Bush's popularity soars in his 'defining moment'

By Kelly Moskal Lantern staff writer

After the Sept. 11 attacks and with the new "War on Terrorism," President George W. Bush has shown leadership, and the American public has rallied to him.
In national surveys, including the ABC/Washington Post, Bloomberg News, CBS News/New York Times and CNN/Time polls, positive presidential ratings have

"Do you approve or disapprove of the way Bush is handling his job as president?" is the commonly asked question in each of the polls. The percentages range from 85-90 percent of respondents approving, 10-15 percent disapproving. Before the Sept. 11 attack, Bush's popularity ratings were between 51-54 percent

"There is often a rally-around-the-flag mood in the public in times of national crisis, and that's what happened here," said Herb Weisberg, professor of political science at Ohio State. "It is not surprising Bush's popularity has grown.

"The public realizes Bush could not be effective in mounting a counter-terrorism effort if the public were not behind him, so the public has become nearly universally supportive of him." Weisherg said.

Bush's father, George Bush, also hit a 90 percent popularity rating after defeating Iraq in early 1991. Presidents often have defining events, Weisberg said. Ronald Reagan's popularity numbers weren't very high until the assassination attempt on him. Bill Clinton also had mediocre ratings until after the destruction of the federal building in Oklahoma City and his very effective homage for the victims.

"This is George W. Bush's defining event, and we'll have to wait and see if he'll be effective enough to maintain a high popularity level," Weisberg said.

OSU political science professor Lawrence Baum agreed that a jump in approval of the president is common in a crisis situation. In an emergency situation people tend to put more trust in the government. Gregory Miller, political science lecturer at OSU, said approval ratings fluctuate up and down depending on the times.

"Americans support their president when they need to," he said.

Miller said he believes Bush is growing into the leadership role as a result of the crisis and is playing the part of a strong leader effectively.

"Bush is surrounded by knowledgeable, experienced people, so I have a great deal of confidence in the administration as a whole unit," he said.

It is difficult to know whether the current air strikes against Afghanistan are acceptable and will keep Bush's approval ratings high.

"From a legal standpoint, they would only be acceptable if we have evidence linking bin Laden to the attacks," Miller said. "This is something we have not seen in public but does seem to exist."

He pointed out other possible views of the current air strikes. "From a military standpoint, the air strikes are certainly acceptable as they are a first step toward taking other operations against the bin Laden network and the Taliban regime," Miller said. "Politically, the air strikes may be dangerous because they risk injuring innocent civilians, but we should be able to maintain our coalition as long as we continue to focus on military and government targets

Weisberg said it is clear Bush's popularity is at an ultimate high. The question is whether Bush takes advantage of his positive polling ratings.

Journalists wary of criticism during war

Lantern staff writer

The patriotic fervor which has swept the country following the Sept. 11 attacks may force journalists be mindful of what they say, but the current political climate is not a significant threat to free speech, according to media

Al Cross, political reporter for the Courier-Journal in Louisville, Ky., and president of the Society of Professional Journalists, said journalists need to be careful about being overly cynical but should not fear punishment as long as they act responsibly.
"I think there will surely be individual examples where people are disciplined or even let go because their commentary is considered too harsh," he said. "When you make a harsh criticism of the president and don't back that up, you put yourself at risk.

Four days after the terrorist attacks on New York City and the Pentagon, columnist Dan Guthrie of the Daily Courier in Grants Pass, Ore., criticized Bush as a coward who hid in the face of terrorism rather than return to Washington. When readers complained, Guthrie, 61, was fired. A similar scene unfolded when a 23year-old reporter in Texas lost his job for writing a cynical column.

"(Journalists) have a part to play in advancing the national cause. The cause itself must unify around that leader and other national leaders," Cross said, suggesting that overly harsh criticism of Bush weakens the cause against terrorism.

The question begs to be asked: If you can be fired for writing unpopular columns, isn't that the same as muzzling free speech?

Not according to Neil Hickey, editor-at-large for the Columbia Journalism Review.

"I would say the press are doing a very solid, credible job under very, very, difficult circumstances," Hickey said. "I don't see any (self-censorship), really."

Although Bill Maher of Politically Incorrect was forced to apologize for statements on a Sept. 17 broadcast which called past U.S. military action cowardly, there is no reason to assume the country has taken a reactionary tone, according to Hickey.

"Most people also thought it was bad form for the president's press secretary (Ari Fleischer) to say 'people better watch what they say," he said. "The White House had second thoughts about that one.

Fleischer's statement was pulled from White House transcripts, amid public criticism.

Some of the worst criticism of the press did not come from what was reported but the way it was displayed. Television news networks soon came under fire for replaying scenes of jets smashing into the World Trade Towers.

"The television networks showing the crash over and over again; that became very troublesome," Hickey said. "After they showed it a while, they did get the message that it was a kind of journalistic pornography.'

As nation faces economic struggle, Ohio prepares for a gloomy future

Lantern staff writer

As the country goes to war, Ohio faces overcoming the threat of a slowing economy, and cutbacks may strike colleges and universities as well. A poor economy goes hand-in-hand with job layoffs and hiring freezes.

The unemployment rate in Ohio was 4.2 percent in August, which was lower than the national rate of 4.9 percent, according to the Ohio Department of Development Web site.

A weak economy can put added difficulties on students who are graduating, but some students changes in the economy.

During the week of the attacks, stock prices fell to their lowest overall level in three years. The Dow Jones' 14.3 percent decrease was the largest since the Great Depression. By the time trading had ended on Sept. 21, there was a $1.2 trillion loss in the value of U.S. stocks.

President Willam "Brit" Kriwan talked to members of The Lantern staff yesterday, including Editor-in-Chief, Jason Mann.

By Dave Lieberman Lantern staff writer

A new round of state budget cuts is expected to further deteriorate Ohio State's operating budget.

Today, during his annual "State of the University" address to the University Senate, OSU President William "Brit" Kirwan will detail the ramifications of an anticipated 6 percent cut by the state to OSU's operating budget. The cut, which has not been formally announced yet, would amount to a loss of $27 million for the university, and $18 million of the loss would come from academic areas. In a meeting with The Lantern yesterday, Kirwan said the coming year will be enormously challenging for the university and difficult decisions will have to be made. It is too early to discuss any possible reductions in programs or jobs, he said.

"What we can expect is a major redirection of funds within the university's budget," Kirwan said. "The strategy we will follow is not to spread cuts uniformly, but pick out things that are less important and reduce them significantly — or possibly even eliminate them.

Budget cuts expected to slash $27M

Kirwan said the university's Academic Plan would be the guiding beacon for determining any redirection of funds or cuts in certain areas.

This new wave of state budget cutbacks comes on the heels of an already difficult budget year for OSU. During the past few months, the university has been trying to rectify low salary levels for OSU faculty and staff, who received only a 1 percent pay increase last year. Kirwan said this new budget dilemma would make the competitive compensation issue more difficult to solve but would not place the issue in "Our salaries, in comparison with the rest of our benchmarks (universities), have fallen steadily to near the bottom. It places at serious risk the quality of the university," he said. "We will have to find a way to fund (this initiative) by reducing other areas of the university."

Kirwan is expected to address solutions to competitive compensation issues at the meeting

Kirwan said he is also worried about the possibility of additional budget cuts over the coming academic year. The anxiety comes from a continued weakness in the state's economy and uncertainty over the state's financial responsibility to K-12 education.

As a result, he said the university would look at targeted fundraising from private donors and businesses, as well as soliciting new grants and

"We need to be very entrepreneurial in looking for new sources of revenue," Kirwan said. "The more we can be successful in that regard, the more pressure it takes off for the reprogramming of funds.'

While budgetary issues are expected to be the central focus at today's Senate meeting, other important items will be on the agenda.

Fisher gets on Web with degree

By Sarah D. Sargent Lantern staff writer

How does going to class in your pajamas sound?

The Fisher College of Business is jumping on the distance learning bandwagon, by offering an undergraduate business degree where you don't have to come to Columbus, or even get up, to attend class

The Fisher College and the OSU regional campuses launched a new distance learning business major in September. The courses have been tailored to meet the needs of nontraditional business students who already hold positions in Ohio's small and mid-size firms, according to a statement from Fisher College.

OSU's Lima, Mansfield, Marion and Newark campuses are participating in the pilot program that blends the best of distance learning technology with traditional classroom instruction by Fisher College

"This is a way for students to be offered a full degree at a regional campus. We didn't always get the same quality of teachers before, and now we can," said Kyle Morgan, coordinator of advisement at Newark.

The general business major consists of 13 junior and senior level classes, about half of which are core business courses and the rest consisting of general business electives. Upon completion of the curriculum, students will receive an undergraduate degree no different than if they had attended the Columbus campus, according to the statement.

The courses are equivalent to those offered on main campus, but will be presented in a combined online and classroom

"We have recitation sessions and meeting times that still exist," said Elnora D. Thompson, program coordinator for the business degree program at Lima. "Students are expected to access online materials, but the recitation times are so students don't feel they are lost in the mix."

The online portion of courses include lecture notes, video clips, self-tests, quizzes, student presentations and grades. Typical courses include a twohour recitation each week conducted by a teaching assistant while course schedules are determined by the professor.

The new program, sponsored by a $1.5 million grant from the Dorney Fund through the Cleveland Foundation, comes at a time when the success of distance learning has been considered a disappointment to some researchers. A survey conducted by the Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business found that only 2.5 percent of MBA stu-dents were enrolled in online or other distance programs. Experts had predicted the proportion would be at least 10

"Our online courses are totally full, we have students who need to get into classes," Morgan said.

So far, undergraduate enrollment in the online curriculum has not been a problem and students seem to be satisfied with the new technology.

Deadline for fellowship nears

By Kim Kirschenheiter Lantern staff writer

The National Science Foundation will assist a limited number of eligible graduate students in funding their higher education through an annual fellowship offering.

Working in connection with Oak Ridge Associated Universities, a Tennessee-based academic organization, the NSF will award 900 three-year graduate research fellowships to science, mathematics and engineering students nationally. The application deadline for the 2002 competition is Nov. 7.

Jeannette Bouchard, manager of ORAU, said the competition receives applications from students across America.

"It's a national competition, so we get applicants from around the country who are planning to attend different graduate institutions around the country and around the world," she said. "It's a portable fellowship, meaning they can take it anywhere."

The amount of this year's fellowships increased in comparison to last year. For the 2001-2002 school year, the 12-month stipend totaled $18,000 with a cost-of-education allowance of $10,500. In the 2002-2003 school year, each fellowship consists of $20,500 for the 12-month stipend while the cost-of-education allowance remains the same.

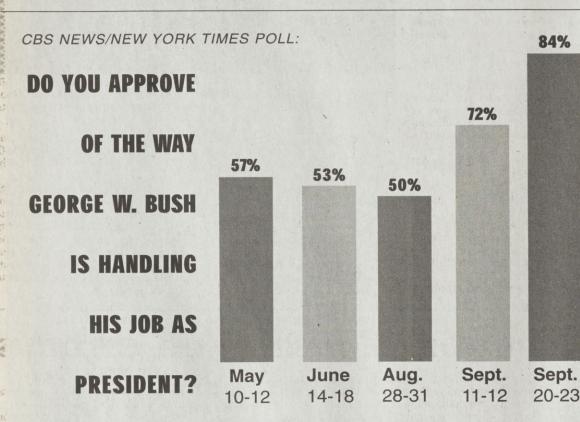

"I would call it a good-sized financial award package," said Jo Wittenauer, fellowship coordinator of Ohio State's graduate

According to Bouchard, ORAU serves only as the contractor which runs the competition for NSF; therefore, students awarded the fellowships are not limited to attending schools involved with the organization.

"Recipients of the fellowship can attend any accredited U.S. institution or any international institution as long as it has an appropriate graduate program in their field," she Wittenauer cites the flexibility of the fellowships as another attractive feature.

"It's a three-year tenure, a maximum of three years of support that they have to use within a five-year period of time," she said. "They could reserve a year to teach or something for the institution they're attending."

A report containing the specifics is expected to come out next week, as the city considers suggestions on how to reduce expenses.

Most Ohioans lost confidence in the economy during the week following the Sept. 11 attacks, and Ohio is having a hard time trying to regain trust, said Larry Householder, speaker of the Ohio House.

OSU compiled a consumer-confidence index showing a 4.6 percent drop in confidence after Sept. 11. The potential of an economic turnaround looked good for the United States in the weeks prior to the attacks, according to figures released by the Federal Reserve Bank in Cleveland. But now people are not buying or eating as much as before.

A proposal by the Council on Enrollment and Student Progress to extend OSU's selective admissions policy to all quarters will be voted on. Admission to OSU is still open during the spring quarter term, allowing any high school graduate to enroll in the university.

Additionally, it is likely an announcement will be made regarding the debate over calendar conversion from quarters to semesters. Last June, the Senate took up debate on a report by the university's Ad Hoc Calendar Committee, which recommended OSU switch to a semester calendar system. A final vote is scheduled to occur at the Senate's November meeting.

Today's Senate meeting will convene in McPherson Hall, Room 1000 at 3:30 p.m. The meeting is open to the public.

Electrical short cited as cause of Baker fire

By Amy Sudlow Lantern staff writer

Officials have ruled the MicroFridge fire that evacuated 300 residents in Baker Hall West on Sept. 21 was caused by an electrical short.

"An electrical engineer from the Unified Company checked it out and determined that it was some type of failure in the circuitry," said Robert Barnett, assistant director for Risk Assessment.

The university has contacted the manufacturers, MicroFridge

Inc., about the fire. According to MicroFridge Inc., no other failures of this type have been reported, Barnett said. The MicroFridge units are safe when used properly, but do experience common maintenance prob-

"This is the first reported case of one malfunctioning in this manner (igniting)," Barnett said.

Barnett added that the MicroFridge units have experienced normal maintenance problems. These problems include replacing the thermostat, cold control and light bulbs.

Overall, officials said that students should not worry about a similar incident happening to

"To our knowledge they (the MicroFridges) are very safe," said Steve Kremer, assistant vice president of Student Affairs.

The afternoon fire started when a first floor resident of Baker Hall West was cooking a Chef Boyardee product in his MicroFridge. The control panel burst into flames.

A resident hall staff member used a fire extinguisher to quench the fire until officials arrived

The damage was limited to the resident's room and to hallway carpet. The items damaged in the fire have been replaced, Barnett said.

Kremer applauded students and staff for following proper procedures during the emergency.

"The students and staff did a great job in handling of the situation," Kremer said.

The students did a good job of evacuating the building, he added. Kremer also praised the staff member who controlled the fire until firefighters arrived.

"Everything went well," he said. OSU has been using the MicroFridge units since 1993. The age of the units used in the dorm rooms range from five to eight years. The price per unit is about $400. Barnett said.

The MicroFridge unit combines a microwave, freezer and refrigerator in one compact unit.

Bomb scare temporarily closes two major border crossings

By Wilson Ring Associated Press

HIGHGATE, Vt. - A bomb threat made to a business near the U.S.-Canada border and a suspicious truck prompted federal officials to close two major border crossings yesterday.

Vehicles heading toward the ports of entry at Champlain, N.Y., and Highgate, Vt., were stopped by police and directed to smaller crossings, said Craig Jehle, port director in Highgate.

The bomb threat was made shortly before 9 a.m. to an office of A.N. Deringer, a customs broker and international freight handler.

"The caller said: 'There's a bomb that's going to go boom," said John Holzscheiter, Deringer marketing vice president and co-owner. About 250 company employees were evacuated from three offices.

'Dancing Wheels' brings new spin to Homecoming

By Brooke Theis Lantern staff writer

Homecoming week shifted its attention to diversity with incorporating a show comprised of dancers with and without disabilities.

Dancing Wheels, a professional integrated dance company from Cleveland, gave a free performance and reception at the Wexner Performance Space yesterday.

Jen Hertzfeld, a counselor in the Office of Disability Services and part of the Homecoming Diversity Subcommittee said that the importance of the performance was to, "inform (all) students about accessibility in the arts.'

Dancing Wheels, founded in 1980 by Mary Verdi-Fletcher, has educated and entertained audiences around the world through performance and lectures, community classes or workshops, residencies and mainstage concerts.

Dancers Tracy Pattison, David Nau and Mark Tomasic performed five dances and in between each dance talked about the philosophy of Dancing Wheels.
According to Tomasic, the performance and lecture allows visually and hearing impaired people to become more interested in the performing arts.

At each show, there is an interactive segment where the audience participates in the performance. At the end, there is a question and answer period open for audience members who have questions for the performers.

Jed Smock and his followers conveyed their message that the Muslim religion is evil to around 100 students on the Oval yesterday afternoon.

Ohio State students had mixed reactions to Smock's comments.

He said no one has to listen to his message, and, if anyone was harassed, it was him.

Lupus widespread for U.S. minorities

State Rep. Ray Miller, D-Columbus, addressed the Lupus Foundation of America Oct. 4 to recognize Lupus Awareness

"Many people do not know that lupus is more prevalent in Americans than AIDS, sickle cell anemia, cerebral palsy, multiple sclerosis and cystic fibrosis combined," Miller said.

Lupus affects one out of every 185 Americans and is more commonly found in minorities. About 90 percent of those with lupus are women around childbearing age. Lupus affects women 10 to 15 times more often than men.

Miller said it is imperative for blacks to participate in research. As chair of the Ohio Commission on Minority Health, Miller said he is doing all he can to make sure the proper funding is made available. They have already given the Lupus Foundation of America three grants to aid in research efforts.

Dr. Lee Herbert of Ohio State has received a $4.8 million grant to study the effects of lupus.

New vaginal ring keeps babies away

Women who have problems remembering to take their daily birth control pill now have another option. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration approved the first monthly vaginal ring for contraception.

NuvaRing is a flexible, transparent ring about two inches in diameter. It works by releasing a steady low dose of estrogen and progestin for 21 days to prevent pregnancy.

The ring is worn for three weeks and removed during the week of the woman's men-strual period. A new ring is used each month for continuous contraception.

Based on worldwide clinical trials, the rate for women becoming pregnant while using the NuvaRing, is one or two each year out of 100. This is a similar rate to those found for other popular birth control methods.

NuvaRing's manufacturer, Organon, said the ring will be

Boo! Halloween can scare small children

The traditions of Halloween are loved by most children. They can hardly wait to get dressed up in costumes, visit haunted houses and watch scary movies.

While these activities are all right for older children, some of the younger ones can be frightened, said Mary Fristad, child psychologist at OSU and Harding Behavioral Healthcare and Medicine.

"For a four-year-old, it's hard to decipher what is fantasy and what is reality. Children in your neighborhood dressed up in scary ghost or goblin costumes can be very frightening for a small child," Fristad said.

To help small children avoid being afraid, Fristad advises to have them visit a costume shop to see the masks and costumes. This may help put them to ease, knowing there's nothing to fear. Parents should also assist their children in picking out a costume of their own, so the child can find something they are comfortable in. Finally, Fristad says parents should accompany small children while they are trick-or-treating.

Protein lifesaver for swimming sperm

(AP) — Biologists have discovered a protein that gives sperm the oomph to penetrate an egg — a finding that could someday lead to new contraceptive drugs for man and treatments for male infertility.

The protein, dubbed CatSper, is found only in sperm tails. Researchers found that mice genetically engineered so that they lacked the protein produced sluggish sperm with markedly less "whiplash" motion in their tails. The sperm did not penetrate eggs and conception

"The reason they were infertile is that their sperm don't swim very well. They don't have enough force to penetrate an egg," said Dr. David Clapham of Harvard Medical School, who led the study.

Cedar Point owners being sued in death

BUENA PARK, Calif. (AP) -The family of a woman who fell to her death on a water ride at Knott's Berry Farm has filed a lawsuit accusing the theme park of negligence.

The lawsuit filed Tuesday alleges that the park's owner, Cedar Fair LP, and the ride's manufacturer, Intamin Co., "knew the dangers" of the ride and failed to take steps to reduce risks. Cedar Fair also operates Cedar Point in Sandusky, Ohio.

Lori Mason-Larez of Duarte fell more than 100 feet while riding "Perilous Plunge" on Sept. 21. Investigators are trying to determine whether the 40-year-old slipped from both a seat belt and a lap bar as the boat dropped at speeds up to 50 mph. Park officials said the lap bar and seat belt were in the locked position when the ride returned to the loading area after the accident.

Preliminary tests by Intamin found no mechanical problems with the ride.

The family's lawyer, Stephen Mancini, said he would discuss the lawsuit yesterday during a news conference.

No monetary damages were mentioned in the lawsuit.

Investigators with the state Division of Occupational Safety and Health said they are consider-ing whether Mason-Larez's size was a factor in the accident. Firefighters at the scene said she weighed about 330 pounds.

Football prescribed to cure depression

CHARDON, Ohio (AP) - A doctor has prescribed football for a high school student who has depression. The Chardon School Board voted 3-2 to let Andy Ihlenfield, a senior who was not allowed to play this fall because of poor grades, rejoin the Chardon High School Hilltoppers.

The prescription was faxed to the school Tuesday. On it, Dr. Donald J. Goddard wrote, "Andy is to play football.'

Ihlenfield, 17, may resume practicing with the team, but under state rules cannot play in games. Andy's parents, Jim and Sarah, told board members that being part of the team would help lift their son's spirits.

Staying part of the team is important to Andy's well-being, his parents said. Ihlenfield earned a varsity letter as a backup quarterback last year.

The state prohibits an ineligible student from competing in games. Chardon's policy is more stringent, preventing the student from even

"We have a doctor saying this child has a problem, and here's what can be done to help," said Bob Faehnle, one of three board members who voted to let Ihlenfield practice. "As a board, we owe it to Andy to let him do this. It's for his

Five killed by erratic apple truck driver

MONACA, Pa. (AP) -Five people were killed yesterday when an apple truck went out of control and careened into a construction crew near a Beaver County bridge.

Witnesses said the driver of the truck, James McClelland, was driving erratically and attempting to dodge construction barrels and other vehicles as he drove northbound toward the Vanport Bridge on Route 60 shortly after 10 a.m.

The truck hit several of the barrels, crossed into the southbound lanes and drove through holes in the road before hitting workers standing in a one-foot deep hole while installing supports in a section of roadway, said state police Trooper Cheryl Michalski.

Kursk wreckage towed home

Sunken nuclear sub recovered, reactor shows no signs of leaking radiation

By Vladimir Isachenkov Associated Press

MURMANSK, Russia - The battered nuclear submarine Kursk reached shore in sunny but chilly weather yesterday, 14 months after it exploded and sank, killing its entire 118-man crew.

A barge hauling the submarine pulled into a Russian shipyard's waters in the final stage of a salvage effort made riskier by the ship's two nuclear reactors and missile arsenal. On Monday, a Dutch consortium finished raising the Kursk from the Barents Sea

The Giant-4 barge started attaching itself to floating anchors about 500 yards from shore at Roslyakovo near Murmansk just after 5 p.m., said Russian Navy spokesman Vladimir Navrotsky. It was to take about an hour to finish the anchoring process, then two or three days to prepare the ship for docking, he said.

The Kursk's two 190-megawatt nuclear reactors have been a primary concern since the Aug. 12, 2000 explosion. Measurements conducted throughout the lifting and towing have shown no trace of leaked radiation, the Russian Northern Fleet chief, Adm. Vyacheslav Popov, said.

People concentrated all their efforts. The situation was very tense as people felt high responsibility," Navrotsky told reporters.

"After anchoring we immediately will start detailed radiation

Officials have said the reactors were safely shut down when the Kursk sank and that they leaked no radiation. But the risk of a potential radiation leak in the rich fishing grounds of the Barents Sea was a key reason the Russian government cited for the costly, precarious operation to lift the Kursk.

Deputy Prime Minister Ilya Klebanov, who is in charge of the salvage effort in the Russian Cabinet, insisted the reactors would remain safe. "If there had been a one-in-a-million chance that something would happen, we would never had carried out the operation in Roslyakovo," Klebanov

Concern about a possible radiation leak prompted Roslyakovo officials to work out contingency evacuation plans and beef up stocks of iodine.

Another reason for concern was the condition of the Kursk's 22 supersonic Granit cruise missiles.

If it proves impossible to lift missiles out of their containers in a normal fashion, the navy is prepared to cut them out of the Kursk's hull together with containers, Popov said. He didn't say when the missiles would be removed, but estimated that it would take at least a year to dismantle the submarine along with its nuclear reactors and missiles.

Speaking on Russian television late Tuesday, Popov bristled with anger when asked when camera crews would be allowed close to the wreck. "For sailors, a sunken ship is like a dead body and showing a disfigured wreck is morally wrong," he snapped.

While the most cumbersome part is nearing an end, much work remains on the Kursk.

Once it is put in dry dock, officials will first take out remains of the crew to prevent damaging contact with the air. Navrotsky said officials only hope to find 30 to 40 bodies, because remains of others were likely blown to dust by powerful explosions that sank the submarine.

At least 23 Kursk sailors survived the crash for hours in the stern compartments, according to letters found when divers entered the vessel last fall and recovered 12 bodies.

It took the Dutch Mammoet-Smit International consortium more than 15 hours to lift the submarine, which was lying 356 feet below the surface, on steel cables lowered from the 26,400-ton barge. The immaculate operation cost the Russian government $65 million.

The Arctic seas, usually rough in this season, have remained unusually calm throughout the lifting and the subsequent transportation of the Kursk - an essential condition for the success of the salvage effort. The operation went on surprisingly trouble-free after technical problems and delays caused by storms during the threemonth preparatory works.

The government hopes to determine the cause of the Kursk's sinking. But skeptics say key clues to what caused the disaster are in the Kursk's mangled bow, which was sawed off and left on the seabed out of fear it could destabilize the lifting. The navy plans to raise all or part of the bow next

U.S. keeps pouring it on Afghan cities

By Kathy Gannon and Amir Shah Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan — In the biggest attack so far against Kabul, U.S. jets pounded the Afghan capital yesterday, and explosions thundered around a Taliban military academy, artillery units and suspected terrorist training camps. Buildings miles away shook with the fury of the attack.

With the United States claiming air supremacy in its campaign to root out Osama bin Laden's terrorist network, American jets roamed across the skies for more than two hours, seeking out targets on the fringes of this war-ruined city of 1 million.

U.S. aircraft returned to the skies over this city early today pounding sites near the airport. In two sorties, jets fired at least 11 heavy-detonation projectiles. They lit up the night sky. Flames surged skyward. Taliban gunners returned fire with anti-air-craft weapons. Thick clouds of black smoke rose from the direction of the

The private Afghan Islamic Press in Pakistan said U.S. jets and missiles also attacked the Taliban's southern stronghold of Kandahar for the second time in a day and a Taliban military base at Shamshaad. about four miles from the Pakistani meanwhile, said two adult male relatives of Taliban leader Mullah Mohammad Omar were killed in bombing strikes Sunday on the leader's home in Kandahar in the south of the country. The official, speaking on the condition of anonymity, also said a senior Taliban officer was reported killed in strikes near Mazar-e-Sharif in the north.

Before the latest bombardment began, the United Nations reported that Taliban loyalists have been beating up Afghans working with U.N.affiliated aid agencies, apparently taking aim at one of the only Western symbols remaining in the country.

The barrage on Kabul yesterday night appeared to be the longest and biggest yet in the four-day-old U.S.led air campaign. Warplanes fired missiles in rapid succession while Taliban gunners unleashed furious, but futile barrages of anti-aircraft fire at the jets flying beyond their range. Taliban mobile air defense units cruised through the city, firing at the planes.

Powerful explosions could be heard around Kabul airport in the north of the city and to the west in the direction of Rishkore and Kargah both areas where bin Laden is believed to have terrorist training

Blinding flashes lit up the night sky toward the Taliban military academy and an area with artillery garrisons. Jets could be heard heading northward toward the front line between the Taliban and the opposition northern alliance.

Most of the attack took place after the 9 p.m. curfew, and it was impossible to determine the extent of damage. There were no reports from Taliban radio, which has been off the air for two days following attacks on communications towers.

Although there appeared to be no impacts in central Kabul, buildings shook and windows rattled in residential areas in the heart of the capital.

For many Afghans, the nightly air raids were becoming difficult to bear, even in a war-hardened country.

Sardar Mohammed, a Kabul diesel-and-gasoline merchant, said he and his family eat dinner early, then before nightfall move everyone into a room with only one window, which is blocked up with bedding.

To stop the shrapnel," he said. We learned this during the civil war." In other developments yesterday:

In Washington, President Bush unveiled a list of the United States' 22 most-wanted terrorists, including bin Laden and several associates.

White House officials urged U.S. media networks to be cautious in broadcasting prerecorded communications from bin Laden and associates in case they contained coded instructions for fresh strikes.

 U.S. water system operators asked for $5 billion from Congress to protect drinking water and wastewater plants from terrorism. The United States has claimed air supremacy in the campaign against the poorly equipped Taliban, the hard-line Islamic militia that rules most of Afghanistan. The Americans now plan to use 5,000-pound laserguided bombs against the underground bunkers of Taliban leaders and bin Laden's al-Qaida terror net-

U.S. officials said U.S. warplanes also would begin dropping cluster munitions — bombs that dispense smaller bomblets - for use against moving and stationary land targets such as armored vehicles and troop

Bush launched the bombing campaign after weeks of fruitless efforts to get the Taliban to hand over bin

The United States has coupled the air assaults with a humanitarian effort, dropping packets of food aid into Afghanistan from planes. The Taliban announced yesterday that angry Afghans were destroying the packets rather than eating the food.

Army pilot killed, one wounded in helicopter crash

By David Rising Associated Press

BERLIN - A U.S. Army helicopter crashed during night attack training in western Poland, killing one pilot and injuring the other, the U.S. Army's V Corps said yesterday.

Chief Warrant Officer III Michael E. Reece, 36, of Big Pine Key, Fla., was killed in Tuesday's crash while practicing strikes behind enemy lines, said Army spokeswoman Alison Bettencourt. Reece was an experienced pilot with 15 years in the Army.

Co-pilot Chief Warrant Officer II Robert W. Rugg was in stable condition in the 107th Polish Military Hospital in Walcz. He was to be brought back to Germany, where V Corps is based. Rugg's age and hometown were not immedi-

Investigators from V Corps were on the scene, and a team of military experts from Fort Rucker, Ala., was expected to arrive this afternoon to determine the cause of

The two-person Apache AH-64 attack helicopter was taking part in Victory Strike II, a training mission involving large helicopter assaults against mock enemy radar and missile installations about 75 miles from the training base. During the simulated attack exercise. pilots fly at treetop height, dodging and weaving to avoid simulated enemy missile attacks.

The helicopter went down during the last simulated attack of the exercise, Bettencourt said.

"It's being called a hard landing, which means we're not sure if the helicopter was in control when it went down or not," she said.

It was not clear how long the helicopter had been in the air when it crashed, nor which man was flying the plane, Bettencourt said. Both crew members in Apaches are trained pilots.

The Army had grounded all Apaches in June after identifying a possible problem with the helicopter's tail rotor assembly. The grounding was the third for the Apache fleet in two years.

Last December, the Apaches which entered service with the U.S. Army in 1984 — were grounded after a flaw was discovered in a key component of the flight control system. They were also grounded in Nov. 1999 to replace tail rotor bearings or to replace transmission

All Apaches were deemed flightworthy before the Victory Strike II exercise started.

Both pilots from Tuesday's crash were part of the 2nd Squad, 6th Cavalry, of the 11th Attack Helicopter Regiment, based in Illesheim, Germany. The unit is part of V Corps, based in Heidelberg, Germany.

Reece is survived by his wife, two children and his parents.

The three-week exercise at the Drawsko Pomorskie and Wedrzyn training grounds in Poland, about 80 miles east of Berlin, was expected to continue through Saturday with live-fire exercises, Bettencourt said.

"Obviously for the soldiers, emotionally, this is pretty difficult, and we're using today to look at the exercises and assess what to continue with," she said. "But at this point we're continuing with the exercise '

Some 4,000 American and Polish troops have deployed for the exercise, which pits Apache attack helicopters against American and Soviet-era anti-aircraft weaponry in an exercise that mimics tactics that could be employed in Afghanistan in the U.S.-led fight against terrorism.

NATO offers extended military role for U.S. action

By Barry Schweid Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The NATO allies are offering to play larger and more active roles in the U.S.-led war on terrorism. Some, including France, have volunteered to join in the military action.

The offers are being sorted through, and the 17 European countries and Canada will be fitted into a large strategic scheme, a senior U.S. official said.

The allies, who already have declared the Sept. 11 attacks on the United States an attack on themselves as well, are volunteering principally for air support

France and several others, however, appear willing to join the United States n attacking terrorist strongholds, said the official, speaking on condition of

Britain joined with the United States in the missile attack on Afghanistan's ruling Taliban militia as it began last Sunday, putting in force President Bush's statement that eradicating terrorists around the globe is "our calling." Bush said last week that Australia, Canada, France and Germany had pledged forces.

Actually, the offers are far broader than that, with different countries offering different elements to the coalition, the official said. Decisions on how to use them are being made on a case-by-case basis, using each country according to its capabilities, the official said.

Lord Robertson, NATO's secretary general, met with Bush at the White House and with Secretary of State Colon Powell at the State Department.

Referring to the broad-gauged campaign, Robertson said, "Those who expected U.S. unilateralism have witnessed instead the masterpiece of multilateralness, rallying the world behind a common purpose in a way only the United States of America can do.

This has been coalition-building at its very best. NATO will, of course, be one of the key pillars of that coalition," he said.

Bush praised NATO, meanwhile, for promising to help patrol American skies with early-warning surveillance planes starting Friday. Powell said NATO forces will be moving into the eastern Mediterranean as well.

"The alliance has a role," he said at a joint news conference with Robertson.

This has never happened before that NATO has come to help defend our country — but it happened in this time of need, and for that we're grateful," Bush said in the Rose Garden, standing next to the former British defense secretary.

And yet, Powell suggested solid evidence of unqualified support in the Middle East and the Persian Gulf was scant.

"They all have internal domestic situations that they have to keep very much in mind, and we're very satisfied with the level of support we've received from our friends not only in the Persian Gulf area, but throughout that part of the world," Powell said on CBS' "The Early Show."

And in Doha, Qatar, Muslim leaders questioned whether evidence of who planned the Sept. 11 attacks justifies the continuing U.S. assault on Afghanistan or if innocent civilians were being caught up in the war on terror.

Presiding over an Organization of the Islamic Conference emergency session yesterday, Qatar's Emir Sheik Hamad bin Khalifa Al Thani condemned the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. He said retaliation, however, "should not extend to any but those who carried out those attacks. This requires providing conclusive evidence against the cul-

Powell said he was very pleased with results of the Muslim conference, especially "when we consider the kind of statement that might have come out."

Cleanup gets under way in tornado's aftermath

By Jennifer L. Brown Associated Press

CORDELL, Okla. — Emergency crews and residents began cleaning up yesterday after a series of tornadoes tore across the Plains, severely damaging more than 100 homes and leaving tons of debris

No serious injuries were reported after a twister leveled homes, toppled power lines and tossed cars like toys Tuesday afternoon. Most of the damaged homes were in Cordell, a town of 3,000 in western Oklahoma, but six tornadoes also caused damage in central Nebraska late Tuesday.

"To see some of the devastation and some of the houses that just disappeared, it surprised me that we haven't had serious injuries, much ess fatalities," said Robert Parsons, sheriff's deputy in Oklahoma's

Washita County. "I'm just amazed at it."

By yesterday, 20 people who had been reported as unaccounted-for late Tuesday had been found.

Five people, including an infant, were released from a hospital after being treated for injuries from flying glass and debris. One man, who was in a house when the roof collapsed, was transferred to another hospital for further tests.

Utility crews worked all night to fix fallen power lines. The damaged part of the town remained without power yesterday.

Public schools had closed before the tornado hit. At least one of the school buildings was damaged, Parsons said. We will be allowing residents back into the damaged area today to clean up," Parsons said. "Basically they will try to find what they can

Officers found one man covered in mud and wandering down a street. He had been driving his car when the tornado hit, rolling the vehicle and ossing him about 250 feet, police said.

Another man, Elmo Maddox, 72, climbed into the cellar of his daughter's farmhouse just seconds before the tornado hit.

"When we shut that cellar door, it was right on us," Maddox said.
"This was the worst I'd ever seen." He described seeing two tornadoes merge into one system that seemed to be a mile wide. S.L. Anthony and his wife crouched in a closet as the tornado passed their apartment in Cordell.

"I held onto her," Anthony said. "The walls around us blew off." When they emerged, Anthony stared out at a debris-littered field hat used to hold a metal building where he often played pool with

Some pieces of the building were stuck in a tree, boards had lodged in a metal trailer that was tipped on its side, and a pickup truck that had been inside the building was flipped over in a field about 50 feet away.

At the Daycare Depot, a group of children huddled in a room built with 3-foot concrete walls and a steel door. The center was slightly damaged, but no one inside was injured.

Authorities had barricaded the hard-hit southeastern part of town by nightfall, allowing only residents with a police permit to pass. People streamed out of the area, carrying sacks of belongings.

WASHINGTON - Picture the sun as the size of a grapefruit. That would make tiny Pluto smaller than a poppy seed in the Smithsonian Institution's new scale model of the solar system.

By the same scale, the nearest star would be the size of a cherry — located across the country in California.

Stretching more than six football fields across, the Smithsonian's new model doesn't fit in any museum. So, "Voyage: A Journey Through the Solar System," will be displayed out-doors, stretching 650 yards along the museums lining the National Mall.

Ohio State's women's field hockey team takes on the No. 2 Michigan Wolverines tomorrow at 3 p.m. and California on Sunday at 1 p.m. Both games are at home.

Tough weekend awaits field hockey

By Christopher Shook antern sports writer

Rebounding from a tough loss is difficult for any team to overcome, but when the No. 2 team in the country is next on the schedule, there is not much time to dwell on the past.

That is the challenge that the No. 10 Ohio State field hockey team faces this weekend when the Michigan Wolverines come to town for a showdown between the top two teams in the Big Ten.

The Buckeyes are trying to put a difficult 2-1 loss to No. 8 Virginia last weekend behind them, but memories of missed opportunities are still in the back of "It was a pretty hard loss because we were so much better," said senior forward Marije van Nouhuys.

The loss dropped the Buckeyes to 10-2 overall, with the only other blemish on their record being a shootout oss to No. 9 Louisville. They are still undefeated in the Big Ten at 3-0.

OSU will attempt to build on the positives from this past weekend's road trip which included a convincing 4-0 victory over the Richmond Spiders.

"I think for Michigan, we need to learn from our mistakes so they won't happen again," van Nouhuys

Michigan comes into Friday's matchup with 10-2 record, 3-0 in the Big Ten. They are coming off a big 2l win over No. 6 Michigan State and are on a sevengame winning streak. Their only losses of the season came at the hands of No. 4 Wake Forest and No. 5 North Carolina.

The Wolverines are led by freshman midfielder Adrienne Hortillosa, who was last week's Big Ten offensive player of the week following her game-winning goal against the Spartans. She has eight goals this season.

Defensively, Michigan is led by sophomore Stephanie Johnson, two-time Big Ten defensive player of the week. She has eight goals and four defensive saves for the Wolverines.

OSU has had their trouble with Michigan, losing the last seven meetings dating back to 1997. The Buckeyes hope to use this record as motivation.

"There are a lot of players on this team that have such strong emotions for this game because they've beat us so many times," van Nouhuys said. "I feel like this is the most important game of the season.'

The rivalry between Michigan and OSU has spilled over from the football field and the players look forward to facing off with the team up north. "No matter what sport, if you go to OSU, you have problem with Michigan," senior goalie and co-captain Allison Blanton said. The Buckeyes will not get much time to rest following the game against Michigan as they must prepare to take on the California Golden Bears Saturday.

California is coming into the game with a 6-3 over-The Golden Bears are led by senior forward Elizabeth Harkins, who has five goals and four assists on the season. Coach Anne Wilkinson warns that they are not a team to be taken lightly. "California is a good team," Wilkinson said. "They have a lot of speed, so we're certainly not going to overlook them. The game against Michigan will start at 3 p.m. on Friday and the California game starts at 1 p.m. on Saturday. Both games will take place at Ohio State North Turf Field.

Traditions are timeless ... so is the ring

Tradition. It used to be that when you bought your school ring, you got the same style of ring everyone else at the University was getting. There was one class ring, not dozens of styles, shapes, and colors. And it was more than a piece of jewelry. It was a symbol. It was a reminder. It was a tradition.

Rekindling that tradition. Ohio State and the Ohio State University Alumni Association are pleased to announce the return of the Official Ring of The Ohio State University. Wearing the ring represents having successfully met academic advancement standards. There is now only one official ring design.

The elite circle. A student must achieve junior status before being eligible to purchase the ring. Not there yet? It's just a matter of time before you are there.

Joining the tradition. This academic year, all eligible students will receive an invitation to acquire the official ring. It will also be available at Long's Bookstore, the Ohio State Main Bookstore, Spirit Concepts, and Student Book Exchange (SBX). For the story behind the ring, just surf your way to www.milestonetraditions.com/colleges/ohiost.htm

Yesterday, today, tomorrow. The ring will have the traditional Block "O" design and is available in white or yellow gold. It will also be available with or without a semi-precious stone and in 10 kt., 14 kt., or 18 kt. gold. On the inside of the ring, you can have your initials, major, and graduation year engraved.

How firm thy friendship. This will be the only ring that celebrates Ohio State's storied history. It will be a symbolic bond between past, present, and future graduates as it was designed by students past and present. The times change ... but the ring is timeless.

EMP rolls into town to teach songwriting

By Michelle Woodgeard Lantern arts writer

Have you ever been caught singing in the shower? Or have you scribbled song lyrics on napkins while lunching with your friends?

If you answered "yes" to either question, the Experience Music Project's Electric Bus is the place for you, and luckily it will be rolling onto campus Monday.

The 18-wheeler, expands into an interactive museum of eight fold-out tents that will be located on the 17th Avenue mallway next to the Wexner Center. Sponsored in part by the Grammy Foundation and Microsoft Jobs, the bus explores the craft of songwriting with artifacts from the Experience Music Project museum and hands-on workshops.

Kenny Deranleau, tour manager of the "Experience," said although the project is entertaining, the ous provides a learning opportunity for all.

"This is a great way to expose people to music," Deranleau said. "And for adults to expand their musical horizons.'

10,000-square-foot roaming museum approaches the craft of song writing in three areas; origins and impact of song, musical memorabilia and participating in a hands-on experience.

The origins and impact of song craft are probed through graphic and video presentations that cover historical and social movements reflected in songs such as Bob Marley's "Get Up, Stand Up." Straight from Experience Music Project's collection in Seattle, the bus features instruments, handwritten yrics, and musical memorabilia such as scarves and ewelry from artists such as Kurt Cobain, Bob Dylan and Kate Bush.

hand in the bus' interactive Song Lab with microphones, samplers, mixing consoles and keyboards available for visitors to create their own music. In addition to the hands-on experience, songwriting workshops will be held in which visitors can set their lyrics to music.

Aside from visitors who may be beginners in the songwriting field, the bus has attracted some experienced musicians

"We have had Moby, Robin Hitchcock, and Slash visit the bus," Deranleau said.

The New Technology Student Interest Group at Ohio State has worked in part with Microsoft to bring the tour to campus.

Rick Payne, student director of the group, said he is proud to have a hand in supporting the tour at

"Not only will OSU students be able to benefit from the bus, but also local elementary and high school students will be visiting the exhibit," Payne said. "It's a really good event for the community."

"Experience Music Project's co-founders, Paul G. Allen and Jody Patton began the museum to get as many people as possible involved in the music experience, and the Electric Bus is their way to reach out to those who cannot make it to the museum in Seattle," Deranleau said.

He expressed that he hopes the bus' approach will dispel some of the myths that surround songwriting, such as its perceived exclusiveness.

"Anybody can do this, whether or not you become successful, you can continue to write for yourself and your friends," Deranleau said. "Leave your inhibitions behind when you visit the bus.

The Electric Bus exhibit runs from Monday until The songwriting process can be experienced first Thursday and is open 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. daily.

The EMP's Electric Bus is shown expanding into eight fold-out texts which are used to explore many aspects of music. The Bus will be on campus Monday until Thursday.

Immediate Action' tour mixes electronica sounds

By Bridget Dinneen ntern arts writer

The Wexner Center is hosting the Hefty Records "Immediate Action" tour Friday featuring indie electronica bands Slicker, Beneath Autumn Sky, Telefon Tel Aviv, and

One of the benefits of featuring multiple artists in one show is to illustrate the wide variety of sounds that have emerged since electonica's inception including techno, house and ambient. As the artists of Hefty do give nods to their roots, this is not your grandpa's Kraftwerk.

John Hughes, head of Hefty Records, is also the man behind Slicker. Slicker's latest release appropriately titled, "The Latest," is a combination of organic and electronic ele-

Slicker's style is marked by a steady, fairtraditional base beat combined with seemngly random digital sounds, creating an unexpected harmony. Slicker's references to organic elements and life come in many forms. Track one, titled "Hard Track," a human voice is used as percussion along with completely synthetic sounds. The middleeastern sound of "Swap Track" and the reggae influence in "Red Track" give recognition to the diversity of human culture. Many of the songs are non-climactic; they don't bother to build to a crescendo, but rather focus on the fusion of sounds.

While he favors the organic elements, Hughes said there are different ways of producing electronica.

"There are two approaches. Sometimes cold and mechanical works, sometimes a more human approach," Hughes said. "All of it works in different ways.

Beneath Autumn Sky is graffiti artist Smaze and DJ Zane3. Their Hefty debut EP, Enki-dus Mono, has an old-school hip-hop sound, no doubt influenced by their days spent in the back of a dive record shop collecting their favorite sounds from the dusty

The songs have a spooky-surreal quality a bit unnerving, inspiring m rather than relaxation. The intertwining rhythms of rough beat samples fused with traditional instruments like flute and piano are pleasing combinations. The samples seem to have more lyrical meaning; in track three, "A Recollection," the sound of keys opening a heavy door, followed by the sound of children has a narrative quality. After reading the story of Smaze's time in juvenile hall, the song seems to reflect his past experiences. And he's had many experiences. Smaze's self-proclaimed "dirty" style comes from rustic living and rustic equipment. In an interview, he described the making of his previous release, "Midnight Cracker's Fool-

"All pause-button tape samples, a corny keyboard played in real-time, an effects rack and a 4-track. All of it was done while I was living in a very small cabin in the forest. That was fun."

When Zane3 introduced Smaze to the benefits of using a PC to create music, he kept the rustic feel but joined it with a more refined urban technique. This seemingly bipolar approach is fitting for Smaze. Hughes ed as he described the image of Smaze, creating intricate electronic compilations while living in a small cabin with no running water, chopping wood for fire.

"He's the most interesting person I know. hard for most people to understand, but he He's very different," Hughes said.

Telefon Tel Aviv was formed in 1999 by Joshua Eustis and Charles Cooper. "Fahrenheit Fair Enough" marks their first fulllength album after two years spent composing a film score, collaborating on projects with Nine Inch Nails and Slicker, among other projects.

The music is very ambient, relaxing the listener while it evokes images of physical spaces and scenes. Track one, "Fahrenheit Fair Enough," electronically simulates a summer night, complete with frogs and crickets. One can hear evidence of what Eustis calls "found sounds," where the ignored sounds of everyday life, such as a spinning quarter or a clapping hand, are digitally scrutinized and manipulated. Telefon Tel Aviv also incorporates more acoustical elements into their music, making human involvement more evident. High pitched R2D2-like synthesized sounds layered over a slow, fluid base give the music an overall sound more suitable as background music in everyday activities-much like a musical score for life.

Eustis said that electronica is somewhat condensed it into three major components.

"First, electronica is completely melodic." he said. "Melody, overall, that is what our music is about. Two, is the space; it's putting the listener in a different room for each song, it's four-dimensional. The third point is that we are expressionists, not impressionists. To alienate, or go above people's heads - we're not about that.'

Hughes said he would like to overcome the elitist reputation that has plagued electronica. He hopes to attract a wide listening audience by showcasing multiple Hefty artists together in one venue.

"My approach is a little different than other labels — it's unique that we're all coming together," Hughes said. "Hefty is all about co-mingling, like a family, for the greater good.' The Immediate Action tour begins at 9 p.m. tomorrow at the Wexner Center Performance Space. Tickets are $12 for general public, $10 for Wexner Center members and OSU students, and can be purchased at Ticketmaster outlets or at the Wexner Center Ticket Office. For more information on the

Wit, comic banter make 'Bandits' shine

antern staff writer

Busting out of prison in a cement truck, two escaped convicts make their way towards their own paradise, but paradise doesn't come cheap. In order to fund their escape, the duo is forced to return to bank robbers.

Joe Blake and Terry Collins played by Bruce Willis and Billy Bob Thornton respectively) decide to become the "Sleepover Bandits" in order to pay for the life they desire in Mexico. Instead of dealing with alarms at night or customers during the day, the pair will stay the night at the bank managers' homes and accompany them into work the next morning to rob it before anyone else shows up for the day.

Unfortunately for Joe and Terry, no movie crime spree is complete without complications. In a failed carjacking attempt, Terry is struck by the car he's trying to rob, driven by Kate Wheeler (Cate Blanchett). pset with her husband's neglect, Kate refuses to give her car to Terry, but offers to take him to where he is suppose to meet Joe and Joe's cousin Harvey Pollard (played by relative newcomer Troy Garity). To make matters more complex, Joe falls in ove with the woman, which, as anyone who's seen a bank robber movie can say, instantly spells trouble for this dynamic duo.

The recipe for the film is the usual for director Barry Levinson. Take a rather dramatic topic, add a dash of comedy and serve. In the same way "Liberty Heights" dealt with Jewish life, and "Rain Man" looked at autism, "Bandits" takes a look at the mixed up world of crime from the perspective of two bumbling crooks, which Levinson sees as the perfect situation to throw in a one-liner or two.

after breaking out of prison, Joe and Terry rob their first bank, without the aid of weapons or a plan. Armed with only a highlighter, Joe sneaks up behind the bank's security guard and points the marker at the back of his head, ordering the guard to hand over his gun. Grabbing the cash, Joe turns to the guard, hands him the highlighter and quips, "Sir, in case you need to highlight anything."

As most Adam Sandler movies prove, a film cannot sustain itself on comedy alone. The team of Willis, In order to get some quick cash Thornton and Blanchett provide plenty of great acting experience to come across as likable, realistic characters. While Willis and Thornton play off each other beautifully as the comical Joe and the neurotic Terry, it is Cate Blanchett who shines as Kate.

Having already proven herself in both "Elizabeth" and "The Talented Mr. Ripley," Blanchett's performance as the sincere and eccentric Kate, seems to have taken a page from Katharine Hepburn's role as Susan Vance in "Bringing Up

In one of the most surprising roles of the film, Garity comes across like a professional, adding a layer to the relatively thin character Harvey. Having appeared in only a half-dozen films prior to "Bandits," Garity's take on Harvey, the want-to-be stunt man, nears perfection. Garity actually appears to be the sweet, but dim-witted Harvey, who's obsessed with a hitchhiking girl and trying to light himself on fire. An impressive feat for an actor whose only previous Hollywood picture was in a small role as an intern in the unimpressive "Conspiracy Theory."

Although the film may never make a top 100 list, in the lackluster 2001 movie year, the film's quick wit and comic timing makes "Bandits" shine as one of the better films to come from Hollywood this year.

Centre featuring alumnus work

The Lawrence and Lee Theatre Research Institute is turning 50 this year and it is hosting a series of readings to celebrate.

The Institute's first reading in this series, "Sisters: New Work from the International Centre for Women Playwrights," will take place at 4 p.m. today in the OSU Faculty Club and is free.

The Institute is the archive of the International Centre for Women Playwrights, a support group for women playwrights. Alan Woods, the Institute's director, said it had been collecting works by Linda Eisenstin, a Cleveland playwright and past OSU student. The Institute approached her about negotiating the archive for works by members of the International Centre for Women Playwrights.

The International Centre for Women Playwrights holds conferences every other year, provides Web pages for members, hold play-writing contests and acts as a source of personal support for women writing, Woods said.

The Institute was started by a professor of theater who realized there were not enough resources for graduate students to do their papers and research, Woods said. Twenty five or 30 years ago, the Institute began conscientiously collecting materials.

The performance today is a staged reading with no scenery or costumes and consists of a cast of students in the Department of The-

'Private Words' retells hero's story

A public performance of the school touring production, "Private Words: The Hiding of Anne Frank's Diary," by Lesley Ferris, will be at the Roth/Resler Theatre in the Leo Yassenoff Jewish Community Center at 5 and 8 p.m. Sunday

The 40-minute ensemble piece focuses on the moment Anne Frank is arrested and how her story survived through her diary.

The piece is by Ohio State's Lesley Ferris and is directed by Ann Farrelly. Ticket information is available by calling 292-2295.

Hamilton, Monk requested by center

The Wexner Center for the Arts is the first stop for native Columbus artist Ann Hamilton and famed coreographer/composer Meredith Monk's new collaboration Commissioned by The Wexner Center, "mercy" is a critically acclaimed new dance work. The piece begins at 8 p.m. tomorrow at the Thurber Theatre.

Council announces awards deadline

The deadline to enter the Columbus Literary Awards, given to the most outstanding works produced in Franklin County, is 4 p.m. Dec. 28. All entries must be submitted to Thurber House, the overseer of the awards.

The Greater Columbus Arts Council sponsors the Columbus Literary Awards. GCAC is a notfor-profit organization that encourages and supports cultural development in the Columbus area.

Thurber House selects and GCAC approves three nationally known out-of-state judges who choose the winner in each category through an anonymous selection process. Winners are announced in May 2002 and honored at a Thurber House Literary Picnic in Guidelines for entries are available by calling 464-1032 or by visiting www.thurberhouse.org.

Hometown band releases 'HYDE'

Columbus's own Howlin' Maggie is back with a follow-up to its criti-cally acclaimed "Honeysuckle Strange" with the release of "HYDE.

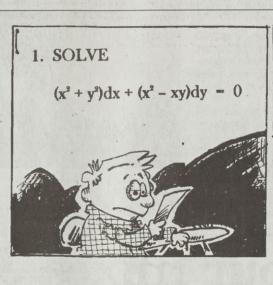

Howlin' Maggie front-man Harold Chichester and his wife Laura have formed their own label, PopFly Music. "HYDE" is the first release off this new label.

"HYDE" is two-and-a-half years in the making and showcases a wide range of subject matter and musical influences.

To celebrate, Howlin' Maggie is performing tomorrow at the New port Music Hall with Shawn Smith and the Jive Turkeys. The show is all ages and begins at 8 p.m. with doors opening at 7 p.m. Tickets are $8 and are available through Ticketmaster or at the door.
