'We've had over 20 arrests of the 60 to 80 (criminals) that we've identified that we want to go after," Mull said.

Arrests are not the only way to measure the success of

"On many levels this will be a success because we're working with other agencies and sharing information to develop arrests, Mull said. "We're trying to keep the worst criminals off the street and also letting criminals at all levels know that we're around and coming after them.'

The police will not know for some time the number of successful arrests or how the team's presence has lowered Columbus' crime rate.

"We really won't know how successful the team has been until all the court cases have gone all the way through - that's when you'll see the changes in the crime statistics," said Patrick Berarducci, a senior special agent with the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives.

Franklin County Prosecutor Ron O'Brien said his office will adopt federal prosecution for more local gun cases when the federal punishment is more severe than what they would receive in state court.

Initially the Violent Crime Impact Team was to start in June and finish after its six month anniversary at the end of November. Berarducci said that because of the team's success, no decision has been made on whether the team will disband at the end of November.

Mull also believes that this collaboration will continue past November but realizes that this November's election has a big impact on whether the team will remain intact.

The Violent Crime Impact Team was started by the Bush Administration's attorney general, John Ashcroft, and a change in administration could mean the end of the Violent Crime Impact Teams in 15 cities across the nation.

Decline in manufacturing produces service-based economy

Adam Cook Lantern staff writer

During the last 50 years, Ohio's manufacturing jobs have declined significantly. A new study concludes that globalizahave little to do with the decline — the real culprit is labor-saving technology.

Eric Fisher, associate professor of economics at Ohio State, said in a commentary published this month that U.S. economic activity in manufacturing is not declining, but its share of employment is — from 25 percent in 1960 to 12.5 percent in 2002 because of laborsaving technology.

Foreign competition and state taxes have some impact on the decline of posable incomes have led to a higher our history," said Amy Hanauer, execumanufacturing jobs, but "it's small potatoes,"Fisher said.

Fisher said all developed countries are moving toward a service-based economy.

"It's just natural," Fisher said. "Onetion and variations in state tax polices hundred years ago, people were employed in agriculture — and then 50 years ago it was manufacturing and now they're employed in the service sector. That is where we're going and where we've been going for the last 50 years."

The U.S. economy has grown on average 2 percent a year in the last half century, Fisher said. Fisher said advances in labor-saving technology are driving economic growth. Increases in productivity demand of services. "The source of prosperity is innovation in technology," Fisher said. His findings stand in contrast to the assumption that a country's living standard can only increase with an increase in manufacturing jobs.

'Manufacturing is a key component of Ohio's economy and will continue to be, but it will be in more of a maintenance and high-tech role than of manual skill," said Dennis Evans, spokesman for the Ohio Department of Jobs and Family Services. "There is less of a need for workers because you can do more with less.

These maps were then used by scientists and engineers to direct the rovers.

According to the OSU research team, their software corrected the estimated position of the rovers by as much as 13 percent in the case of opportunity.

Mars' loose sandy surface poses a problem for the rovers onboard odometers, which can be inaccurate because of slippage, a term used when a rovers' wheels spin through the soil without moving the robot.

Li, described by his students and colleague as a strict and capable man who gives good advice, realized rover navigation could be improved in 1997 when he watched the Mars Pathfinder rover exploration on television. He contacted NASA with a proposal and was selected as one of 28 participating scientists.

OSU vehicle gets national speed record

By Beth Knieriemen Lantern staff writer

The Buckeye Bullet is on its way home from the Bonneville Salt Flats in Utah after attempting to break its own national speed record. Last week's annual Speed Week saw Ohio State students trying to surpass their old mark of 257 mph.

Driven by Roger Schroer, the machine reached speeds of 308.317 mph in a qualifying timed mile on Aug. 16, which is the fastest-timed mile ever recorded.

After its 300 mph first run, the Bullet encountered a mechanical problem. The differential was in need of a replacement and the part had to be shipped in from the United Kingdom, adviser Giorgio Rizzoni said. The malfunction forced the crew to end the run.

Rizzoni said the Bullet is one according to the FIA Web site. of only 54 other vehicles to break the 300 mph barrier and the firstever electric vehicle to do so.

"For the first time ever in history, someone in an electric automobile went over 300 miles per hour," Rizzoni said. "That someone was from Ohio State University."

The car is built and maintained by a team of graduate and undergraduate students in engineering. The all-electric vehicle is 31 feet long, two feet tall and 30 inches wide.

October will bring another challenge for the Bullet when the team will travel back to Bonneville and attempt to break the world speed record at the World Finals. OSLO, Norway - The brazen daylight theft of Edvard Munch's renowned masterpiece "The Scream" left Norway police scrambling for clues and stirred a debate across Europe about how to protect art if thieves are willing to use deadly force to take it.

Some expressed fears that works of art are in increasing danger from violent raids unless, as Norway deputy culture minister put it, "We lock them in a mountain bunker."

Overtime rules

Enacted changes lack clarity

The Federal Department of Labor enacted new rules yesterday on overtime pay — the first major changes in the laws governing overtime in more than 50 years. Designed in part to help simplify the rules, it has instead led to a great deal of confusion as to which jobs are still eligible for overtime and why certain jobs can be eligible.

According to the department of labor's Web site, the new "FairPay" rules will guarantee overtime protection to employees making less than $455 a week, or $23,660 a year. This extends overtime rights to 6.7 million workers by nearly tripling the minimum salary required to qualify for mandatory overtime. The rules include 1.3 million lowwage workers who had been previously denied overtime benefits under the old statutes. However, the new rules have the potential to strip the right to overtime pay from nearly as many workers. White-collar employees earning more than $100,000 are automatically exempt from mandatory overtime benefits. The new rules also changed the definition of what jobs qualified as "administrative," "executive" or "professional" jobs — all jobs which are ineligible for overtime. Jobs potentially exempt from overtime benefits under the new statutes include graphic artists, pharmacists, chefs, funeral directors, computer system analysts, programmers and software engineers. Jobs classified as "blue-collar" police, fire department members, paramedics and other first responder jobs still keep their eligibility for Estimates as to how many employees will be affected vary wildly, from 107,000 by the Labor Department to six million by labor group AFL-CIO. According to a briefing paper on the AFL-CIO's Web site, reclassifying employees as administrative, executive and professional or raising their pay above the minimum salary could remove overtime rights from these employees.

For example, employers could choose to classify 900,000 employees without college degrees as "professional employees," 130,000 chefs and sous chefs as learned and creative professionals, and nearly 2.3 million line or production leaders as adminstrative employees, thus removing their rights to overtime. Switching employees from hourly pay to a set salary - which automatically exempts employees from overtime requirements - can also be used to get around the rules.

Because the regulations are still vague, employers will likely take advantage of any loopholes left available by the department of labor. Although their attempts to open up more jobs to overtime protection are admirable, the changes made to other aspects of the law have done little to clarify overtime law and will threaten many employees' rights to be paid fairly for their work after hours.

Swift Boat sunk

Anti-Kerry ad taken off air

A 60-second TV ad by the Swift Boat Veterans for Truth, which aired in a few markets in Ohio, West Virginia and Wisconsin, featured Vietnam veterans who accused Democratic presidential nominee John Kerry of lying about his decorated Vietnam War record and betraying his fellow veterans by later opposing the war. The ad is no longer

"When the chips were down, you could not count on John Kerry," one of the veterans, Larry Thurlow, said in the ad.

Thurlow did not serve on Kerry's Swift Boat but said he witnessed the events that led to Kerry winning a Bronze Star and the last of his three Purple Hearts. Kerry's crewmates support the candidate and call him a hero.

The Kerry campaign has condemned the Swift Boat Veterans for Truth, announcing that none of the men in the ad served on the boat that Kerry commanded. Three veterans on Kerry's boat on the day in question — Jim Rassmann (who says Kerry saved his life), Gene Thorson and Del Sandusky (the driver on Kerry's boat) — said the group was lying.

They say Kerry was injured, and Rassmann called the group's account "pure fabrication."

The general counsel for the Kerry campaign and the Democratic National Committee sent television stations a letter asking them not to run the ad since it is "an inflammatory, outrageous lie" by people claiming to have served with Kerry.

Hoffmann said none of the 13 veterans in the commercial served on Kerry's boat, but rather were in other Swift Boats within 50 yards of Kerry's. The group claims that there was no gunfire on the day Kerry pulled Rassmann from a muddy river in the Mekong Delta and that Kerry's arm was not wounded, as he has claimed.

Investigations by the Washington Post and The Chicago Tribune supported Kerry's claims that the group is not telling the truth. President Bush has said that Kerry served honorably in Vietnam and that his record should make him proud, which also contradicts the anti-Kerry ads.

Last week Democrats and Republicans alike called for Bush to decry the ad.

Yesterday Bush criticized the ad, saying that it and all ads like it by independent groups should be terminated. Bush ought to be acclaimed for his denouncement, but it might have come sooner.

Still, it is comforting to know that in the midst of all the mudslinging during a major election, both sides can step back and renounce unfounded criticism on a candidate.

Way to take the high road, President Bush. And thanks for your service, Sen. Kerry.

Reader working for more OSU diversity

My name is Agnes Igodan and I am a member of African Youth League, an African Awareness Organization on campus. This summer I attended The LeaderShape Institute in Wooster, Ohio with about 56 current OSU students.

"The LeaderShape Institute is an intensive, energizing and unique six-day educational experience designed to develop young adults to lead with integrity. At the LeaderShape Institute, participants create a LeaderShape Project to work on when they leave. The objective of each participant's project is to create an extraordinary improvement in his or her organization or community during the next nine to 12 months. The Institute develops participants to effectively implement their project," according to the organization.

Now why I am telling this? Well, my week spent at Wooster involves you, the Buckeyes. All the participants at LeaderShape '04 were challenged to develop a Breakthrough Blueprint (a vision) during the

My vision was to increase awareness of all cultural organizations to students on the main campus. By doing this I hope to create a coalition where all the cultural organizations on campus could help each other with different events or issues that they wish to discuss. I have this vision because I realize that some cultural groups on campus, especially the smaller groups, really need support and can't get it.

Are we really diverse? Ohio State has such a diverse campus in Columbus, but often times I see people that still surround themselves with their own ethnic group. I believe we as a community can step outside our comfort zones and learn to meet other people.

My brother once said, "Where else will you find a Chinese, a Ghanaian, an Australian, a Taiwanese, a Malaysian, etc. leaving/learning in the same institution together?"

At OSU we have this diversity, and I encourage every one of you to go out, embrace and explore the uniqueness of students around you. By forming this coalition/large network on campus, cultural organizations are able to build close relationships within themselves, and diversify the OSU campus. I have already shared my vision with President Holbrook and she was glad of my goal to "coordinate activities among the various cultural organizations.'

I plan to visit different cultural organizations during their meetings in the fall to share my vision with them. If anyone has any suggestions for me, feel free to e-mail me.

I am dismayed that animals are often tortured unnecessarily, ostensibly to improve the human condition. My belief is that such actions end up making our condition worse. We become skilled at mental gymnastics to convince ourselves that dozens of painfully de-beaked chickens crammed in a cage for their short lives is moral; that lagoons filled with pig excrement is OK for our environment and the humans subjected to certain fumes, as reported by CBS News, is fine; that bulls unable to walk because of disease ending up as USDA Prime beef is business-asusual; that genetically altering turkeys so that their breasts grow so enormous, causing their legs to break under them, is compassionate stewardship of non-human animals; that chemically inducing lactation in dairy cows and keeping them hooked up to pumping machines is worthy of us.

Additionally, the people we pay to do our collective."dirty work" suffer as well. Pigs scream when they feel pain, and animals other than our pets have and show emotions. How have we convinced ourselves that the psyches of those peopl admininstering the pain don't suffer? And what outlet might they seek for their pain?

Well, the streak lives on even though it is not accomplishing too much right now.

The Crew extended their unbeaten streak to nine games with a 2-2 tie against Eastern Conference rival D.C United but had a good opportunity to win. In the 75th minute a handball by the Crew's Frankie Hejduk was called, resulting in a converted penalty kick that gave D.C. United the point on the road.

United midfielder Dema Kovalenko's cross definitely contacted Hejduk's arm, the only questions in referee Marcel Yonan's mind were whether the Crew gained an advantage by the handball and whether Hejduk did it intentionally. Yonan immediately called the foul and ran to the penalty spot but did not give a yellow card to Hejduk, likely acknowledging that he did not do it intentionally. Nevertheless, D.C. forward Jaime Moreno hammered the penalty high into the roof of the net and D.C. moved into sole possession of third place in the conference.

"It was an unintentional handball," Hejduk said. "What do you call there? What can you do? You can't do anything about Buckeye end injured in fight outside bar in W. Va.

Redgie Arden involved in fight outside bar near

By Aaron Stollar Lantern sports editor

Ohio State football player Redgie Arden was released from a Huntington, W. Va., hospital Monday after being involved in a fight outside a bar. The fight also included Marshall University football player Jonathan Goddard, who was charged with hitting a police officer.

Arden, a 22-year-old redshirt junior defensive end from Ironton, Ohio suffered a broken nose and severe swelling on the right side of his face according to WSAZ-TV in Huntington.

Marshall defensive end Jonathan Goddard was arrested early Sunday morning and later released on a personal recognizance bond, according to The Associated Press.

Goddard has not been charged with regards to Arden's injuries. An OSU athletic department 11 games that season.

Marshall University went after the victim because he had hit a Marshall University football player," the police report acquired by the A.P. said. However, none of the Marshall players at the scene when police arrived reported being hit. "Coach Pruett is taking this matter very seriously, and handling it accordingly after our investigation concludes," said Randy Burnside, a Marshall spokesman.

Arden told the police that he was attacked because he was an OSU player, according to the A.P.

Arden, a criminology major, played three different positions for the Buckeyes last season before landing at defensive end. He played seven minutes in seven games last season.

Arden was sentenced to three days in jail in 2002 after pleading guilty to driving under the influence in Ironton. OSU suspended him from summer practice but, he was later allowed back to the team and played in

Kearns to rejoin Reds for tonight

CINCINNATI (AP) — The last two seasons have been a nightmare of injuries for Reds outfielder Austin Kearns.

Kearns missed half the season in -2003 because of a shoulder injury, and this year he has been on the disabled list twice.

On Tuesday the Reds could bring Kearns off the 60day DL and restore him to the active roster. Or he could remain on the DL, depending on the results of a medical examination.

But his injury rehabilitation assignment is over, so he will not be sent back to Triple-A Louisville. Baseball's collective bargaining agreement limits rehabilitation assignments for position players to 20 days, and that period expired Sunday for Kearns.

"Our intent is that he comes to Cincinnati and that he is activated on Tuesday, barring some unforeseen setback," Reds general manager Dan O'Brien said.

Gallery V in the Short North is presenting a new drawing and photography exhibit featured through Aug. 28. The exhibition showcases the works of Hiroshi Hayakawa and the late Paul-Henri Bourguignon, McMillian of Cleveland.

The display features the photography work of Hayakawa and McMillian and the drawings of Bourguignon. A total of 25 pieces align the walls of the gallery.

"Each piece of artwork is black and white - not a lot of color is involved," said Lynne Muskoff, gallery director. "We felt that the large collection of Bourguignon's drawings truly works well with the photographs of the other featured

Dry humor, emotion found in 'Garden State'

By Eric Atienza Lantern arts writer

Zach Braff, whom some will know from his role as Dr. J.D. Dorian on the NBC sitcom "Scrubs," stars in his theatrical writing and directorial debut, "Garden State," which opened last weekend.

The film is about a low-level TV actor who must return home for his mother's funeral. Upon returning he comes face to face with old friends, old memories and past demons - and he meets one woman who changes his life forever.

Braff plays the lead as Andrew "Large" Largeman, a struggling actor whose claim to fame is playing a mentally handicapped quarterback on a TV special. Since he was a teenager, his father — also his psychiatrist - kept him medicated on several different types of anti-depressants that kept him from feeling any emotions, even at his own mother's funeral.

Braff plays the perfect zoned out, jaded prodigal son coming back to find his home town and his old time friends exactly as they were when he left nine years prior.

He is tired of the drunken, drugged-up parties and wild abandon in which his high school friends still engage. He is seemingly detached from everything and just looking for something undiscovered or untouched.

He finds what he is looking for in Natalie Portman's Sam, an epileptic pathological liar whose zeal for life inspires and changes the way Large acts, thinks and experiences the world. Portman is fantastic and band trying various styles and seeing what works. "As that happens, changes are just intrinsic with time," he said.

The final piece came when the band started working with Pop Rocks management company, Patrick said. With the production of Pop Rocks the band began to work toward a more focused sound that harnessed all of its member's strengths.

The band is currently touring the Midwest in sup-port of its new four-song, self-titled EP. The tracks on this release represent a change in the band's style, defining itself and giving it a rock edge, Patrick said. All four songs on the EP will also be on the record the band will release this spring.

"With this record, more than any other, we are specifically making sure the songs have some intrinsic value," Patrick said. Mike Farley, the band's publicist and long-time friend, said Oval Opus' biggest strength is their live show. "These guys have a magic about them, especially live, he said. "They're especially explosive on stage." The band has opened for national acts such as O.A.R., Sister Hazel, Jason Mraz, Maroon 5 and Vertical Horizon.

Last year the band released a live album to bring its live energy to listeners who have not had a chance to see the band.
