Uncertain finances stall substation

By Elisa Miller Lantern staff writer

Although Ohio State announced its plans to improve student safety by building a police substation near campus in October, little has been done in the seven months that have passed.

After a series of student deaths last spring and summer, OSU offered to help the Columbus Division of Police by building a substation closer to the off-campus residential area, said Barb Seckler, assistant safety director for the City of Columbus.

The fourth precinct substation, where the university and its surrounding residential areas lie, sits at 2637 Deming Ave., near the Arcadia Avenue and Indianola Avenue intersection. The facility is old and has inadequate parking, Seckler said.

"We really appreciate OSU's commitment to provide resources to the police," Seckler said. "We initially were hoping (to start) ... soon after the commitment was made.'

OSU had chosen a potential site for the substation at 66 E.15th Ave. However, because of operational and budgetary concerns and restraints, the site was eliminated a few months ago, said Vernon Baisden, OSU's director of Public Safety.

The offer is not off the table at all," said Bill Hall, vice president of Student Affairs. "It is still an issue alive and well that we continue to explore."

Hall said it is important the police have a more suitable facility and a way to increase police activity in the district.

"We are very excited at the prospect of their offer to do this for us; however, it's not our budget that's going to pay for it," Seckler said. "We certainly want to be cooperative."

Although no timeline was set, OSU and the city are in continuous contact concerning the issue, Seckler said.

"We are continuing to explore other options," Baisden said. "It would be premature to disclose (the alternatives) at this time."

Steve Sterrett, spokesman for Campus Partners, said early in the planning stage of the University Gateway Project, there was discussion about including a police substation in the facility. Although there has not been discussion on it lately, Campus Partners may look at the possibility of a police office, but not a substation, Sterrett said.

Seckler said the substation would be mutually beneficial for OSU and the police, even though they made great progress in improving safety in the area with a "calm football season."

"The police will remain committed to the area," Seckler said. "More police resources go to this neighborhood than any other in the city."

Conference encourages voting

By Robbie Zaremberg Lantern staff writer

Getting the word out to college students to vote and campaign were some of the main topics discussed at Project Democracy's Ohio Conference at the Ohio affect college students. Union Saturday.

'The people who came (Saturday) will take a step forward and mobilize voting on campus," said Kali Kirkendall, student organizer for Ohio State's Project Democracy and a junior in international relations

The day featured presentations about the importance of college students to vote and campaign, as well as to raise awareness of environmental issues.

Lora Wondolowski, New England regional manager for the League of Conservation Voters Education Fund, the organization who hosted the conference, discussed past voting turnouts and why groups of people, including college-age students, do not go to the polls to vote.

Wondolowski has spoken in five other states at college voter training seminars this spring.

'We can turn the elections and make sure our voices are heard," Wondolowski told the students. "By students actively getting involved in voter work, they will get candidates engaged in their issues by just being there, asking questions and showing that people out to vote."

She said if these actions take place, the League of Conservation Voters Education Fund is anticipating the candidates will begin to concentrate on the issues that

Katie Ivancic, a freshman in environmental science, said students who do not have cars and those who live in the residence halls do not have the attitude to vote

"They just don't pay attention to what is going on," Ivancic said. "It's just pure laziness; they don't want to make the effort."

She said if there was transportation provided to the voting polls, polling places situated on north and south campus or at the union would help the voting population on the OSU campus.

In the afternoon, students separated into breakout sessions which focused on various topics, including lobbying elected officials, dealing with the media, canvassing

> A session about working with the media was conducted by Christine Patronik-Holder, a media consultant and former spokeswoman for former Ohio Gov. Richard Celeste. She gave students tips on how to publicize an event to the media for a cause they are supporting. Patronik-Holder gave them a mock story line, and the group had to write a 25-word or less pitch to entice a potential reporter to write a story.

Steven Devor, professor of sport and exercise sciences, recently conducted a study that found that ultrasound therapy does not help heal muscle damage.

Merrick said he disagreed with Devor's characterization.

He said most athletic trainers and physical therapists are clinicians who are not researchers.

"For the most part, they are not going to be able to get up and cite you specific evidence and specific studies," he said. "Instead, they rely on the pretheir courses and in their textbooks."

Devor said using ultrasound should not be viewed as a game.

"If someone gets injured and their doctor sends them to get ultrasound and ultrasound really doesn't do anything, that's a problem," he said.

Just because there is no scientific basis for ultrasound healing skeletal muscle does not mean there is a good reason to eliminate it, Norman said.

'If you're feeling discomfort and you go somewhere and it helps, it has some value. It's providing comfort, but it's not healing," he said.

Merrick said one of ultrasound's most beneficial and well-studied effects involves heating up tissues.

"If I use thermal ultrasound on somebody who has been immobilized in a cast or in a sling for an extended period of time and they have lost motion as a result, ultraponderance of evidence that sound is one of the modalities has been taught to them in that we would use to help restore that motion," Merrick said.

Merrick also said strong evidence suggests that low intensity ultrasound actually increases the rate of bone healing, particularly in hard-to-heal fractures

'A study found that, on the average, ultrasound increased nies to say 'Hmm,'" he said. bone healing time by 64 days, which is pretty dramatic," he said

Devor said insurance companies may re-evaluate ultrasound in reference to studies like his.

"I'm certain that the more research that is done like this will cause insurance compa- thing," he said.

This was Irizarry's second run-in with violence off the field during the 2003-04 academic year. He was charged with three counts of first-degree misdemeanor assault in October. Funded by the W. K. Kellogg Foundation, the theme of this year's conference was "Ohio State — The Twenty-First Century Model for Outreach and Engagement." Although the conference was open to anyone who wanted to attend, the presentations were geared more toward faculty and staff. Every main campus college was represented, and there was at least one representative from the branch campuses as well.

"We really try to foster stronger partnerships between the university and the community," said Karen Bruns, leader of Outreach and Engagement in the office of University Outreach.

"It would be interacting and matching resources that the university has with the needs of the community," said Gail Gunderson, director of Organization and Human Development in the Office of Human Resources.

Along with Garee Earnest, an associate professor in the College of Food, Agricultural and Environmental Sciences, Gunderson was also one of the presenters for the afternoon concurrent session. Hostage in Iraq runs to freedom Army: prison abuse not widespread

By Robert Burns Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A highlevel Army investigation of prisoner interrogation techniques in Iraq has found no evidence that abuse by U.S. military police or intelligence officers is widespread, officials said yesterday. The review continues, however, and the Army has not determined whether all six soldiers charged with abusing Iraqi prisoners will face a military trial.

The investigation, led by officials in the office of the Army's deputy chief of staff for intelligence, is looking broadly at interrogation methods in Iraq. It is not a criminal investigation of the cases that occurred last fall involving the Army Reserve's 372nd Military Police Company, officials said.

Among the most pressing questions is the extent of prisoner abuse and whether it is condoned or encouraged by U.S. military or civilian intelligence officials who have overseen the interrogations.

Brig. Gen. Janis Karpinski, the Army Reserve commander who oversaw the prison system until recently, said in weekend interviews with the New York Times and Washington Post that she knew nothing of the alleged abuse until it was reported. She suggested it may have been encouraged by military intelligence officers, who kept tight control of the cellblock where the abuse occurred.

Attempts to reach Karpinski, who has returned from Iraq, were unsuccessful yesterday. Amnesty International, the London-based human rights group, said it has uncovered a pattern of torture" of Iraqi prisoners by coalition troops. The group called for an independent investigation into the referred to court-martial. The claims of abuse and said it received "scores" of reports of ill treatment of detainees.

Dan Senor, spokesman for the U.S. occupation authority in Baghdad, said the reported abuse is being aggressively investigated by the military.

'Careers will be ended and criminal charges are going to be leveled," he told CNN's "Late Edition."

Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said he was confident that the vast majority of American soldiers involved in the Iraqi prison system are acting properly. He said it was clear from the high-level Army investigation under way that abuse is not widespread.

"There is no, no evidence of systematic abuse in this system at all," including the U.S. military prison system at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, where about 600 suspected terrorists are detained, he said.

"We review all the interrogation methods. Torture is not one of the methods that we're allowed to use and that we use. I mean, it's just not permitted by international law, and we don't use it," Myers said.

The Joint Chiefs chairman said that as soon as the initial allegations came to light, an investigation team was sent to Iraq at the request of Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz. The central focus has been the Abu Ghraib prison west of Baghdad, but Myers recent days, a CIA spokesman said the investigation is looking said Sunday the agency's at prisons throughout Iraq to determine the extent of abusive ing for several months into "a

"The report back is that it is not systematic, but that work is still ongoing," he said.

Of the six soldiers in the 372nd who were charged in March with physical and sexual abuse of 20 prisoners at Abu Ghraib, one has been rest are in various stages of a military proceeding, known as an Article 32 hearing, that will determine whether they face trial.

Two of the five have completed their hearings but no decisions have been made final, one is in the midst of a hearing and the hearings for the two others have been delayed at the request of their defense lawyers, a senior defense official said yesterday, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Senior American officials have taken pains to denounce those responsible for abusing Iraqi prisoners and to stress that they are not representative of the military. Yet widespread publication of graphic photographs of Iraqis being sexually humiliated and abused at Abu Ghraib has caused outrage in the Islamic world and threatens to undermine the U.S. anti-terror campaign.

In Afghanistan, a government official said Sunday that the scandal in Iraq could have serious consequences for the U.S. military and reconstruction effort in his country. "People could start questioning the motivation behind" the U.S. campaign, Foreign Ministry official Omar Samad said.

OUR VIEWS Tressel's recruits

Players charged with robbery

Ohio State athletics and the entire university took another beating this weekend, as running back Ira Guilford and tight end Louis Irizarry were arrested over the suspected robbery of an OSU student early Saturday morning. The alleged robbery took place on the corner of west 19th and College avenues near the north campus dorms, Irizarry pleded guilty to assault and served time in jail in January over an October incident involving an attack on two students and his girlfriend during an argument.

Guilford was banned from playing in the spring game and did not practice at all in spring — however, no reasons for this were ever released from the football program. Guilford has no criminal record, but comments from coach Jim Tressel concerning Guilford's absence from the spring game left open the possibility of academic shortcomings.

These facts put a sour rememberence on a comment made by Tressel in January 2001: "I can assure you that you'll be proud of our young people in the classroom, in the community and especially in 310 days in Ann Arbor.'

It's doubtful the university is proud now.

Nobody can doubt the judgment Tressel has had and the work he has done with OSU players on the field. Two Fiesta Bowl victories in a row - one of which was a national championship — is an undeniably impressive accomplishment

The classroom and the community, however, have remained wanting. Maurice Clarett perpetrated an off-field faux pas, getting into legal troubles concerning inflated insurance claims. After that came Irizarry's assault charge in October, for which he was suspended indefinitely until the situation was cleared up. But the situation was not cleared up during the two arraignments prior to the Fiesta Bowl. Nonetheless, Izirarry played against Kansas State, and only afterwards pleded guilty to the assault charge and served jail time. Now this robbery.

What is worse is that Clarett, Guilford and Irizarry are some of Tressel's first recruits, making his judgment and disciplinary abilities questionable.

A major question most would raise is how much control can a coach have over 100 players compared to a coach with only 12, maybe 14 players (i.e., a basketball coach). And in Tressel's defense, most would say he has less ability to monitor his men simply as a matter of sheer numbers.

But if this is the case, no football coach would ever claim he would be able to perform such feats as raising the graduation rate of his team or keeping his players out of trouble. Tressel, if sincere, made the latter assurance because he believed he had not only the desire, but the ability to improve his players in

Online ratings flawed

Ttudents uneasy and bewildered as they scroll through the Ohio State course offerings to schedule next fall's classes have at least one new tool to help sort things out. Well, sort of.

One in a series of new Web sites, www.ratemyprofessors.com allows students to see student descriptions of 1,432 teachers at the university. (Others such as www.pickaprof.com and www.ratemyteacher.com have sprung up, but do not have ratings for OSU faculty.) The site allows students to rate a professor's easiness, helpfulness, clarity and gives students a chance to post a written evaluation.

How useful the site is may be uncertain. While the webmasters for www.ratemyprofessors.com insist 60 percent of the postings are positive, such a forum seems an easy way for angry students to voice overly critical gibes

The accents of foreign-born professors are often scapegoats for student laziness, and many students make known their anger for a class that might not be anything worse than a little difficult. Students' grades are rarely posted, which skews the opinions submitted.

And though the Web site insists postings should discuss "teaching ability," the site abounds with information that has little to do with education - I recently learned someone had rated my comparative studies adviser, Barry Shank, "hottt." Because his votes in this category were in the plus, a bright red tamale icon was added next to his name.

Even when education is discussed, the erms are unclear. People have a tendency to explain things vaguely — in abstractions - and the students eager enough to write to the website are no exceptions.

teacher. Reading was a *, but they weren't bad texts ... overall a good teacher and a good course."

Others are just as nonsensical.

While the consequences of this rating system will be minimal at best, the implications are not. I felt, at first, that such Web sites — "Where the students do the grading," as www.ratemyprofessors.com boasts — are an interesting development in education.

In the frequently asked questions, there is a question from an imaginary teacher that reads, "I'm a teacher. How do I get my name removed from your site?'

The site's answer is clear: "The longer answer is that this site is for students, and they are rating you every day, whether or not you are listed on this site. Think of this site as an opportunity to hear what your students normally keep secret from you."

It was a little creepy — even Orwellian. But, I thought, it was a little subversive as well - using the tools of the education system on the system itself. A healthy role reversal, where the students have the grade book, the ability to put people under the microscope and the tools to give the administration a little pinch in its backside.

That this has become the logic of higher education is depressing. Compete. Rate. Rank. Repeat as neces-

University life, like the hustling, bustling society in which it is embedded, is a culture of competition — a game, tuned to a fight song, where the spoils go only to the winners. Similarly, the constant psychological rating system that the site's webmasters describe is accurate.

YOUR VIEWS U.S. has harmed more than helped

One year ago, President Bush declared the war in Iraq over and Saddam Hussein's government toppled. Since then U.S. forces were able to successfully find and arrest Hussein and the majority of his autocratic government. Hussein will no longer be able to build prisons where Iraqis will be killed and humiliated simply because they don't share the same political views as his government. Saddam was an evil man, no doubt about that. There are more then 200 mass graves all over Iraq where thousands of civilians have been buried that prove that.

U.S. and British track records, however, in Iraq are not that much different from Hussein's. Recent shocking images from Iraq showed naked Iraqi detainees in U.S. and British custody being tortured, humiliated, raped and in some circumstances, possibly killed. The images depicted hooded detainees begging for mercy as they were battered with rifle butts and batons in the head and groin. They were kicked, stamped and urinated on and had a gun barrel forced into their mouths. In Fallujah, U.S. forces dropped 500 pounds of bombs on Iraqi neighborhoods trying to suppress insurgents fighting U.S. forces. Iraqi newspapers are being shut down just because they don't share the same views of the U.S. and it's occupying partners. While it took Hussein more than 30 years to kill as many as 200,000 Iraqis, the U.S. and it's coalition have killed as many as 10,000 innocent Iraqi civilians within one year alone, and all of this from a military that was supposed to come in and liberate them.

This is not how we win hearts and minds of Iraqi people. Though Hussein's government is no longer in power, little has changed for ordinary Iraqi's since the departure of Hussein.

Hospitals in Iraq still face shortages of basic medicine, and there are still frequent power cuts, sometimes two or three a day. Baghdad's three () waste water plants are currently inoperable, meaning the raw sewage from 3.8 million people flows daily into the Tigris River. The only visible improvement has been to the country's oil refineries. The goal of the Bush administration all along was getting its hands on Iraqi oil and nothing else, leaving the rest of Iraqi infrastructure in ruins.

Bush's mission in Iraq has failed. The U.S. is less safe now than it has been before invading Iraq. Terrorism has spread to all of the surrounding countries of the Middle East region. There are terrorist attacks in Saudi Arabia, Syria and Jordan that target western and foreign institutions almost on a daily basis. Images of recent Iraqi detainees shown on al-Jazeera being tortured and humiliated will continue to fuel resentment more than just play recognition.

This certainly puts doubt over the intelligence of these players, who risked the potential for millions of dollars in future pro contracts for a quick financial gain through criminal means. However, it also hurts the image of the Buckeyes' immaculate leader — Tressel's goals were admirable, but this weekend highlighted a possible weakness in judgment for a person most students thought was perfect.

Problems within U.S. soldiers guilty of Iraqi abuse

As the U.S. military death toll continues to rise in Iraq and scenes of widespread violence become the norm for all media outlets, the American public is left with little uncertainty of who the enemy is. Iraqi guerillas and various anti-American factions have made it no secret U.S troops are at the top of their killing agenda. They are unceasing in their willingness for warfare, committing the worst of crimes against civilians and those trying to restore peace.

But Iraqi's are not the only ones guilty of doing wrong. The U.S. military has again pointed the finger, arresting many Iraqi fighters, without being accountable for its own conduct. New images are starting to emerge showing U.S. soldiers abusing Iraqi war prisoners with the same amount of cruel satisfaction enemy fighters have demonstrated since the war began.

Most war prisoners are kept at Abu Ghraib, a newly transformed prison 20 miles from Baghdad. What once was a place of torture and weekly executions at the hand of Saddam Hussein is now in control by U.S. officials using similar, less severe, military tactics. The most recent picture depicts an Iraqi prisoner standing on a box connected by fake wires, told by American soldiers if he moved he would be electrocuted. Another shows a U.S. soldier standing behind a pile of naked prisoners, arms crossed and smiling. According to the Associated Press, in March six soldiers were charged with physical and sexual abuse of 20 prisoners. And the torture list goes on.

To confront the abuse allegations, a high-level army investigation of prisoner interrogation techniques has been launched. Whether U.S. military or civilian intelligence has condoned or encouraged such behavior is yet to be determined. Brig. Gen. Janis Karpinski, the Army Reserve commander who used to oversee the prison system, said in weekend interviews with the New York Times and The Washington Post she knew nothing about the alleged abuse until reported. While her statement may be true, it does not mean the U.S. military is excused for its behavior. Negligence in the system has allowed for abusive interrogation methods, hurting the reputation of the army even more.

While reports show prison abuse is not widespread, it is still present and reflects poorly on President Bush's anti-terror campaign. His administration may not be able to gain support from the American public, but the troops do. When cases of abuse arise, the integrity of the U.S military is in question. As support for the war continues to decline, internal corruption leads to further distrust of the administration and the capability of its army. If the U.S. can't follow its own rules, how does it expect anyone

However, this tendency is a problem, not a solution. A system that allows students to rate their professors is just playing by the rules. Unfortunately, it just shows how messed up the game really is.

ometimes, it's what you don't see S that generates headlines. Such was the case when WSYX, the Columbus ABC affiliate, did not broadcast Friday's episode of "Nightline," in which Ted Koppel read the names and showed pictures of U.S. soldiers killed in Iraq. WSYX received orders from Sinclair Broadcasting Group, the owner of the local affilliate and six other ABC stations, to preempt Koppel's show because — according to the Sinclair Web site "the action appears to be motivated by a political agenda designed to undermine the efforts of the United States in Iraq.'

Much of the public reaction, which ranged from outcry and protest to agreement and applause, seemed to divide along party lines.

Opponents of President Bush immediately labeled Sinclair's move as partisan censorship and pointed to Sinclair's 2004 political contributions - with 98 percent going to Republicans — as evidence of their political leaning. Bush supporters, on the other hand, agreed with Sinclair's notion that Koppel and "Nightline" were pulling off a giant publicity stunt that not-so-coincidentally occurred in the middle of "sweeps," a period in which television audiences are carefully calculated.

It's no surprise that, for the most part, Democrats and Republicans saw the same situation in different ways. Even the Sept. 11 Commission, which has brought important information to light without being bogged down by obvious political leanings, has generated bipolar responses from media outlets and citizens.

Rather than accepting the depth and breadth of information put forward as a signal there is no clear-cut answer or scapegoat available for one of the darkest days in our history, many seized on one or two pieces of information and used it to bolster their previously held views. In other words, Bush-bashers probably came away from the hearings with a very different impression than those who hope to re-elect Bush in November. Of course, various media outlets were certainly ready with information to reaffirm their leanings as well.

But can such stubbornness ever lead to progress? It's certainly not a new frustration, but during a period of such worldwide tension and uncertainty, it may be time to reconsider the value of spending so much energy competing for access to power in the form of elections.

Rather than always looking backwards in an attempt to dig up skeletons of the past, we should - while certainly acknowledging the past and using it as an important guide — focus on anticipating and planning for a very new and uncertain future.

Whether it's the battle between Bush and Kerry, Bill O'Reilly and Al Franken, or even the state-level, intra-party squabbling between Ohio Speaker Larry Householder and Secretary of State Ken Blackwell, much of what we see looks more like childish bickering rather than service to the citizens. In the face of such antagonism, it's easy to dismiss the entire realm of politics as a media-driven diversion generated to distract us from the very issues at hand.

As a means of ending this downward spiral, the idea of a bipartisan presidential ticket seems particularly appealing. Bush will almost certainly stick with Dick Cheney as a running mate, but John Kerry has yet to pick a vice presidential candidate. While Sen. John McCain, who ran against George W. Bush for the Republican nomination in 2000, has denied he is interested in being Kerry's right-hand man, a Kerry-McCain ticket would be both formidable and ground-breaking in American politics.

McCain's willingness to go across the aisle on issues — he vehemently opposed Sinclairs' preemption of Friday's episode of "Nightline" and has repeatedly criticized the current administration's refusal to send additional troops to Iraq - and his military experience make him an attractive and dynamic candidate.

In this way, it may be possible to override the partisan, dualistic nature of our political system that inherently limits both politicians and citizens to choosing from only two points of view. Instead of continually ranking opposing viewpoints as better or worse, we might instead strive for a place in between that can be considered best.

toward Americans and their occupation of Iraq.

As the insurgency continues to grow, and U.S. and Iraqi casualties continue to mount, the only way out of this conflict is for U.S. forces to withdraw as soon as possible. However hard this transition may become for Iraqi's, the sooner it happens, the better for all.

School's focus not on undergrads

Recently it was announced that Ohio State's Kiplinger Program of Public Affairs Journalism for Mid-Career Journalists is being moved to the new John Glenn Institute. The Kiplinger program is a program for mid-career journalists who want to come back to school and "sharpen their policy skills." I understand that this is a good step toward improving the university's name among the top research and respected graduate journalism programs.

But I find it unfortunate that the university is focusing on this program so much while it let the undergraduate journalism program slowly drift away. It was not long ago that OSU had a respected undergraduate journalism program. Now, unfortunately, it has been reduced to a school within the communications department.

If it wasn't for the good journalism school of the past, this Kiplinger program would not have the prestige and name recognition it does now.

The Kiplinger program was named after W. M. Kiplinger, an () OSU alumnae who pushed journalism forward. Without the journalism school Kiplinger graduated from, the current Kiplinger program may not exist. It seems the administration of this university is more interested in promoting the graduate and research schools of this university and leaving the undergraduate programs to lay stagnant and slip away.

YOUR VIEWS 'Medium' is message of hate

This is my personal confession: I am a Jew. In my short 20 years of life, I have come to feel hatred toward myself and the Jewish people, such as that seen on the cover of The Medium, is inevitable.

For thousands of years, there has been no chance for people like me to escape our Jewish identity. Through several critical junctures in history, including the beginning of the first millennium under Roman rule and Germany during the early 1900s, the Jewish people have attempted to become full members of their surrounding society by adopting secular lifestyles and often abandoning Jewish faith. However, it was proven in each of these situations that the world simply doesn't have a tolerance for people who, by luck of the draw, were born to the Jewish faith. Fred Deutsch was a German man in every sense of the word. The pictures of him in black and white show a man with a happy youth filled with nationalistic emotions famously identified with the citizens of Germany during the first half of the 20th century. Deutsch was as much a German patriot as any other citizen of that nation, and yet he a Jew — was held responsible for the social and economical problems facing the German nation. Deutsch was one of the millions of patriotic, secular German Jews who were carted off to Nazi concentration camps with only one determining fac-their "Jewishness."

My grandfather's experience in Germany is naturally a piece of my identity. It is because of the proximity of the Holocaust to my own life that I identify last week's Medium cover as being its most offensive issue to date. This issue is personally offensive and personally destructive to my identity. But the greater issue on hand is that judging by the commentaries printed in the Daily Targum, a large piece of the American society does not find the hand-drawn image of

Jews being placed in an oven to burn offensive.

There is a problem if people in my shoes who have been handed inheritance of the Jewish religion through birth feel continued persecution is inevitable. But I would argue there is an even bigger problem at hand if the non-Jewish world expects and encourages that hatred enthusiastically. It appears this is the case by the simple fact The Medium published what it did and people have written commentaries in defense of the circulation's actions. At the end of the day, a minority group being harassed has little power to prevent and defend itself — it is the outside world which must speak out. It is the role of University students to now decide together if free speech or the simple act of living a life free from verbal or physical persecution is more essential. The importance of saying "never again" in reference to the Holocaust is of no use to me or the Jewish people, but it is for the entire world to say and embody, because you - every individual — are the ones whom we will all be counting on to speak out when history attempts to repeat itself again.

Fox News presents time bias

This decade we have seen the rise of something different with the Fox News cable network. It was not the first, but it does it best. It does what I call "emo news" — emotionally invested news where the viewers' beliefs are never challenged directly by the newscasts, and objectivity is often thrown out the window.

We've had this sort of show for years. Usually, it's a given that they're not official newscasts, but a single person ranting on about events in the news. Even David Letterman and Jay Leno do a humorous form of this every night, Though usually conservative, the liberal side of "emo news" is coming into its own with Air America Radio, but this won't lend balance to anything.

The problem is most of the Fox News viewers will not listen to Air America Radio, and vice versa. Unless the people in question are already well informed in regard to both sides of the political fence, another source of "emo-news" like Air America will only cater to the portion of the population which feels its political views are not being catered to by the addressed media.

Back in the day there was something called "equal time," where political commentators from both left and right got time on the same newscasts. Stations had to provide more than one point of view .

Unfortunately with Fox News, the left usually doesn't get a voice, and "debates" on shows like The O'Reilly Factor frequently degenerate into one side being shouted down by another. And left-of-center sources often maintain the same attitude of malice toward the government, almost by default.

The problem is no political view is ever 100 percent correct or compatible with the truth. The news should challenge viewers' ideas and perceptions when necessary, not just feed their prejudices.

The problem arises when "emo news" does what is most profitable — provide the viewer with what he or she feels is vital news, and convince viewers they don't need other sources. This makes for great capitalism as the viewer is satisfied — he or she can feel good whenever he or she hear about the resounding victories of "their side," and never hear anything that contradicts what they feel is right.

Given the national nature of news the individual will never find contradictions to what the news reports unless he or she involved in politics directly. News can easily contradict reality but the reverse almost never happens where people see it. The average person has no means to independently verify the news.

So when will responsible news become the norm again? Probably when the contradictions between newscast and reality become so large that there is a backlash by those who are betrayed by it.

Crew gets first point of season in 0-0 snoozefest

By Aaron Stollar Lantern sports writer

This was a game about numbers. There were zero goals and about a half-inch of rain, but the Columbus Crew was able to come up with one point, and — according to coach Greg Andrulis — take one step toward returning to respectability.

The winless and pointless Columbus Crew (0-3-1) drew 0-0 with the Dallas Burn (2-0-2) in front of 13,271 loyal fans who put up with a second-half downpour at Crew Stadium and a game that was dreary even before the rain began lashing down the top of Western Conference while for a header during the first half Saturday. Columbus remains in the cellar of the Eastern Conference, three points behind fourth-place New England.

"I'm awfully pleased to get the point on the road," Dallas coach Colin Clarke said. "I thought we could have gotten more and am a little disappointed not to get the full three."

The Crew has not scored for 330 minutes and three matches. Andrulis was short with the media when asked if he was worried about the continued goal drought. "No," he said. "The goals are going to come.'

Crew forward Jeff Cunningham called

Cunningham continued to beg his teammates for support.

"I'm man enough to say that I need to do better. At the same time I think people are just happy playing 90 minutes and saying that's the end of the day," he said. "I need help to get my job done effectively, which is to score goals. I need help. I don't know where the help is coming from but I need help."

Dallas came close to taking the lead in the match twice.

In first half stoppage time, Burn forward Eddie Johnson headed a corner kick off of the chest of Crew midfielder Kyle Martino. The ball then caromed off the underside of the crossbar and bounced straight down off of Martino's upper arm

Joel Brown did not save his best for last. As the clouds began to roll in, Brown ran faster than any other track and field Buckeye has at the Jesse Owens Classic on Saturday.

Before the Classic was called because of bad weather, Brown carried momentum from a fourth place 100-meter finish into the starting blocks of the 110-meter hurdles. As the gun sounded, the senior accelerated, and despite spiking the first few hurdles of the race it became readily obvious he was blistering the track. But no one could fathom what the stop watches were about to reveal. With his arms pumped in an aura of victory, Brown's time was unveiled: 13.56 seconds, an OSU record.

Because the time was wind-aided, it took careful consideration between officials as to if the record should stand. After deliberation it was decided it would stand, and the time was made permanent in OSU record books.

OSU coach Russ Rogers said the only thing that could dim Brown's performance was fellow senior hur- relay, the Buckeyes took a close third in the 110-meter hurdles.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

The Lantern will not publish illegal advertising or the advertising of illegal products or services. The Lantern reserves the right to reject advertising that denigrates individuals, groups or organizations based on race, gender, nationality, ethnicity, religion, mental or physical capacity, veteran's status, age or sexual orientation. The Lantern Business Manager will refer questionable advertising to the Publications Committee of the School of Journalism and Communication. The committee will recommend a decision on whether to publish the advertising to the Director of the school.

- 1. Complete name, address and telephone number for each advertiser is required.
- Copy must be furnished by noon three days before publication, except for special publications whose deadlines will be announced.
- 3. An advertisement is required to occupy at least as many inches in height as columns in width. Any advertisement exceeding 18 inches in height will be considered a "full column" (21 inches) adver tisement and charged accordingly.
- Make-goods and adjustments will be considered for those advertisements only where errors occur in (a) business or group name, address, or phone number, (b) item price or (c) date, time or place of event. The error must be solely the fault of the Lantern. Adjustments will not exceed the cost of the adver tisement and will be based on the portion of the advertisement nullified by the error. Minor spelling errors will not qualify for adjustment. Complaints must be registered with the Business Manager within 45 days of publication to qualify; otherwise the advertiser accepts full responsibility.
- Guaranteed position is sold at the Business Manager's discretion.
- A composition charge may apply to any changes, revisions or cancellations made after deadline. 6.
- No proof will be furnished for any advertisement received after deadline or for an ad smaller than seven column inches
- If the Lantern finds it necessary to stop contracted advertising because of nonpayment, the adver-8. tising agreement will be violated and the advertiser subject to a "re-bill" fee.
- The Lantern reserves the right to require prepayment for advertising, or to reject advertising, if the 9. advertiser is delinquent in payment, or if the advertiser's credit is impaired. Advertisers must prepay all advertising until a satisfactory credit rating with the Lantern is established. A certified check or money order is required for out-of-town advertisers.
- 10. Contract advertisers will furnish the Lantern with a "rate-holder" ad meeting contract minimums for use in any contract period for which the advertiser does not provide an ad.
- 11. A tearsheet will be furnished for all display advertising run in the Lantern. Additional tearsheets are available (limit 15) provided the advertiser requests them from the Lantern office prior to publication.
- 12. The advertiser agrees to indemnify and hold harmless the Ohio State University, its Board of Trustees and its officers, agents and employees from and against any and all loss, cost and expense, including reasonable attorney fees, resulting from the publication by the Lantern of the advertiser's advertise
- 13. Advertisers in the Lantern agree that they will not represent themselves in any way as being endorsed by the Ohio State University
- 14. A mail-order advertiser is required to submit a sample "proof-of-product" prior to publication.
- 15. Advertisers must request the return of their original ad materials; the Lantern will dispose of such aterials 60 days after their first publication.

how you finish," McCarthy said. McCarthy and Fischer both feel the team's improvements can be linked to the clubs purchase of five racing bikes two years ago. The team purchased the bikes from its club sponsor, BikeSource. The bikes are loaned out to team members who do not have their own racing bikes. The cycling club recruits people from various athletic backgrounds. Many members have mountain biking experience and many have never participated in any type of bike racing until college. By loaning the bikes, it helps train and build the skills of team members, McCarthy said.

"We give them a bike and teach them how to race," said McCarthy. "Those people who started out (using the loaned bikes) have worked up to A-level, or top level racing. We've got a couple wins from these people."

MOVIE REVIEW Comedy stars collide in 'Envy'

By Adam Jardy Lantern sports editor

When one mixes the comedic talent of Jack Black with the onscreen presence of Ben Stiller, a great recipe for cinematic brilliance seemingly exists.

In the new release, "Envy," the two actors lead the way through a plot that is at times gross and dark, but always funny. Black plays Nick, the daydreaming but lovable co-worker, neighbor and best friend of Tim (Stiller). The two live in a neighborhood situated directly under massive power lines and work at a sandpaper factory. Nick is easily distracted and told he needs to be more focused at work, like Tim.

One day Nick gets the idea to create a spray to get rid of dog feces. He even gives it a name -Vapoorize, with the word 'poo' underlined. Despite Tim's objections, Nick begins working on the product and, eventually, succeeds. Tim stares in disbelief as he realizes that his "unfocused" friend is about to become insanely rich, and Tim passed on his chance to join with Nick.

Nick becomes famous and builds a mansion directly across the street from Tim. The two remain friends, and Nick frequently buys presents for Tim, whose wife is not-too-secretly disgusted with his failure to see the genius of Nick's idea. She takes their children and moves in with her sister.

While they are gone, Nick loses his patience at his boss at work and gets himself fired. Dejected, he ends up sitting in a bar and drinking with a local known as the J-Man (played superbly by Christopher Walken), who convinces him that he needs to gain some revenge on his best friend.

That night, in a drunken stupor, he accidentally kills Nick's beautiful white horse and, horrified, buries it in his back yard.

The envy growing in Tim's heart becomes more evident as the onscreen more. Walken dressed movie goes along. When Nick proposes they become partners and split the money 50/50, Tim somewhat reluctantly agrees. The movie is how well all the sec- hard, especially when Walken pressure to confide in his friend about what happened to his horse at the end. The only thing that continues to increase, while the J- remains unresolved is the one Man starts trying to blackmail Tim by threatening to tell Nick about how his horse died.

Black continues to prove he belongs on the big screen with his performance as Nick. While his acting occasionally comes across a little forced, he still ably manages to portray a true-blue best friend who refuses to let money go to his head. Across the street, Stiller seems to not have to act very hard to play his character. The role of Tim seems to have been written specifically for him.

The only actor to upstage Black is Walken. There is no better actor available to play a crazy man, and this comes across perfectly throughout the movie. As far as secondary characters go, this is one that yviewers will find themselves wishing was as a crazy ragged bum is a sight that is very difficult to forget.

question that every character seems to ask at some point throughout the movie: Where does the poop go?

ARTS

One less appealing aspect of the movie is the relationship between Tim and his wife, Debbie (played by Rachel Weisz of "The Mummy"). Their relationship becomes more and more strained because she holds a grudge against Tim for not investing in Nick's idea when it was being developed all is reconciled when the friends become partners and Tim gets rich. This goes directly against the main point of the movie, which seems to be that money isn't as important as people can make it out to

Despite this contradiction, the movie flows well as a whole and withholds key plot resolutions until the very end. 'Envy" won't make anyone The best part about this think hard, but everyone laugh
