In a time of budget cuts and budget crunches, Ohio State's student-run radio station, The Underground, was looking to get by with a little help from an unlikely source.

"We knew that other schools like Northwestern did the same thing, so we asked the athletic department," said Aaron Stollar, sports director for The Under-

ALEXANDRIA, Va. - The only U.S. prosecution arising from the Sept. 11 attacks was dealt a severe setback yesterday when a judge prohibited prosecutors from seeking to execute Zacarias Moussaoui and barred any trial evidence linking the al-Qaida loyalist to the terrorist strikes.

U.S. District Judge Leonie Brinkema handed down the sanctions in response to the government's refusal to obey her orders granting Mous-saoui access to three al-Qaida prisoners. He contends they would testify he not involved in the Sept. 11 attacks.

After Brinkema's decision, U.S. Attorney Paul McNulty said in a statement, "The interests of justice require that the government have the opportunity to prove the full scope of the conspiracy alleged in the indictment, which included the brutal attacks on Sept. 11, 2001."

The trial of Moussaoui has been delayed by the unprecedented legal dispute over his access to President Karen Holbrook was among the six people donning scarlet hard hats for the groundbreaking of the University Medical Center Biomedical Research Tower yesterday on 12th Avenue.

As a former biomedical scientist, Holbrook understands the impact the new building will have on both Ohio State and the Columbus community.

"There is no other area as important as biomedical research," Holbrook said. "It touches every one of us.'

The $151 million tower will nearly double the amount of biomedical research space on campus with 372,000 square feet of laboratories, which were designed with the help of researchers.

Fire Prevention Week to offer free food, info

Ohio State's Student Affairs will kickoff National Fire Prevention Week tomorrow, with free food, fire education and give-

Firefighters from Engine-7, Medic-7 and Ladder-13 of the Columbus Division of Fire will attend the event from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. at Summit United Methodist Church located on 82 E. 16th Ave.

"About eight to 10 firefighters will be passing out information about fire safety," said Kelly McGuire, a spokeswoman for the Columbus Division of Fire.

The OSU Medical Center's Burn Unit, University Security and Fire Prevention Services and Siemens Fire Safety have teamed up with Student Affairs to provide free hot dogs, chips and drinks, in addition to batteries, literature and Smoke-n-ator Fans.

"Smoke-n-ator Fans are hand-held fans that are used to blow the smoke away from (an activated) detector," said Robert Barnett, assistant director for risk assessment in Student Affairs. He said students should utilize the fans when a smoke alarm is accidentally activated, rather than removing the batteries from the detector.

"We're targeting off-campus students," Barnett said. "We want the message to get out to everybody, but the folks in off-campus housing are more at risk."

Most students believe smoke from a fire would wake them up during the night, when actually the carbon monoxide may entice the student to sleep more, he said.

"Our goal is to make students realize how important smoke detectors are," he said. "Smoke won't wake the students up, but a detector would."

Donations will be added to Engine-7's fund for the purchase of a thermal imaging camera.

"Engine-7 is the first to respond to the campus area," Barnett said. "The camera will enable them to see through smoke and assist them in rescues."

The Greek community has largely contributed to the fund, raising money through pancake breakfasts.

They've raised $4,000," McGuire said. The Columbus Division of Fire purchased a camera for $13,600 in 2000, so it may cost close to $15,000 today, she said.

Weinland was chosen for its high rate of assault, auto theft and other major serious crimes, Coleman said. During the period between July 18 and Sept. 30, the police had helped lower the crime statistics by 29 percent. Police officers had also made 20 felony arrests and 26 suspect arrests.

In Clintonville, the police focused on the recent rash of burglaries and auto thefts, the mayor said. However, by the end of the summer months, the burglaries had been reduced by 53 percent.

The Fisher College of Business kicked off its fifth annual privacy conference on Wednesday with a keynote speech from Peter Cullen, of Microsoft.

Cullen, the Chief Privacy Strategist for the Microsoft Corp., started his speech by recognizing that trust is a key in any businesscustomer relationship. He said trust is a product of three things value, security, and privacy. In order to attract customers, a company must meet all three of these requirements, he said.

A good portion of today's business world is run through e-commerce, which magnifies the need for privacy even more.

'One common concern is (cusor used inappropriately, especially by hackers. It is estimated that 60 percent of a person's e-mail is spam" Cullen said. It is things

The speech was closed by going over some of the future problems that face e-commerce, including the customers' own unsafe computing habits and where the customers' privacy begins and ends. He rounded up his speech with the phrase "privacy is an enormous business opportunity."

Amy Myers, a recent OSU graduate who now works at a local bank, said Cullen's speech made her realize that her employer might need to reconsider who they let handle their customers' personal information.

Brinkema was responding to government defiance of her rulings in January and August, which granted Moussaoui the right to question the prisoners through a satellite connection. Their testimony also could have been used during his trial.

Frank Dunham Jr., one of the court-appointed lawyers representing Moussaoui's interests while he serves as his own lawyer, issued a statement that said the government is now relieved of a major burden.

The government has said before the dispute that access to these witnesses put it to a ... choice of compromising national security or allowing an accused terrorist to go free. Today's opinion allows the government to avoid that dilemma entirely.

In barring the Sept. 11 evidence, Brinkema said the government could still obtain a conviction by proving that Moussaoui was part of al-Qaida conspiracy that did not involve the 2001

Blinded by Iraq

The U.S. is missing the point

For years, governments across the world have believed the North Korean government has increased its cache of nuclear weapons. A definitive answer came yesterday when its communist government announced that that it is using plutonium from spent nuclear fuel rods to make

North Korea's announcement comes on the heels of a continuing debate about Iran's nuclear program. The Iranian government believes it has the right to develop its nuclear program, which it says is not being used for building nuclear weapons. Foreign Minister Kamal Kharrazi said Wednesday that Iran's nuclear program does not want to face scrutiny from the United Nation's Security Council. Iran has until Oct. 31 to prove to the International Atomic Energy Agency, a watchdog of the UN, that the country is not using its nuclear program for weapons

Virtually silent in both of these developing matters has been the United States and President George W. Bush. Aside from short comments during daily Pentagon briefings, the Defense Department has been more focused, and perhaps rightly so, on the continuing conflict in Iraq. Unlike the Iraqi issue, the US seems to be following right in line with the UN and is willing to accept any decision it

Perhaps it is now time for Bush and the rest of his cabinet to begin changing a portion of their focus to the two developing nuclear programs - most notably North Korea. Iran seems to be willing to fully cooperate with the UN, but until the day comes when Iran can show full proof it is not producing nuclear weapons, at least one eye of the US should be on the Iraqi neighbors.

Even a greater threat than Iran is North Korea. In the statement released yesterday, the North Koreans accused the United States of taking a "hostile policy" towards the communist North, which signaled the "switchover in the use of plutonium ... in the direction (of) increasing its nuclear deterrent force."

The North Korea-U.S. relations have already been strained and yesterday's announcement could cause even greater tension between the two. U.S. intelligence analysts believe North Korea may already have three to six nuclear weapons instead of the one or two originally thought. While North Korea has said it would give up its nuclear program only if the US signs a non-aggression treaty, provides economic aid and opens diplomatic ties, yesterday's announcement can be considered one of the most alarming to date.

While the US continues its search for weapons of mass destruction in Iraq, the search should now expand to countries like Iran and North Korea. A full-out invasion is not the answer, but the U.S.'s Iraqi tunnel vision is making it miss a bigger threat.

Tuition gamble Slots scholarship will help

Proposed by Sen. Louis Blessing, R-Cincinnati, Ohio Senate Bill 99 would allow the legalization of video slot machines in exchange for scholarship money. The proposed amendment would permit nearly 2,500 slot machines to be installed in each of Ohio's seven racetracks. Estimates for revenue range from $370 to $740 million with 60 percent of the profits earmarked for current and future high school seniors to use toward their first year of college.

SB 99 would give up to $5,000 to all high school seniors that have a 3.0 cumulative grade point average and have completed all their graduation requirements. The program would be similar to Georgia's HOPE scholarship. Georgia's program provides students with a "B-average," tuition, mandatory fees and book allowances for its state's public institutions while giving state's private school students $4,045. Though this program appears to be successful, not all Ohioians are convinced this is a winwin situation.

If Ohio's taxpayers are not willing to ante up when it comes to higher education, gamblers will. The proposed revenue increase would greatly assist Ohio schools retain Ohio's smartest students, help lessen their future debt, while serving as a reward for students with in sight of a 3.0 GPA to strive to do better.

Proponents claim money gambled at future Ohio slot machines is money that is otherwise flowing into the casinos and budgets of neighboring states. Opponents counter though, claiming that the majority of casino visitors live within 35 miles, hurting families, tempting addicted gamblers and attracting low-income residents. In addition to these concerns, many see this as a ploy to increase patronage at Ohio's horse tracks, which have experienced a decline in recent years. At least 40 percent of the profits from slots would go to the owners of the

Though the methods seem contradictory, most Ohio students still need money for school. SB 99 will only be available to Ohio's seniors starting with the class of 2004. To date, the scholarship outlined in SB 99 is nonrenewable, but does offer a start to future college students. All it needs is to address those struggling to pay for olitical activism is the lifeblood of our republic. Many great societal victories have stemmed from the energy and involvement of ordinary citizens who have harnessed their creativity and pursued their convictions. The imagination and idealism of just a few good people with strong principles has lead to tremendous shifts in both the mode of thinking in our world and the way our world functions. No single group has been more successful or more vital to the overall success of numerous movements than young people.

Whether one examines the American Revolution, the slavery abolitionist movement, the labor movement, the women's rights movement, the civil rights movement, or the anti-Vietnam war movement, there can always be found a connection to grassroots citizen activism. Although there were political leaders who were on the right side of history in fighting for these causes, the most significant impact came from the ordinary people who were willing to stand up and fight for change. No citizens have had more energy or more of an idealistic moral drive than students.

It is the spirit of direct action that must similarly motivate college students to be involved in politics today, be it through a campus political party organization, an issue advocacy group, or student government. As college students we are indeed the architects of the future of our world. The choices and decisions we make, the battles we fight and the causes we are willing to rally behind will define our generation.

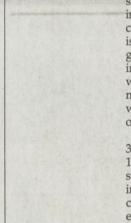

There is a serious problem when only 32.3 percent of people between the ages of 18-24 voted in the 2000 election, and student organizations must lead the way in raising these dismal numbers on our campus. Students of all stripes must engage their friends and classmates in a dialogue about what elections mean to our future. There can be no more talk about voting not making a difference, the lesser of two evils, or why one vote cannot change the outcome of an election. It is the mass apathy of people of all ages that has created what some students may see as an unsatisfactory political climate. Our political system and the people who serve in public office reflect who we are as a nation and the choices we have made (or chose not to make) as voting age

It is estimated that there are "nearly 10 million college students," in the United States. Although it is likely that college students have a slightly better voter turn out than the overall average of 18-24 year olds, it can still be estimated that roughly 6,770,000 college students alone did not vote in the 2000 presidential election. This was an election that was decided nationwide by 543,895 votes, in Ohio by 165,019 votes, and in Florida by just 537 votes. We had the power to change this outcome.

The people who are elected to office determine our nation's priorities. Will our tuition go up? Will our parents be able to have a secure retirement? Will we shake our dependency on oil during our lifetime? Will we find a way to cure major diseases that plague humanity? Will we be able to find quality jobs when we graduate? We may not vote in the halls of Congress, but our actions (or inaction) determine who will. and how these issues will be addressed. It is vital that every student understands what he or she believes in and gets active right here on campus.

As Robert F. Kennedy once said, "Few will have the greatness to bend history itself, but each of us can work to change a small portion of events, and in the total of all those acts will be written the history of this generation. It is from numberless diverse acts of courage and belief that human history is shaped."

Shady support for Iraq

Tt's one of those problems —you know—where the clues are so Lobvious, most people can't even see it. We sit in our living rooms watching the evening news, engulfing the information with our eyes and ears, but we do not know exactly what the information means.

Individuals, however, only need to follow the money trail before they notice the shady actions of our nation's administration. President Bush keeps urging Congress to help pay $87 billion in the reconstruction of Iraq.

But many are questioning whether the money will end up in Iraq's economy, or if it will actually show up in the pockets of the White House administrators. It seems White House officials, including the vice president himself, have made sure to profit off of the Iraqi war.

Within the last few months, a number of firms, including companies such as New Bridge Strategies and Halliburton, have popped up under the notion of wanting to help develop Iraq.

However, by delving deeper into the companies' agendas, one will discover two members of New Bridge's board of directors are former White House Administration officials. Joe Allbaugh not only served as director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency under President George Bush until March 2003, but he was also Bush's chief of staff during Bush's reign as the governor of Texas.

Although another director, Ed Rogers, may not have been buddy-buddy with George Bush, he was great friends with Bush Senior. Rogers had served as Bush Senior's deputy assistant from January of 1989 until August 1991, and he also helped Bush Senior with his national campaign.

As directors of one of the companies which will be receiving a slice of the $87 billion pizza, it would not be surprising to find Allbaugh and Rogers slipping a few bills into their bank accounts. But the money trail becomes even more interesting. Vice President Dick Cheney isn't happy to see his past pals gaining some extra cash. He wants some of the money as well.

What does Cheney decide to do about his dilemma? Halliburton, the company for which Cheney was the former CEO, is also applying for some of the $87 billion. Just a few weeks ago, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers awarded Kellogg Brown and Root, a subsidiary of Halliburton, a no-bid contract to extinguish oil well fires. As a bonus, the contract is open-ended with no time or dollar limits. It is also a "cost-plus" contract, which means the company is guaranteed to recover costs, and it will also receive added profits.

Hopefully us, Americans, will not close our eyes and believe Cheney is not gaining anything from his company's venture into Iraq. Although Cheney supposedly resigned, he is still receiving checks from his former company. The only difference is he can only deposit the checks after he finishes his term as vice president.

Some might even say it's just a coincidence. The fact that the company employs former or current White House officials has nothing to do with the company receiving any form of the Iraqi aid money. However, according to the Washington Post, the Bush administration has a January waiver which allows "government agencies to handpick companies for Iraqi reconstruction projects.

From the beginning, I thought the war was one of the worst possible roads the United States could take in trying to establish peace in the Middle East.

What officials, however are doing now is even more shameful. As soon as our nation's officials see an opportunity to profit, they take it without thinking about how the money could be better used. Sometimes, I ask myself, how men such as Cheney, could live with

YOUR VIEWS

Anti-smoking the • same as anti-fun?

Your article concerning the proposed tax hike on cigarettes ("Ohio House signals tax on smokers") raises some interesting

First off, Ohio seems to be the latest state to jump on the fashionable, and lucrative bandwagon to capitalize on the vulnerability of the tobacco companies.

Particularly disturbing is the sentiment revealed in the comments by Mike Renner of the Tobacco Use Prevention and Control Foundation. He stated, "I've been waiting for anyone to find a scientifically good or productive use of tobacco." As if the only reason human beings ever engage in any activity is because it is "scientifically good" or "productive". If these were the only criteria for human activity, we would all live the dreary lives which moralistic busybodies like Mr. Renner do. Forget music, dance, games, tequila or chocolate cake— they just aren't rational or productive enough for Renner and his ilk.

Mr. Renner then goes on to assert that his foundation's purpose is to "provide the information and tools to motivate users to cease in their use of tobacco." I would not consider harnessing the powers of government to blackmail the purchasers of a product to be a 'tool" for decision-making. In fact, cigarette taxes are among the most regressive because smokers are overwhelmingly in the lower income brackets. The foundation's, as well as the state government's real purpose is to control (notice the word in the name of his foundation) our lives and to make life unbearable for those who don't accept his particular preferences for "productivity."

Personally, I quit smoking three months ago after seven years of the habit. I did not quit because of the activities of crusaders like Mr. Renner. In fact, I started smoking while researching a large project on the anti-smoking movement. I find their tendency to jump in and make our decisions for us to be reprehensible. It is not as if smokers are not aware of the risks. One smokes despite the risks because, believe it or not, people often like smoking better than they like not smoking.

Even if you find smoking smelly, gross, deadly or disgusting, there is still reason to be concerned over the logical foundations of the anti-smoking movement. Just imagine if someone like Mr. Renner decided that fast-food, beer, or God forbid, OSU football games are not "scientifically good" productive" and then harnessed the power of the state legislature to tax or regulate them out of

Group's goal is murder, not peace

In a recent article written by Adam Cahill, ("Palestinian conference") angers many Jews"), very little sense is made. In the first sentence he said, "Peace in the Middle East is something that many militant and religious groups have been struggling to obtain for hundreds of years."

I would like to request that the Lantern staff study or at least familiarize itself with the history of a region prior to writing about it. By their very nature, militant groups are opposed to peace — that is what makes them militant. If Cahill was referring to Hamas or other groups of that nature (which is not specified in the article), he would be sorely mistaken. In Hamas' charter it states, "There is no solution for the Palestinian question except through Jihad. Initiatives, proposals and international conferences are all a waste of time and are vain endeavors." Does this sound like a group struggling for peace? Does the murder of innocent men, women and children constitute a struggle for peace?

This is the very concern behind the upcoming National Solidarity Conference that is to be held at our university. The group responsible for this conference, the Palestine Solidarity Movement, does not oppose the use of terrorism.

This tacit approval of terrorism 🧻 is objectionable by many different groups. It is not just Jews who are 'angered" as Cahill wrote, but people of all races, ethnicities, sexes and religions.

This article was one-sided and failed miserably to express the views of both sides of this very heated and highly controversial argument.

On Monday, a U.S. soldier was killed in a gunbattle with anti-coalition forces near a base at Shkin, a town in Afghanistan's Paktika province, just across the border from South Waziristan. The base and several others along the border come under frequent attack.

Several hundred Afghan troops moved earlier this week into Paktika, in apparent response to the soldier's killing.

About 200 Pakistani troops reportedly took part in the operation, making it the army's largest offensive against al-Qaida in the fiercely autonomous tribal areas.

War won't slow wide receiver

BOWLING GREEN, Ohio (AP) -Cornelius McGrady III has a lot to think about when he is running routes as a wide receiver for Bowling Green State University.

There is where to cut and how many steps to take downfield. Then there is something else he cannot forget - his dad is a military police officer serving in McGrady, a junior, is fourth on the team with 13 receptions for 130 yards.

"He plays for his dad," said BGSU receivers coach Zach Azzanni.

"During two-a-days he would mess up, and I would have to get on him about it;" Azzanni said. "Then at night I would think about it. We're right in the middle of a war and this kid's thinking about his dad who could possibly get killed, and I'm yelling at him because he didn't get the right depth on a third-and-four.

McGrady's father, Sgt. Cornelius McGrady Jr., is a member of an Army Reserve unit that was activated earlier this year.

"I was worried about where he would be stationed mostly," McGrady said. "He was in another city and he just got shipped to Baghdad about three weeks ago.

"Before he wasn't even near the war ... I knew everything was fine. When he got shipped up there, I was getting a little nervous because I knew what was going

McGrady caught his first career touchdown pass two weeks ago against Ohio State. His only disappointment was that his father was not in the stadium with his mother. "His football career is right at its peak and he was upset that dad was going to miss the big game," Connie McGrady said. "Now he's taking it in stride and he's trying to make him proud."

McGrady's father still will get to see that touchdown.

Family members and friends taped the game on television, and they will ship one of the tapes to Iraq soon.

Crew hosts D.C. in crucial game

By Mike Price Lantern sports writer

During Wednesday's practice at their plush training facility in Obetz, Columbus Crew coach Greg Andrulis was in no joking mood. The usually jovial man was all business.

His words hit every player like a Mack truck, and his drill selection was pointed.

In a shooting drill, Andrulis gave his team the scenario that it was down by one goal with three minutes left in the game.

During an intrasquad scrimmage between the gray team and the yellow team, he told his players that the gray team was up 3-2 on the road, with 10 minutes remaining on the clock.

This time it did not blow it. Unlike recent games, the gray team picked up its play and held vellow scoreless.

"That's good stuff," said midfielder Ross Paulie, who was on the gray team. "That's how we've lost games. We're up with 10 minutes to go in practice. What do you do? Coach wants to see how we react; we reacted well today, so hopefully that will carry over to our game."

The game Paulie is referring to is a showdown against the D.C. United (10-9-7, 37 points) at Crew Stadium tomorrow

This game is a must-win for the Crew if they want any chance of making the playoffs after a dreadful two weeks on the road. Two losses, both in overtime, have sent Columbus spiraling to the bottom of their conference.

"We don't really have time to dwell on what's happened because we have four games left," defender Mike Clark said. "If we spend too much time with our heads held low, then we're going to miss some opportunities. Basically, Andrulis has been preparing us for D.C., which is the only thing we can do.

Giving up late goals has been a trend this season for the Crew, just as it was last season. Allowing late goals is the reason just made some mental errors Columbus (8-11-7, 31 points) is two points behind the New England Revolution (8-9-9, 33 points) for the fourth and final playoff spot in the Eastern Conference.

In their match against the Revolution last weekend, the Crew had an opportunity to close that margin but were unable to shut the door.

New England cut into Columbus' two-goal lead with goals in the 78th and 81st minutes. One goal was off a free kick and the other, which sent the game into overtime, was the result of a corner kick

In the seventh minute of overtime, defender Joe Franchino laced a 22-yard free kick past Crew goalkeepe Jon Buschin a 3-2 victory for the Revs at Gillette Stadium.

"When we're up 2-0 on the road with 15 minutes left in the game, we've just got to do better," said Paulie, who had one assist in the loss. "We can't let that happen anymore. We've and it has cost us, and we've got Dallas for allowing the most goals, 15, after the 76th minute, three of which came in overtime.

It comes down to take care of the lead, take care of the ball, do not fall back and still continue to play with confidence when we have a lead," Clark said.

After this weekend's contest, Columbus will face D.C. again on the road Oct. 19. The series with the United is split thus far, with the Crew losing 3-0 at D.C. on June 14 and winning 3-0 at home on June 28.

"We have to focus on this weekend and take care of business against D.C.," Busch said. "If we can get three or four wins here, we have a good chance of getting in the playoffs."

Although tomorrow's game with D.C. is crucial for Columbus, Paulie relishes the pressure that comes with it and said the Crew is confident enough to make its way into the playoffs.
"I live for pressure," he said.

"It's not good to be in this situation, but when it arises, you've got to take it and be ready for it. This is what you look for and you've got to win out. I mean, you look to win every game, but these are mustwingames. Ithink it makes it more fun to go out there and do everything you can do to get the win."

make it in this country? There are a few professional leagues out there for women right now, but those leagues are fading

Who is to blame for the demise of women's professional athletics? The spectators are.

In 1999, the U.S. Women's world cup soccer team defeated China in a dramatic fashion in front of 80,000 people. With the exception of U.S. defender Brandi Chastain ripping her shirt off after scoring the game-winning penalty kick, the team won the cup with skill and grace. The team quickly became an emblem of a purity in sports that is rare in these days of superstar scandals in men's sports.

As a society, we responded to the success of that moment and the Women's United Soccer Association was formed. The WUSA was forced to close its doors on Sept. 18 because of a lack of funding after only three seasons. The collapse of the league came at a most inopportune time as the U.S. hosts the women's World Cup. The eight-team league had 43 players, represented 11 different countries, and was the home of the world's best female players.

Another women's professional league that is on the brink of closure is the Women's National Basketball Association. Last spring, the WNBA went through deadline after deadline of labor talks before it finally was able to come to an agreement and get the ball bouncing. It received a $2 million subsidy from the NBA in order to reopen its doors for a sixth season.

It is obvious we have enough talented female athletes in this country to field these two sports professionally, but as a soci are doing an injustice to these women athletes by not supporting the leagues. Certain people out there willing to defend Title IX all day long, but how many games did they spend the money and go to? How many times did they tune into a game on television?

There are some women's professional sports like golf and tennis that are thriving on the big scene. These sports were two of the first sports that women were ever allowed to play because society at the time did not think women could handle the physical requirements of other sports such as basketball. Different rules were made where women couldn't pass half court in basketball. Yes, I know, women can't dunk, the speed of play is not as fast as the men, and it is a let down that Lisa Leslie can't drop step and throw it down over her defender. Women play the game the old John Wooden style with a strict execution of Xs and Os.

Women play with as much passion and determination as the men do, minus all the superstar drama that goes with it. They aren't driving expensive SUVs around with a chip on their shoulder, or trying to get the next thing free just because they are good at a sport. For the most part, female athletes represent the purity of what sports should be about.

The soccer and basketball moms need to do a better job of supporting the leagues so their daughters have something to dream about and strive for. To be a female athlete in this country is an empowering thing, and it contributes vastly to a girl's self-confidence.

New faces getting it done

By Nick Houser Lantern sports writer

There is not much difference between last year's national championship defensive unit and this year's version. The cast may have changed without the likes of Michael Doss, Donnie Nickey and Matt Wilhelm, but those who remain are still making the big plays in order to follow the same championship path.

Through the first five games of the season, a different player has came through almost every week to forge ahead. It is getting to the point where Ohio State may soon have a spot reserved for the Big Ten Defensive Player of the Week award.

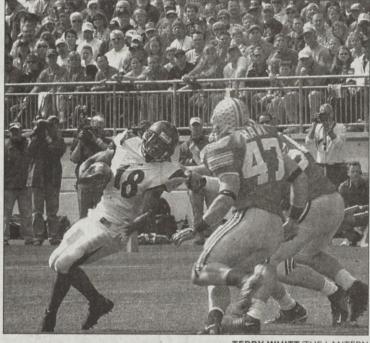

Already this season it has garnered the honor three times in five weeks, with three different players. Simon Fraser won the award in week one after registering a career-high seven tackles against Washington. Will Allen made the first of his two big plays against San Diego State on a 100-yard interception return for a touchdown. After knocking on the door for several weeks, linebacker A.J. Hawk wound up with a career best of 13 tackles last week.

For the second straight season, it is one of the top units against the run. Last year's defense let up an average of 77 yards per game, good enough for third best in the country. While this year's version is only halfway through this year's schedule, it is leading the nation by allowing a mere 43 yards per to try to get around the dominating attack at the line of scrimmage. The Buckeyes' pass defense is ranked eighth in the Big Ten, thanks in part to a solid slate of spread offenses on the non-conference portion of the schedule.

With Ohio State heading back into conference play, which brings with it run-oriented offenses, the matchup certainly looks to be in the champs favor.

Coming off the championship and losing five starters on defense, many thought defensive line seniors Will Smith, Darrion Scott and Tim Anderson would be the ones getting the sacks and tackles, but some of the replacements have taken on that element.

"It starts up front like every-thing does," coach Jim Tressel said. "And then, I think the thing that's been impressive to me is even though we're very young in the linebacker corps and very young in the defense, safety and so forth, we've had very limited missed assignments."

The winning performance, especially against the run, is. because of a host of tacklers swarming to the ball.

Big Ten) has struggled to find an offense this season, while OSU has outscored its opponents 25-4, which could make for a favorable matchup for the Buckeyes tonight.

OSU is not underestimating its rival, though.

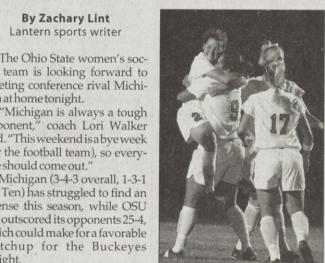

'It's definitely going to be an intense and emotional battle," midfielder Danielle Dietrich said."No one likes Michigan.

On Sunday, the No. 12 Buckeves will try to avenge last season's 3-2 loss to Michigan State. MSU is 7-2-0 overall and 3-1 in the Big Tenso far this season.

OSU (7-1-1 overall, 1-1-1 Big Ten) began the season with a loss to Indiana University last weekend. Slick field conditions dominated both teams until the 82nd minute of play when the Hoosiers' Missy Vierling ripped the ball past OSU goalkeeper Staci Sinkway for the game's only goal. The Buckeyes were unable to overcome IU's lead and the game ended 1-0.

But the Buckeyes have not looked back since.

Theirnext matchup took them to West Lafayette, Ind. to face Purdue. Dietrich scored twice against the Boilermakers (7-2-1 overall, 3-1 Big Ten), while the OSU defense allowed only one goal. The final score was 2-1 and sent Purdue to its first conference result of corner kicks by backfielder Paige Harrison.

Dietrich's first goal was a shot to the left corner of the net with an assist from midfielder Liz Mumley, while her second goal was a header past Purdue's goalkeeper Lauren Mason, amidst a scramble in front of the goal.

"Paige's services have been great for us," Walker said. Danielle Dietrich stepped up and played the way she's capable of playing." The key to the Buckeyes' success has been a balanced attack. As a team, OSU has kept the ball out of its defensive end and has maintained a potent attack.

"We're creating great chances with our defense," Walker said, "But we're also getting the ball in good places, and that makes for a dangerous attack."

'Any obstacle we face, we'll get through it because we play as a team," Mumley said.

Tonight's game against Both Dietrich goals were the Michigan will be at 7:30 p.m.

'Demonlover' visits Wexner

By lan James Lantern arts editor

In it's continuing retrospective film series, the Wexner Center presents the Columbus premier of "Demonlover" tomorrow evening; the latest work from French filmmaker Olivier Assayas.

Part French New Wave, part David Lynch, and a little Alfred Hitchcock to boot, "Demonlover" follows a group of freewheeling corporate evildoers as they pursue the distribution rights to a Japanese animé-porn film house.

Connie Nielson plays Diane, an employee of VolfGroup, an international conglomerate which aims to acquire TokyoAnimé, the world leader in cuttingedge Japanaporn. Diane wishes to climb the corporate ladder and seal the deal with TokyoAnimé. In order to achieve her goal, she must defrock one of her superiors and work both sides to achieve her own personal glory. Caught up in the double-cross is a fiery personal assistant played by indie-film veteran, Chloë Sevi-gny, whose insubordination leads one to only guess her ulterior motives. Aiding the ethical dilemma is an amoral VolfGroup associate, Charles Berling, and potential American business partner and pothead played by Gina Gershon.

With all of it backstabbing and business ethics violations, "Demonlover" moves quick, jumping between Paris and Tokyo as fast as an e-mail. The various kidnappings and pseudo-allegiances build audience confusion to dizzying heights. Unlike Lynch, though, "Demonlover" results in some semblance of sense in the end. The journey of Diane is quite intriguing to witness as she rises in power and confidence, then is squashed by her adversaries. The film stylistically illustrates corporate trickery and immorality, aided and abetted by technology and quick wits.

Assayas will be on hand tomorrow evening for the film's introduction and a short Q & A session. The showing will begin afterwards in the Wexner Center's Film and Video Theater. Festivities begin at 7 p.m.

The Wexner Center for the Arts is hosting the U.S. premiere of "The Hanging Man," the latest project from England's Improbable Theatre Company.

Quentin smashed on Leno

NEW YORK (AP) - Filmmaker Quentin Tarantino appeared to take advantage of the open bar backstage at Jay Leno's "Tonight" show this past Monday.

Leno joked, "don't light a match in here," in the midst of Tarantino's rambling, occasionally incoherent, guest shot. Tarantino was on the show to promote his new movie, "Kill Bill: Vol. 1," set for release Oct.

Before getting to the film clip, their discussion included references to Leno's old curly haircut, Elvis Presley's rockabilly years and a "Golden Girls" audition.

'Have you been drinking tonight?" Leno asked.

Tarantino responded that he thought he'd bring back the spirit of Johnny Carson's "Tonight" show. "You have an open bar backstage," he reminded Leno. His appearance ended shortly after an impatient Leno introduced a film clip. There will be no repercussions from the inci-"Tonight" show spokeswoman Carrie Simons said Tuesday.

Last year, comedian Tom Green got progressively drunk on a "Tonight" show appearance, an experiment that appeared to grow quickly out of control.

Jimmy Kimmel's ABC latenight show closed a bar that had served drinks to audience members after a boisterous first show, that included one audience member vomiting and guest George Clooney passing around a bottle of vodka.

Hidden 'ads' create intrigue

By David Bauder Associated Press

NEW YORK - They're stealth commercials within a television show: a soft drink can in front of an "American Idol" judge, a bag of chips offered to a starving "Survivor" contestant.

A watchdog group says these embedded ads are getting out of control, and asked federal authorities Tuesday to enact stricter rules regarding their use.

"TV stations are turning programs into infomercials, but viewers are often not aware that these ads are ads. That's totally unfair," said Gary Ruskin of Commercial Alert, which filed separate complaints with the Federal Communications Commission and Federal Trade

The FCC complaint cited a survey of 750 media planners from earlier this year that found 18 percent had negotiated a product placement over the previous six months, but 26 percent anticipated working on one during the next six months.

They can take many forms: cosmetics companies have had their products included in soap opera plot lines; Regis Philbin cited a phone company when a contestant on "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire" wanted to phone a friend; beer company signs appear on the set of "The Best Damn Sports Show Period" and a skit on the program mimicked

Jewish Journey begins in Brooklyn

By Deepti Hajela Associated Press

NEW YORK — It began with a single photograph — a small child running down a back alley in Jerusalem, wearing an angel costume as part of the festivities to mark the Jewish holiday of

For French photographer Frederic Brenner, that 1978 image was the start of a journey that would take him throughout the world for the next 25 years, documenting the lives of Jews in 40 countries on five continents.

Of the thousands of pictures Brenner has taken, 150 are going on display at the Brooklyn Museum of Art. "The Jewish Journey: Frederic Brenner's Photographic Odyssey" opens today, and runs through Jan. 11. The exhibit coincides with the publication of a two-volume book of Brenner's photographs, "Diaspora: Homelands in Exile."

"I didn't wake up one morning thinking I was going to portray the Jewish people," Brenner said. "But as I went traveling it appeared to me ... that what I was doing was piecing together an amazing puzzle made of all these many fragments."

The works show the tremendous diversity of the Jewish community around the world, a diversity that Brenner wasn't prepared to find when he first started.

"I believed in continuity, I only found discontinuity," he said, as he saw how Jews differed from each other in appearance and culture depending on where they lived in the world.

Brenner hopes looking at the photographs will help viewers, lewish and non-Jewish, "undertake the journey that I undertook myself and break all those frozen and petrified representations of 'What is a Jew," What does a Jew look like?"
