Ethnicity and the Gregory H. Williams Chair in Civil Rights and Civil Liberties at the Moritz College of Law.

powell said that Ohio is not likely to experience significant shifts in its minority population and that Ohio State must look beyond its charge for a diverse institution and work toward developing a more equitable

"Numbers are not the whole game," powell said. "They do nothing to define how the human landscape will change for Ohio State." He added that Ohio State has a broad commitment to diversity and that the Kirwan Institute will continue to work collaboratively. "We will extend our relationships and practices with university and visiting scholars and researchers to deepen the understanding of racial and ethnic disparities and how to remedy them," powell said.

OARDC praised by Battelle

The Agricultural Affairs Committee was briefed on a report issued in January by Battelle Memorial Institute that assesses the Ohio Agricultural Research and Development Center (OARDC).

Phase I of the three-part study found that OARDC plays a key role in keeping Ohio's agriculture and food industries competitive and among the most productive in the world. In addition, the study called OARDC "a substantial economic engine for the state of Ohio." OARDC is the research arm of Ohio State's College of Food, Agricultural and Environmental Sciences and works closely with Ohio State Extension. It has 14 locations across the state, with a major campus in Wooster and a large presence on Ohio State's Columbus campus.

Departments report on Selective Investment

Trustees were updated on progress in the Departments of Psychology and Neuroscience, chosen for university Selective Investment awards in 1998 and 1999 respectively. Michael Beattie, chair of the Department of Neuroscience, reported that the award has allowed the department, which was formed in 1999, to make rapid advancements in the field of imaging in the study of the human brain. The award has enabled the department to hire distinguished new faculty and to present symposia on advances in the field

Gifford Weary, chair of the Department of Psychology, reported that the award is enabling the department to pursue its goal of becoming one the nation's top ten psychology departments by 2010. Psychology is the most popular major at Ohio State, and the department has seen a steady increase in grants and faculty citations over the past

The Selective Investment initiative was begun in 1997 to identify some of Ohio State's strongest departments and programs and to give them the resources they need to move to the top of their fields.

University budget updated

William J. Shkurti, senior vice president for business and finance, gave trustees an annual midyear budget update and noted a significant increase in federally sponsored research grants for the first six months of the current fiscal year. So far, new grants and contracts are up 6.4 percent from last year, and accompanying indirect cost recoveries are 8.3 percent higher. The additional research activity accounts for more than $9.9 million in the university's coffers, he said. Assessing Ohio State's financial condition and efforts to diversify resources, Shkurti said the university must continue to behave more entrepreneurially to help offset the risk of reliance on state funding, which is becoming less predictable and less stable. "The proposed repeal of the one-cent sales tax increase continues to be a source of uncertainty," he said. "Should the proposed repeal be public universities could be severe." Enrollment figures for the year are steady, with a very small increase overall and a relatively small impact on the university's bottom line. Applications from new students are also down slightly. The Health System's financial status continued to remain stable during the first half of the fiscal year, and Shkurti reported that athletics, the Schottenstein Center and Blackwell Inn revenues and expenses are within budget

In a separate report, Shkurti updated trustees on how the university's original budget projections of income and expenses for fiscal year 2002-03 compared with annual audited financial statements. Shkurti told trustees that general fund revenues exceeded expectations by 2.55 percent, while spending was 5.87 percent below budget.

University endowment up University Treasurer Jim Nichols updated trustees on the status of the university's endowment, which stood at $1.11 billion at the end of January. That compares to $958 million at the beginning of the current fiscal year, an impressive increase of $152 million in seven months, he said. As of Dec. 31, Nichols said the number-of individual funds in the endowment had reached 3.393, an increase of approximately 1,250 in the past 10 years. Nichols also said that, as of Dec. 31, the university has a total of 248 deferred gifts with a market value of $68.8 million.

Trustees heard report on Student Health Services Trustees heard a report on Student Health Services by Director Ted Grace. Created at Ohio State in 1908, the program serves as a family practice and has been accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations since 1979. It has approximately 100,000 visits a year, and more than 80 percent of students have used the services by the time they graduate. Forty percent of the visits are by graduate and professional students. Student Health Services uses a fee-for-service funding model that does not rely on non-users to subsidize the health care of others. Student Health Services has an ongoing partnership with the Ohio State Medical Center and offers teaching and research opportunities for Ohio State students. Dr. Grace said plans are being considered for improving access to Student Health Services among other initiatives.

Student receives board recognition

Susan Borchers, from Russia, Ohio, received the board's Student Recognition Award. She is a third-year honors student enrolled in the physical education licensure program in Sports and Leisure Studies in the College of Education. Borchers, who was nominated by Dean Donna Evans, is a founding member and president of the Physical Education Club and an ambassador of Physical Activities and Educational Services. She volunteers at Jones Middle School and is an active member in the Ohio State chapter of Delta Delta Sorority.

Mad cow danger waning; U.S. ends investigation

By Ira Dreyfuss Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Agriculture Department is ending its search for additional cases of mad cow disease even though officials have not found all the animals suspected of having eaten the potentially infectious feed believed to have caused the only known U.S. case.

"Our investigation is now complete," Dr. Ron DeHaven, the department's chief veterinarian, said yesterday. "We feel very confident the remaining animals — the ones we have not been able to positively identify - represent little risk.

The closure leaves officials not knowing what happened to 11 head of cattle among 25 that authorities say were most likely to have eaten the same feed as that given to a Holstein diagnosed in Washington state with mad cow after it was slaughtered on Dec. 9.

Officials do not know the source of the feed thought to have sickened the Holstein, and they cannot be certain that all America's 95 million cattle are free of mad cow disease. The international review panel warned of the probability of other cases.

Also unknown is what happened to all 10,410 pounds of meat that was recalled from the Washington state slaughterhouse that processed the Holstein and mixed its meat with that of 19 other animals. They expect some may have been eaten. However, the meat supply is safe, DeHaven said. USDA had said the parts of the Holstein that could have contained infectious material, such as the brain and spinal cord, were removed before processing.

The recall was initiated out of "an abundance of caution," DeHaven said.

Eating meat from animals with mad cow has been linked to a rare but fatal condition in people, variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease, although no cases have been traced to U.S. beef.

Insurer, developer argue over Trade Center disaster policy

NEW YORK — A lawyer for the World Trade Center's leading insurer argued yesterday that the destruction of the twin towers was one event under the terms of policies negotiated just weeks earlier, not two.

Graduate student exhibition defies genre, medium

By Taya Flores Themes of dyslexia, cultural emptiness and artistic exploration cover the walls of the Hopkins Hall gallery, showcasing the talent at this year's Department of Art Graduate Student Group Exhibition. V-Day for the hopeless

Here we are again — the week before Valentine's day. The final week in that dark chasm of time that spans from the end of November 'til the second week of February which leaves those of us lacking someone special to spend the holidays with feeling guilty. I'm a little bummed this year, because for a brief moment, it looked like I would escape this fate but alas, it was not meant to be.

However, rather than get bogged down by this fact, I thought I would instead try to do some good and offer guidance for anyone else stuck in a similar atmosphere. Here I deliver my "Single And Slightly Bitter Yet Hopeless Romantic Survival Guide" for Valentine's Day, also known as "Maybe the Romans Had the Right Idea.'

The first thing I do is remind myself of something I often forget. It's a harsh truth I prefer not to face, but I must to properly survive the week. This truth? I am not John Cusack. As much as I often wish I were, I'm not. It's ok though, but this is an important bit of information to keep in mind. I could probably make a good argument towards being Jeremy Piven, though, if prompted and properly sloshed, but that strays from the topic at hand.

The above revelation is necessary because as a movie geek, my first move whenever I'm feeling a little cynical is to pop in a couple DVDs featuring the romantic escapades of fictional people. In order to make this a healthy step, it is imperative that I first distance myself from the male lead, usually Cusack. These movies serve a need for escapism, not emulation. You don't try to rob a casino after watching "Ocean's Eleven," so why try to base your romantic life on "Say Anything?" If you're unable to distance and must identify with the protagonist of the movie, I recommend "High Fidelity." You may find yourself having to stop watching after Rob and Laura get back together, but at least you'll have over an hour of single and bitter catharsis. "True Romance" is also decent because people get shot.

It is extremely important this week that you absolutely do not watch "When Harry Met Sally." Often, people can distance themselves from this movie, but when added to the depressed state that Valentine's Day puts the single person in, there's too much potential for danger. If you are alone and watching that movie this week, you may develop a theory that your platonic friend whom you've had a secret crush on for years is also in love with you. They aren't. Sorry. If they were they would have said something by now. I know what you're thinking: "No way, he or she has no idea." Yes he or she does.

If you're venturing out to the multiplex - which is not recommended this weekend, as blasphemous as it is for me to say - avoid "50 First Dates," which will undoubtedly be filled with cute couples, and that is a bad cocktail. Instead see "Miracle," "Big Fish," or "Return of the King," again.

However, watching movies isn't the only thing to do. I recommend listening to early hits by Elvis Costello, or "When I Was Cruel." "Alison" is a must. Beck's "Sea Change" album might just drive someone to suicide this week so I'd avoid it. Just about anything by Dashboard Confessional should be golden though. "Little Black Backpack" by Stroke 9 is a fun little 90's nostalgia kick too, mostly because someone gets their head bashed in (see "True Romance" above). There is always the option of getting completely blitzed until V-Day has come and gone, only to wake up without a memory or a pair of pants. Though, if you do that now, you'll have to rethink your St. Patty's day. Me? I'll be fine with a handful of movies, and maybe a couple shots in recognition of this cursed greeting-card holiday. Unless I manage to find myself a date this week. Speaking of which, does anyone know where I can get some decently priced roses and candy?

Wrestling win ties record

Tommy Rowlands enrolled at Ohio State as a two-time state champion at Bishop Ready High School in Hilliard, Ohio. He will leave OSU in the record

The top-ranked Buckeye heavyweight tied the all-time OSU record for career wins when he achieved a technical fall over Northwestern's Michael Little in OSU's 40-3 win Sunday. His 151st career win tied him with Ed Potokar, who wrestled from 1980-1983. Potokar was in attendance Sunday, and joined the crowd of 850 in giving Rowlands a standing ovation after his win.

"There couldn't be a better guy to represent Ohio State and be at the top of the list," Potokar said. "There have been some great wrestlers at Ohio State, but Tommy has the character that you really want to see represent Ohio State, as well as being a true champion."

Rowlands, now 31-1 on the year, was appreciative for what Potokar had accomplished before him.

The No. 5 Ohio State men's club ice hockey team went into the weekend poised and ready for an important series against visiting Penn State. A sweep would guarantee the Buckeyes a berth in the national tournament and a shot at the national title.

To qualify for nationals, a team must be ranked in the top four in their division or host the tournament. This year's host, Maryland, is in the same division as the Buckeyes. This means OSU must be ranked in the top three within its conference to qualify.

"If (Penn State) had lost, they might not have made nationals," Little said.

The loss of the two games means a missed opportunity for the Buckeyes. Forfeit victories will not sway the balloting for the postseason. OSU is left anxiously waiting until tomorrow or Thursday — when the voting results will be released — to see what path the rest of its season lies on.

"I've been coaching for a long time, but talking to the players on Friday night was one of the hardest things I've ever had to do," coach Bob Heine said.

Man dead after Daytona accident

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — A paraplegic wanted to pursue his love of racing. A worker trying to do his job in the middle of the track. A tragic Daytona accident that's sure to spur debate about yellow flags and disabled drivers.

The driver, Ray Paprota, is the first known paraplegic to race in a national stock car series. He over Paprota's car after being controlled his car with levers, struck. buttons and knobs located on or around the steering wheel.

"I'm sure they're going to point the finger at him," said Wally Leatherwood, a fellow driver in the IPOWER Dash 150.

Roy H. Weaver III, who worked at Daytona International Speedway for seven years, was in the middle of turn two picking up debris during a caution period when he was killed, track spokesman David Talley said.

Paprota, who has not had use of his legs since a 1984 auto accident, was trying to catch the main pack of cars after a two-car crash at the opposite end of the track brought out a yellow flag.

Sports facilities may add skatepark to plans

By Bret Liebendorfer Lantern staff writer

Skateboarders and BMX riders who tried to enjoy their sport on the Ohio State campus know they risk fines, board or bike impoundment and harassment each time they take to the streets. Few know the Department of Recreational Sports wants to help.

A skatepark was not included in the $140 million project that will make the OSU recreational sports facilities one of the best in the country, but skateboarders and BMX riders are not being ignored.

"It would be so exciting to add that one additional component that we're currently missing on campus — a true recreation space for bladers, bikers and boarders," said Bruce Maurer, associate director of Satellite and Outdoor Facilities.

The primary obstacle in building a skatepark is the time constraints surrounding the construction of new projects. A Department of Recreational Sports facility is being constructed doubling Larkins Hall, as well as the construction of the Adventure Recreation Center.

The difficulty in building a skatepark will be funding.

"We recently found out about a Tony Hawk foundation," said Jimmy Francis, coordinator for outdoor facilities. "Once things slow down a little bit, we're going to put together a grant proposal which will hopefully secure some money from that foundation to help finance the skatepark."

skatepark would be user participation. Staff and faculty are less likely to support nontraditional sports. This is the criteria in the writing of the grant. With user participation, the project could be a reality before current students graduate.

"Having the opportunity in the future to develop and build a skatepark has to be studentled and student-driven," Maurer said. "The students don't realize how much strength they have and how much persuasive abilities they have."

The process of constructing a skatepark is in the beginning stages, no details have been finalized. An estimate of size is 20,000 square feet. This would accommodate skateboarding, BMX and inline skating, Maurer said. Different surfaces make it difficult to project a cost for the park. The Department of Recreational Sports plans to run the skatepark similar to its other outdoor facilities. The facilities would be free to the public until 2 a.m. - no monitors and possibly even lights.

Ideas about how to develop a skatepark are being considered from other skateparks across the country. Members of the Department of Recreational Sports have gone on tours of skateparks in Ohio and other

"What's really exciting about skateparks is not the formal head-to-head type of competition you are use to seeing in the element of sport," Maurer said. "What ve seen is people helping people. So everyone is in a very positive relationship. It's Essential to constructing a a win-win relationship.

Faster photos from Kodak's kiosks

Photography giant slowly switches to digital, offers customers speedier options to get traditional prints old-fashioned photography is coming soon: a self-service kiosk that can convert a roll of 35mm film into prints in as little as seven minutes

Eastman Kodak Co.'s Picture Maker filmprocessing stations will be test-marketed in Detroit this month, with a full-scale rollout set for later this year in pharmacies, supermarkets and photo-specialty shops across the United States and Europe.

Last fall, the world's largest maker of photographic film unveiled an ambitious new strategy to accelerate its push into new digital markets. At the same time, it acknowledged that its traditional photography businesses — a century-old cash cow — were in irreversible decline.

The kiosks appear designed to plug a gap between photography's old and new ways of creating images and perhaps even slow the fasterthan-expected migration of shutterbugs to digital

"It is very easy to believe that this could change the trajectory in the decline of film," said

Kent McNeley, general manager of Kodak's consumer output operations.

The kiosks will allow customers to preview, ROCHESTER, N.Y. — The latest advance in crop, enlarge and tidy up their snapshots, then print only those they want — a benefit that digital camera users already enjoy. Instead of negatives, the machines also will store the photos on Digital cameras outsold film cameras for the first time in the United States in 2003, the Jackson, Mich.-based Photo Marketing Association said. As a result, 200 million fewer rolls of film were processed last year compared with a peak of 781 million in 2000, it said.

Photography analysts scoffed at Kodak's notion that film kiosks might alter those trends.

'It would be nice if it happens, but I wouldn't bet on it," said Ulysses Yannas of Buckman, Buckman & Reid in New York.

Nonetheless, with tens of millions of film cameras still in use, "there is, and there will continue to be a very big market for film," particularly in developing markets in Asia and Latin America,

The conventional photography business still provides Kodak with the bulk of its profits, so extending its life could prove vital as the company steers into digital waters. To complete the painful transition, Kodak revealed last month it is cutting 12,000 to 15,000 more jobs — or nearly a quarter of its work force - over the next three years.

Kodak acquired the rapid film-processing technology from Applied Science Fiction Inc. of Austin, Texas, for $32 million last year. More than 150 new patents used in creating the film kiosk will make it difficult for competitors to match, Kodak said.

moments where they reveal another part of themselves, and a glimpse of Butts' alter ego is not fascinating enough to merit a reality show.

Anyone employed in the adult entertainment industry must have an on-stage persona. Performers certainly don't wake up each day wearing a leather thong, hog-tied to a bed with a sock stuffed in their mouth, as might be portrayed on set.

Furthermore, porn is reality television, and the idea of hiding behind the clique of reality TV is pathetic. To put it bluntly, "Family Business" appeals only to viewers who are too embarrassed to go behind the red curtain and rent a porn from a

The most disturbing part of the series — other than the fact that Butts actually kisses his child with those lips — is Butts' mother, Lila, who is also involved in the business. When not searching for a love interest for her son, she keeps the company's books. Worse is that she openly admits to watching many adult films, just not the ones featuring her son. At one point she suddenly finds Seymour Butts finally gets a spot in the video store morals. Something is slightly repulsive about a parent watching porn and openly admitting it.

Butts' peculiar cousin, Stevie, is his right-hand man and handles the distributing part of the business. His pathetic life consists of shooting photos of prospective performers. Revealing too much about the personalities might ruin the shocking revelation that these are real people.

All in all, the pilot was garbage and not appealing. Besides being a shameless plug for on Fridays at 11 p.m.

COURTESY OF SHOWTIME ENTERTAINMENT that isn't next to rubber playthings with the release of the first season of "Family Business" on DVD.

Butts' next adult film, its point is unclear, monotonous and distasteful. A reality show about a mother and son running a porn company is superficially laughable, but rather nauseating underneath. It is preposterous.

Andy Warhol's "Campbell's Soup" screen prints and Sigmund Freud are inspirations for 'The Campbell's screen print was making a comment on society and consumerism because of its cold and distant feeling," O'Brien said. The cold pictures act as masks.

Jessica Larva works with social issues of individuals and groups. Her video, "Dyslexia," shifts text across the screen to show the frustrations of people with the disease.

"I have minor dyslexia, but it runs in my family. I just wanted to express the frustrations of being dyslexic," Larva said. "I just want them to understand what dyslexic people face daily. People think you're not intelligent because reading is so difficult. It's not an IQ thing, but a processing error."

In a society where reading comprehension measures intelligence, success for the dyslexic may seem difficult. Larva's video images, however, suggest otherwise.

"I offer some hope showing that some artists art should be humorous." affected by dyslexia have succeeded like Leonardo Divinci and William Butler Yeates," Larva said.

The artistic approach of Steve Seeley with his paintings, "The fundamentals of Tying a Tie" and '$1600 Michael Jordan Rookie Card with Mothra and Baragon," are both interesting pieces.

"Everything doesn't have to be conceptual or serious."

Seeley said. "I like to have fun with what I do because art should be fun. If you take it too seriously you lose the initial reason for making it."

Inspired by comic books, Seeley incorporates humor within his art. His painting, "The fundamentals ... ," is a naked self-portrait explaining how to tie a tie — without actually having one to a rabbit-pig who cannot wear a tie.

"My geek culture of comics influenced my work, comics are the number one influence of my art," Seeley said. "They're probably why I believe Photography graduate, Nora Herting, takes an inquisitive approach with her work. Two Victorian-style dresses sit peacefully with the dresses and shoes in full view, but with heads masked away from the audience.

"My intent is to raise more questions than "I'm in an emerging genre of art where every-thing doesn't have to be so conceptual or serious," answers within a photograph." Herting said. "Too often people take a photograph at face value."
