As faculty salaries become a rising issue on campus, the first in a series of meetings todiscusscreating a faculty union will be held tomorrow

The Ohio State chapter for the American Association of University Professors will meet tomorrow in 21 Lazenby Hall at 3:30

The goal of the AAUP is to gain collective bargaining power for the faculty. Topics of tomorrow's meeting will include the university's recent proposals for a faculty salary increase, improvement of faculty grievance procedures and an effort to strengthen the faculty's position in the governing of the universi-

"We are very optimistic because there is lot of discontent on this campus," said Gerald Winer, president of OSU/AAUP. "Many faculty members believe they are treated unfairly."

Winer, a professor of psychology teaching in his 30th year at OSU, plans to begin the meeting with OSUAUP's response to the state of the university address President William "Brit" Kirwan delivered on Oct. 10.

Winer will critique Kirwan's proposal of merit-based compensation to match faculty salaries at benchmark institutions. He said the diminishment of acrossthe-board raises and a large increase of merit-based raises will cause gross inequalities in faculty salaries at OSU.

compensation Merit-based will cause some faculty members to feel unappreciated and alienated, Winer said. It will create a two-class system where professors who produce large amounts of highly regarded work earn substantially more money than those whose output is less tangible. For example, Winer said, the success of good teaching is difficult to measure compared to the restige which comes with published work.

"What we have to offer the faculty is fairness when it comes to compensation," Winer said.

The former president of University of Michigan's AAUP chapter, Louis D'Alecy, said instituting a faculty union at large universities is difficult. Colleges and departments at these universities are more separated. and the structure of a union demands more cooperation across the entire institution to be Faculty at the University of Michigan do not have an offical union, D'Alecy said.

"There is never a lot of interest in collective bargaining until things get really bad," D'Alecy said. "Usually, by that point, it is too late. Permanent changes in the university have been made that cannot be reversed.'

Salary increases alone will not unite the faculty, he said. Academic "prerogatives" -such as class size and teaching loads — are what usually lead faculty members to organize.

"(However) if an administration sees a vote coming in for collective bargaining, they throw money at the group of people making the complaints," D'Alecy said. He said it is an old and effective strategy used to break up unions.

Professors from the University of Cincinnati and Cleveland State University, the only public colleges in Ohio with official unions, will also speak before the meeting opens up for general dis-

"We would need many more members to give AAUP clout," Winer said. "Hopefully, our membership will increase dramatically because of this campaign."

About 300 faculty members comprise the OSU/AAUP. Nearly 3,000 faculty are employed at OSU, Winer said.

Glen Needham, professor of entomology, said he prefers to voice his opinion as an individual rather than with a larger group. However, he said he can understand the need for group representation, and he chooses to participate depending on the issue.

While he will not be in attendance at tomorrow's OSU/AAUP meeting, Needham reads the newsletter and plans to follow the meetings to see what will happen next.

Postal workers arrive by bus at District of Columbia General Hospital in Washington yesterday where they were to be tested for anthrax exposure. The death of two postal workers of "almost certain" anthrax led health officials to begin testing mail workers from 36 post offices in Washington.

White House discovers anthrax in mail room as fear increases

By Laura Meckler Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Anthrax was discovered in an offsite mail screening facility for the White House yesterday and separately confirmed as the cause of death for two postal workers in the nation's capital, the latest bioterrorism victims.

In addition, a mail handler in New Jersey and two more postal workers in Washington were believed to be suffering from the disease.

"We need to treat and to treat quickly," said Dr. Ivan Walks, the senior health official in the District of Columbia, adding that anthrax had been confirmed inside the central Brentwood mail facility that serves the city. Antibiotics were being dispensed to postal workers across Washington as officials began testing to see if anthrax had spread to local

At the White House, spokesman Ari Fleischer said anthrax had been found at a mail screening facility for the White House located at a military installation. That facility was closed for testing and decontamination. Fleischer said all environmental tests at the White House itself have come back negative. The anthrax was detected yesterday during screening, the Secret Service said in a statement. The origin was unknown, but the Secret Service noted that mail handled there is processed through the Brentwood facility, too. As the cases multiplied, two more people affiliated with the Brentwood facility were being treated for inhalation anthrax, though test results confirming the diagnosis were not complete, said Donna Bigler, spokeswoman for Montgomery County, Md., where the two patients were hospitalized.

One of them, a 35-year-old man, works at Brentwood. The second, a 41-year-old woman, is a postal union official and was in the facility regularly, Bigler

In addition, local health officials said two other cases showed symptoms of inhalation anthrax.

Buffeted with questions, White House spokesman Ari Fleischer defended federal health authorities who initially opted not to test the Brentwood facility after learning it had handled an anthrax-tainted letter sent to Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle.

The president believes the cause of death was not the treatment made by the federal government or the local officials, or anyone else, but the cause of death was the attack made on our nation by people mailing anthrax." he said.

Defending his agency, Dr. Jeffrey Koplan, director of Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, said the CDC never suspected that anthrax could leak out of a sealed letter.

"We had had no cases of inhalation anthrax in a mail sorting facility," he said. "There was no reason to think this was a possibility.'

At the same time, Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson said that if additional tainted letters are found, officials would move more aggressively to test and treat any workers at postal facilities that handled them.

The developments unfolded as Attorney General John Ashcroft said investigators "are not able to rule out an association with the terrorist acts of September 11, but neither are we able to draw a conclusive link at this time."

Congress returned to work for the first time since

Cancer hospital founder dies

Dr. Arthur G. James, founder of the Arthur G. James Cancer Hospital, died Monday afternoon at the age of 89, after a long battle with Parkinson's Disease.

James is survived by his wife, Millie, sons David and Cameron (and wife Nancy) and grandchildren Nancy Johnson (and husband Kenny), Arthur James, Joseph James and Cartherine

Funeral services for James will be private, but a public viewing is planned at Shoedinger Northwest Chapel, 1740 Zollinger Road, on Thursday and Friday from 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 9 p.m., respectively. At 2 p.m. on Sunday in the Rhodes Hall Auditorium, officials are planning a white-coat processional, a tradition for honoring the memory of medical leaders.

"The passion that Dr. James showed throughout his lifetime is rare," said Dr. David Schuller, director of the Arthur G. James Cancer Hospital.

James, an Ohio native, attended medical school at Ohio State and spent four years as a surgeon overseas during World War II. James completed his medical training at the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center - then known as Memorial Hospital - in New York City.

Returning to Columbus to join The Ohio State University Hospitals in 1947, James spent the next 35 years convincing community leaders, the state of Ohio and OSU of the need for a specialty cancer hospital.

After years of fund-raising and campaigning, construction began in 1984 on what would be the Arthur G. James Cancer Hospital. Six years later, the hospital treated its first cancer patients.

Without Dr. James, this hospital simply would not exist," said Dennis Smith, director of administration at the cancer hospital. "His memory and dedication will live on through this hospital and all that we achieve. We will continue to advance Dr. James' vision of a world-class cancer hospital and research facility."

The cancer hospital is the only one of OSU's 41 Comprehensive Care Centers to be designated by the National Cancer Institute, and it is a founding member of the National Comprehensive Cancer Network, an association

Higher ed funds now going to Ohio youths

By Melissa Sharp Lantern staff writer

Ohio's General Assembly cut the budget for higher education in order to allocate funds for primary and secondary education.

"The legislature has decided that they would rather cut higher education than increase revenues," said David Goldberger, a professor of law.

The General Assembly has three main categories which they have to fund - primary and secondary education, Medicaid and property tax roll backs. Higher education is considered part of the state's discretionary, or optional, funding.

According to Goldberger, the Ohio constitution only requires the state to protect secondary education. There is nothing higher education institutions, like Ohio State, can do in the courts to demand more money. The Office of Resource and Planning has projected that 41.7 percent of OSU's general fund will come from the state. The rest of the budget comes from instructional fees and other miscellaneous sources.

However, state funds are being stretched to meet the demands of the DeRolph v. Ohio case, which began in 1991. The case claimed Ohio's public school funding system was unconstitutional. It has traveled to the Ohio Supreme Court three times, as the state has desperately tried to reformulate the funding for primary and secondary education.

"The supreme court said this will not do," Goldberger said.

On Sept. 6 the Ohio Supreme Court gave up jurisdiction of DeRolph III, but said the most recent plan the state submitted was still unconstitutional. The court said the state still needs to address three items before it will fit the constitutional requirements, which will cost the state an estimated $1.24 billion a year, retroactive to July 1.

According to Lawrence Baum, professor of political science, the supreme court wanted to get themselves out of the case. However, the state has come back to the supreme court and said there are fiscal consequences — namely the $1.24 billion to this decision which the court needs to consider.

It is up to the state's General Assembly to continue to make changes in how Ohio's public schools are funded. Baum believes the DeRolph case may finally be over, but he said it is possible for there to be a fresh case which deals with the same issues

"The legislature is taking a minimalist approach to the supreme court's decision. At times they seem to be obstructionist. This makes us question why our court would turn things over to the legislature," Goldberger said.

He said he believes the general assembly had mixed feelings about public education, even before the

This all started when Judge Linton Lewis agreed with Nathan DeRolph and the school districts which filed the case against the state in the Perry County Court of Common Pleas. After the state appealed the decision to the Ohio Fifth District Court of Appeals, Lewis' decision was reversed. The DeRolph case was then appealed to Ohio's Supreme Court.

On March 27, 1997, the supreme court ruled the Ohio public school financing system violates Section II, Article VI of the Ohio Constitution stating education in Ohio schools must be "thorough and efficient."

The decision meant the state had to reorganize the funding for schools, so local property taxes would no longer be used as the primary source of funding. The Ohio Supreme Court turned jurisdiction of the case back over to the trial courts.

After the decision, the General Assembly introduced various pieces of legislation in order to create a new system of funding for the state's public schools. Joint subcommittees were formed for both senators and house representatives to voice their recommendations for the new school funding system. On Jan. 2, 1998, the House and Senate announced a new school funding plan, and it was approved by voters on Nov. 2, 1998. On Feb. 26, 1999, Lewis declared the state's response was still unconstitutional. From here the case went directly back to the Ohio Supreme Court, which agreed with him and ruled on May 11, 2000, that the state's response did not meet the "thorough and efficient" standard.

The court members provided seven specific areas they wanted the state to address, giving a deadline of June 15. The General Assembly then had to go back to joint subcommittees and once again reorganize the state's school funding system. House Bill 94 created a new formula for how public secondary education will be funded. According to the bill, the state must derive how much it costs per pupil to receive an adequate education. Once this amount is determined, the state must pay this amount for every

As this formula was passed, money from the state's education fund continued to be directed into secondary education and the money state colleges and universities were hoping to see seemed to disappear.

"Maybe next year the state will come up with a response that no one will challenge," Baum said. In this case maybe higher education will be able to see a little bit more of the money they had hoped for in the beginning, he added.

Habitat sheds prove successful in construction, spreading awareness

By Gretchen Schneider

People who walked past the Ohio Union on Oct. 11 probably saw, and possibly joined, volunteers for Habitat for Humanity building sheds as a part of the Homecoming Week celebration.

For some volunteers, the events were a unique opportunity for them to get involved, but for others, it was part of their weekly support to Habitat for Humanity at Ohio State.

According to Joel Douglass, construction director of OSU Habitat, the sheds are now waiting at the Greater Columbus Habitat for Humanity for completion.

"We'll finish those sheds up as part of our Saturday volunteering," Douglass said.

Douglass said one of the sheds will be sold to an OSU employee who already purchased a house through Habitat in partnership with OSU and

Douglass said the shed will be added to that

"To be accepted they have to meet three criteria," Douglass said, "One, they have to be living in substandard housing. Two, they have to be willing to partner with either a church, a group or a business that will be building the house. They also have to be in 30 to 50 percent of the median income level of the area to qualify for the house. Douglass said a portion of the partnership requires the buyer to put in 250 hours of "sweat equity" into not only their own homes, but into other's homes.

According to Douglass, OSU Habitat is only working on one house.

To build a house with Greater Columbus, the partner groups have to put up $50,000 to build the house," Douglass said. "That money goes into a pot to help build other houses."

According to Douglass, the purchaser must pay a mortgage as any homeowner would. That payment also goes into a pot to build other houses. According to Liz Eichenbach, graduate administrative associate at Student Activities, 98 volunteers assisted in building nearly two sheds. "Considering the fact that we had to change locations because of the rain, it was a good turnout," Eichenbach said.

Eichenbach said the construction began the morning of Oct. 11 at 10 a.m. and ended at 4:30 p.m. when they delivered the sheds to the Greater Habitat for Humanity warehouse.

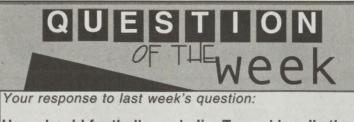

"Students that stopped by, whether they stayed for 10 minutes or an hour, everyone was very interested in helping out Habitat," Eichenbach said. "I think everybody's response was, 'Oh, that's such a great cause.' Or, 'I wish I could stay and build longer.'

According to Eichenbach, the response was so great there were times when volunteers were only allowed to hammer in one nail to a wall so that everyone could participate.

There were strong turnouts from the greek community and the Homecoming court as well. Douglass said they are working on building up their student volunteers.

"We are looking for leadership on all levels and we need people," Douglass said.

Douglass said there are about 500 people on their mailing list, but usually a little more than 20 people show up for volunteering.

Passerby punches walker in head

Oct. 20: According to University Police, a man was walking down College Road towards 12th Avenue when he was approached by one white man and four black men. The victim said the white man intentionally bumped into him, told him to "watch where you are going," and punched him in the head.

The victim then said that one of the other men punched him in the nose. The men then left, walking eastbound on 12th Avenue.

The victim described the white male as about 5 feet 7 inches with a shaved head. One of the black men was wearing glasses and another was wearing a red jacket with a black stripe.

Men found smoking pot on campus steps

Oct. 21: University Police reported a strong smell of burning marijuana coming from the north side of W. 12th Avenue yesterday. As the police approached the area, they observed two men sitting on the steps of the Browning Amphitheater -- one man was holding something in his right hand letting out a long puff of smoke from his mouth.

Police patted down the two men for weapons and found one man with a fake ID and the other with a pipe half full of marijuana and still warm. Both men were placed under arrest and transported for processing.

Columbus struggles to cope with homeless

By Edmund Brown Lantern staff writer

The 35 apartment units in the Homeless Families Foundation shelter in downtown Columbus are all occupied as usual. The staff is not conducting interviews at this time because if any vacancies do arise, there are already plenty of families waiting to occupy the space.

In 2000, the Community Shelter Board, an organization helping to facilitate the needs of central Ohio's homeless, provided more than 840 beds to nearly 7,513 individuals.

The real problem is a lack in affordable housing," said Ilene Kirsch, executive director of Homeless Families Foundation. "The city needs to continue to work to increase the available affordable housing."

Of the 740 families served by the member facilities of the Community Shelter Board in 2000, 33 percent of heads of households were earning an average income of $630 per month, not nearly enough to provide secure housing and food for the average homeless family of 3.7 people.

Barbara Poppe, executive director of Community Shelter Board, said her organization has been working to provide stable housing situations for those who find themselves homeless for extended periods of time.

"Folks who are chronically homeless tend to have a higher level of disability, and we are working to provide permanent shelter agencies for them," Poppe said.

The Homeless Families Foundation did not want to release the exact location of these shelters to ensure the safety and privacy of their residents. According to Kirsch, the facility is arranged to provide the greatest sense of normalcy possible for its share of the 1,700 children served by the shelter board.

"We think children need to live in as normal an environment as possible," Kirsch said.

The Community Housing Network has begun renovation of the N. High Street apartments, just north of Ninth Avenue in order to provide a residential housing environment for people in the university area. Another major problem facing the homeless in central Ohio is the location of shelters. The vast majority of facilities are located in downtown Columbus, away from the rapidly expanding commercial markets near the city's outer belt.

"Most shelters are on or near a bus line," Kirsch said. "One of the issues is trying to move shelters from downtown, closer to the areas with the most job opportunities.

According to Poppe, there are zoning requirements for all buildings' and shelters and the Community Shelter Board has worked to disperse facilities throughout central

"We have family shelters in Prairie Township near the outer belt on the west side and our largest concentration of facilities is in the Franklinton area," Poppe said.

The largest number of the city's homeless come from the 43215 and 43201 ZIP codes, which are the immediate downtown area and the near east side.

"What is needed in the suburbs is the development of more low-income" housing," Poppe said.

Until then, Community Shelter Board and its affiliate organizations will have to bear the burden of tak ing care of the central Ohioans most in need.

No New Taxes

Additional Internet fees excessive

In 1998, the U.S. Congress passed the Internet Tax Freedom Act, which prohibited taxes on Internet access and online goods and services. The law was meant to prevent confusing and excessive financial burdens on electronic commerce.

It imposed a three-year moratorium on new federal, state and local taxes and banned any tax that singled out the Internet.

The moratorium expired Sunday. Although it is unlikely state and local governments — even when-struggling with a bad economy and tight budgets — will rush to impose new taxes to generate new revenue, the possibility still exists in the long run. Such actions could stifle the growth of the information superhighway. The House of Representatives did pass a two-year extension of the moratorium last week, but the Senate failed to follow suit. Those opposed to extending the ban cited an important unresolved concern involving uncollected sales taxes on electronic commerce.

The loss from these uncollected revenues was estimated at nearly $26 billion last year. State and local governments understandably want Congress to give them authority to require out-of-state Internet sellers to collect and remit their sales taxes. This is a valid concern that needs to be considered.

While this is an important concern and should be addressed in future legislation, this is no reason to bog down Internet commerce. The Senate should follow the House's lead and extend the ban on new Internet taxes

Congress established this act three years ago, and, like a student waiting to the last possible moment to study for an exam, have procrastinated to the point where they are trapped.

On one hand, extending the moratorium for another two years will do no good if Congress refuses to take action on allowing states to collect revenues. On the other hand, states do need the time to hash out a new, simple tax structure that treats Internet economic activity fairly. Extending the ban in the interim is good for the country.

Congress should delay no more. The Internet should be free of undue economic regulation, but states should get the revenues they

Identification Issues

Possible policy endangers privacy An online poll at a recent news organization's Web site asked Americans how they would feel about the creation of national identification cards. Although, in this case, the question was hypothetical, this is not a new idea. Over the past decade, various proposals for a mandatory national identifier have emerged, frequently in regard to strengthening immi-

We believe this is an impractical and ineffective proposal that would only threaten our right to privacy and foster new forms of discrimination. A national ID card would be no more reliable than the documents a person would show to obtain it and the cost to the American taxpayers just to issue the cards would be at least $2.5 billion, according to the Social Secu-

Proposals for a national ID card are only offering another "quick fix" to widespread feelings of helplessness in the wake of the Sept. 11 attacks.

Even now, regardless of one's positions on the risks and benefits of the United States' immigration policy, a national identity card, with all of the added dangers it entails, is certainly not the best solution.

In practice, a national ID card would essentially serve as an internal passport. It would create an easy new tool for government surveillance and could also be used to target unpopular criticisms of the government, as has happened occasionally in the past. While the Social Security Act originally contained strict prohibitions against the use of the Social Security card for unrelated purposes, over the past 50 years those prohibitions have been ignored or legislated into oblivion and restrictions on a national ID card would follow the same path.

Perhaps most troubling are the implications for discriminatory practices inherent in this I.D. card. Without which police would be required to conduct random checks, a politically unacceptable alternative.

We do not, however, object to efforts to make already existing personally identifiable information (such as a social security card) more fraud or tamper-proof as long as individual privacy is protected.

Our government must continue to be mindful of our right to privacy when passing legislation and ensure measures that will prevent the move toward abuses of the system.

Lantern may run morgue photo

The Lantern has been asked by University Police to publish a Franklin County Morgue photograph of the unidentified man who fell from the eighth floor of Dreese Laboratory on Friday. Obviously, the idea of publishing this photo raises some taste issues.

Yesterday, we published a detailed description of the man in a front-page article. Today, we are informing community residents they can go to a University Police Web site (www.ps.ohio-state.edu/dreese_lab.html) and look at that photo.

If the man still is not identified by tomorrow, The Lantern is planning to run the photograph in color on the front page Friday in the hope that someone may be able to identify him.

USG: For students or Campus Partners?

ur incomparable Under-graduate Student Government president, Eddie Pauline, says his new University Plan will "come up with a strategy about how to educate students on Campus Partners." I hope he is not changing his majors from political science and geology to "pre-med" and "pre-dentistry"— with an emphases on spin doctoring and becoming a mouthpiece for the uni-

I hope what Pauline means by saying "educate" is to empower Ohio State students to cry out about their university's further encroachment onto their stomping grounds, the University District. Campus Partners is not just a non-profit organization, folks. Campus Partners enables OSU to extend its far-reaching arm off-campus, keeping its hand in many fires.

Eddie, do not fail your 13,000 constituents east of High Street now by becoming one more advocate for OSU's designs to move into the University District. "Educate" them by letting them know OSU won't be the neighbor across the street but the neighbor moving in next door, displacing whoever was there with the city's stamp of approval — eminent With the coming of the University Gateway Center, gentrification will inevitably take place in the University District. Gentrification happens when the property values in an area increase to the point where residents living there cannot afford it and are forced to move away.

Those residents are students who cannot afford an increase in the baby-sitting drunken college stu-dents. OSU's image tarnished fur-expensive shopping and entertainment venues and building nicer apartments is great for any aspiring capitalist, but it leaves no room for students who are barely able to afford coming to OSU as it is now.

Perhaps OSU had noble intentions in the beginning, trying to improve the neighborhoods surrounding the university. Some landlords in the University District have been gouging students, overcharging them for dives which should have been condemned for the fire traps they are. Shame on them, but at least students are able to pay for those dives.

Whether the university intends it or not, gentrification of the University District will lead to an OSU for elitists. It will price out the socioeconomic diversity at OSU, making it a state university for a few select individuals.

Affirmative action case can set precedent

he Web site for the National Organization of Women defines affirmative action A as "the set of public policies and initiatives designed to help eliminate past and present (future) discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, or national origin." While it may be easy to define the term, the practical application of affirmative action policy continues to be fodder for

The beneficiaries of affirmative action are not just racial minorities. We will illustrate the problems with the notion that there is no place in our society for affirmative action.

When most people think of the Civil Rights Movement, they envision a period of roughly 10 years in which thousands of people marched through the streets singing, "We Shall Over-These southern black people (and other groups that supported the movement) marched in solidarity for the end of Jim Crow and the right to exercise their constitutional freedoms. The foundation of civil rights legislation was signed into law during the presidency of Lyndon B. Johnson. Some of that legislation became the foundation for other significant legal developments: The Americans with Disabilities Act, Title IX, the Equal Rights Amendment (which has yet to be passed into law) and some veterans' services.

There were other equal rights laws passed to make discrimination illegal, such as the Civil

The passage of civil rights legislation was a defining historical moment that transformed what it meant to be black or otherwise marginalized. Although civil rights legislation has optimistic goals, the full implementation of these beneficial statutes is routinely impeded, especially in higher education. The end result is separate but equal marginalized people who do not have the same opportunities as people of the majority

Horace Mann, the father of the public school system, said education is the great equalizer. If this is true, then there must be an assurance that students from disadvantaged social and economic backgrounds receive equal opportunity in education. Unfortunately, for many students there is still no equality in opportunity. Like the 1954 Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka Supreme Court decision, the decision of the federal Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals concerning the continuation of amrinative action programs at the versity of Michigan will have far-reaching effects.

At stake are in the two University of Michigan affirmative action cases, whose hearings have been postponed until Dec. 6, are not only the levels of diversity in the future freshman classes of Ohio State, but also the job opportunities for people who would not have been given a second look under the discriminatory hiring practices of the

It is now the appointed season to see if all the sweat, blood and tears of a generation will be in vain. This case will be a benchmark of how we will define affirmative action for generations to come. In the Supreme Court case decision Plessy v. Ferguson, the court ruled to uphold a separate but equal doctrine. This decision marked the end of Reconstruction and the beginning of the Jim Crow laws, the officially sanctioned policy of racial discrimination; is this the road that America wants to follow in education?

They Might Be Giants fuse old flavor, new irony in 'Mink Car'

By Eric Harrelson For the Lantern

When you think of thick glasses, accordions and birdhouses in your soul, you immediately think of They Might Be Giants. The band is still making music and their new record, "Mink Car," was released this fall on Restless Brand recordings. They Might Be Giants are touring to promote "Mink Car" and will be gracing the stage of the Newport tonight.

For those of you not familiar with the group, They Might Be Giants had a hit with the theme "You're Not the Boss of Me" from the Fox television show, "Malcolm in the Middle." They Might Be Giants are John Flansburgh and John Linnell, and features The Band of Dans: Dan Hickey on drums and percussion, Dan Weinkauf on bass and Dan Miller on guitar.

While the record keeps the same feel and mood They Might Be Giants are famous for, the band explores some newer territory. "Man, It's So Loud in Here" has the feel of an old '80s techno song, like New Order, but with more than just a touch of irony. There is also an acoustic rendition of an old tune, "Another First Kiss," in which the group gives the song a completely different vibe from its original style. The record includes more from electronic sources and uses less accordion, which is never a good idea.

What is disappointing about this record is that it fails to capture past-They Might Be Giants glory. It is a good recording, but when stacked against previous work, it falls short of the mark. The songs all provide a glimmer of what They Might Be Giants once were, but none of the tracks are particularly outstanding or inventive.

Hardcore They Might Be Giants fans will be a bit disappointed with this new record, but not enough to chuck it in the garbage. This record is no reason to stop liking the band, or to throw out all your old They Might Be Giants T-shirts and albums. Songs like "Bangs," "Cyclops Rock" and "Hovering Sombrero" are more akin to what fans are used to and are the saving grace of the record.

As far as the new music scene goes, it's good to see a quality band like They Might Be Giants continuing to make music in the midst of all the bubble gum, rap, and angst rock. Contemporary pop music lacks style, talent and originality. "Mink Car" is like a half-full canteen of water in the desert. ## Shoku offers tasty sushi, zen-like décor

For years you've smelled it. The drainage vents outside of Larkins Hall have never been shy about spreading it around. Every now and again in Buckeye Country, you open your nostrils to the invigorating smell of raw fish. Last week I finally broke down and decided to try some — but readers be warned the sushi at Shoku, located at 1312 Grandview Ave. tastes decidedly different than the fish smells you're used to. It's absolutely delicious.

My dad, co-Masticator and veteran of Columbus bars - sushi or otherwise — came along on this excursion to guide the way for the sushi novice.

He wrote, "When I recall my first experience with sushi, the experienced people I was with made sure I stayed away from the 'hard core' items. With this is mind, I started with a California roll which is mild, tasty and easy to eat with chopsticks - even for invalids like Hank. The rice was light, yet it stayed together. The shrimp pieces and yellow tail were very fresh and flavorful. My favorite was the smoked salmon, as it really had a distinctive smoky flavor."

Dad added, "All of the above were shared with greenhorns who were amazed that they were not only eating raw fish but loving it in public I tried the phad thai and was thoroughly pleased. The noodles were prepared just right and the big, juicy shrimp mixed well with the crisp strips of carrot. The sauce was quite mild and though I prefer mine a bit spicier, it was still very good. The portion was well above average and all said, the dish left me feeling as light as my wallet. My mom co-Masticated that evening too, and wrote, "I ordered the combination tempura. It came with rice, which was totally unnecessary because the tempura acted as finger food. The combo consisted of red pepper, squash, sweet potato, shrimp, lobster and soft shell crab—with a side of onion rings. The tempura was light, crunchy and tasty but without a good dipping sauce it was a bad choice. It was just too much tempura for a meal and would've made a better appe-Masticating is always more fun with the lovely April. She sampled the Teriyaki tofu and commented, "It was yummy. Plenty of green beans and other vegetables sautéed in a light, yet surprisingly spicy sauce. When I ordered it, I expected little pieces of tofu. Instead, I was shocked to find two huge slabs of tofu wiggling on top of the vegetables. While the tofu was perfectly cooked to suit the dish, two pieces was protein overkill. One piece of tofu would have been more proportional to the amount of vegetables

HELP IS ON THE WAY

Massillon's Justin Zwick looks to be next OSU great

Lantern sports writer

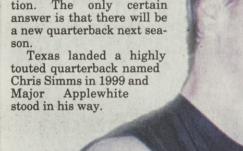

MASSILLON, Ohio - Aeneas abandoned Troy to

Paul Brown left Massillon to build a winning program at Ohio State and give Cleveland and Cincinnati pro football. Massillon's senior quarterback Justin Zwick left Orrville, Ohio, for a new home in Massillon, and his odyssey will continue to OSU.

The weight of Saturdays in Ohio will rest squarely on his shoulders starting in 2002. Zwick is expected to build something great. Maybe not Rome, but Spring 2002. The frustration that was No. 8 will be gone. The untested that is Scott McMullen, Craig Krenzel and Rick McFadden will be left over. Justin Zwick will arrive.

And so, the epic will begin. Who's going to start? It is everyone's favorite question in Columbus, with the coach being the exception. The only certain answer is that there will be a new quarterback next sea-

The difference at Ohio State is that there is no Applewhite; there is no proven winner at OSU now and definitely not next season.

Justin Zwick played the last home game of his high school career Friday

"He had his 100th touchdown pass tonight, and in four years of starting he has got a lot of experience that most quarterbacks don't have because they only start one or two, maybe three years but typically one of two," William Zwick, Justin's father, said. "If they want him to compete he's got a lot of experience; he's a rookie coming in, but he's got a lot of experience."

Justin Zwick is a competitor. He says the right things, that he will do whatever the coaches want him to do, that he would even red shirt. But there is a reason he is not going to play basketball in the winter for

He wants to play for the Buckeyes. He wants to start. It radiates from him.

"This offseason is going to really be big for Justin. He is going to be learning a new offense," Dan Stultz, former OSU kicker and Orrville High School graduate, said. "So when he comes in they're going to be throwing stuff at him every day, and if he does that preparation this winter he'll be much more ready for that."

Massillon's coach Rick Shepas is an advocate of a high powered offense. The game against Day-ton Chaminade-Julienne on Friday looked like the St. Louis Rams led by Kurt Warner torching a NFL defense. It turned out that was Massillon and Justin Zwick burning Dayton Chaminade-Julienne for more than 400 yards passing and four touchdowns.

Shepas' offense allows Justin Zwick to throw the ball around, call plays, check off at the line of scrimmage, and Justin Zwick does it - 360 yards passing versus powerhouse St. Ignatius - well

"I just go out and do what I can," Justin Zwick said. "I just like to throw the ball around. This year I have a better understanding of what we're try-ing to do with the offense, seeing what the defense gives me what I can do to counteract that. I just get more comfortable with the

The new kid is called the best quarterback prospect to enter OSU since Art Schlicter. Zwick could be better.

The Spotlight
Steve Bellisari and John Cooper felt it at Ohio State. They didn't like it.

Justin Zwick has felt it in Massillon. He's doing all right.

Football was born in Massillon. The town is small. Going there feels like going back in time, or driving through a Norman Rockwell painting.

"There's a lot of hard feelings around that (Zwick's transfer from Orville High School to Massillon Washington High School). I don't know if my friends truly understood what I was trying to do. I'm trying to make myself a better quarterback."

> -Justin Zwick Massillon Washington quarterback

The Massillon Tigers home is named after Paul Brown, it usually entertains more than 10,000 fans on a Friday night. The Tigers have won 22 state titles. Go Tigers.

"It means everything. I came here for the tradition. I came from a place with great tradition," Justin Zwick said. "You do everything for the game, whatever you can do, you just do it. With a high school like Massillon it is kind of like (Ohio State). Not to the extent, but it's a little like that. I don't know if I'll be ready for that. I'll find out when I get down there I'll find out if I'll be playing at all. If it happens, it happens."

Massillon, after his sophomore season. As a freshman at Orrville, he won the Division IV state title. It was then time to leave, to go to the big time. The town of Orrville was not happy

"There's a lot of hard feelings around that," Justin Zwick said. "I don't know if my friends truly understood what I was trying to do. I'm trying to make myself a better quarterback and I don't know if they understood that at first."

While it has taken some time to mend wounds with old friends at Orrville, it did not take much time to adjust to Division I defenses at Massillon. In Justin Zwick's first season at Massillon he passed for 2,460 yards, a school record. Those yards pushed Justin Zwick over 7,000 for his career, an Ohio high school record. He set that record in his junior season.

He also tossed 23 touchdown passes last year for Massillon, and while that is not a Massillon Washington High School record, he made sure to break it this year — his 2001 touchdown pass tally is at 30. He has thrown for five touchdowns in a game four times. The only other player to do that in Massillon was Mike

"He's really under the microscope right now just because everybody is looking at him knowing he's going to OSU," said his mother Linda Zwick. "Everyone is out to get him. They want to intercept his passes and they want to take him out. He's been under pressure since he chose to come here from Orrville, and I know it's going to be a greater magnitude from what he has experienced, but I think he will be able to handle (OSU pressure)."

Mom and Dad agree.

"The things that he has done and the crowd and the situations he's played before in Massillon here are really second to none in the high school setting," William Zwick said. "It's really an intense atmosphere here.

Stultz has seen this before.

Women's golf captain boosts morale, wins

Rising athlete Mollie Fankhauser full of energy on and off golf course

By AJ Zahra Lantern sports writer

She laughs so much with friends she loses her voice.

She helps an Ohio State team become No. 1 in the country and still has time to go back and help her former coach at her old high school. For OSU golf star Mollie Fankhauser, these are only a few things her friends, teammates and family love about her.
Fankhauser, a junior in history from Columbus, is the captain of this year's OSU golf team — a squad that is ranked No. 1 nationally. Teammates and coaches describe her as intense and focused on the field. However, when it comes to hanging out off the course, Fankhauser has no problem keeping the team loose.

"She is one of the loudest and most outgoing people I have ever met. Never a dull moment with Mollie, she is always fun to be with," said freshman teammate Lindsay Knowlton.

"I have never laughed so hard in my entire life as I have the past two months I have been at OSU," Knowlton said.

"Her personality is great. She is so much fun to hang out with as well as play with. She's always laughing and having a good time," said teammate Natalie Aber.

On the golf course, Fankhauser has already had an outstanding career at OSU.

In her sophomore season, she made the Second Team National Golf Conference Association All-American team and was Big Ten Player of the Year. She posted the lowest OSU stroke average in more than a decade with a 74.87 mark.

Before entering OSU, she was one of the top golfers in the state, winning high school and American Junior Golf Association Polo All-America honors and was twice named Mid-Ohio Golfer's Player of the Fankhauser was also a top-10 finisher in 10-of-13 tournaments last season, earning top-five status in nine outings. If that was not enough, Fankhauser was a medallist in an OSU-record four tourna-

She became OSU's first Big Ten champion since Amy Langhals in 1997, by winning the Big Ten Championship by two strokes "She is very competitive, and one of those kids you can always rely on," said OSU women's golf coach Therese Hession.

"What I will remember most about Mollie is that she is willing to go the extra mile. She is a hard worker, dedicated to the golf team, and me, which I really appreciate," Hession said. "Even when it is not going well, she hangs in there and makes something happen.'

Hession said Fankhauser was the players' choice for captain, and the team respects her because of the high goals and expectations she

"She takes her leadership role on the team seriously, and this makes Mollie a person that is respected and looked up to," said OSU golfer and Lantern staffer Kelly Moskal. Fankhauser said her favorite part of being a golfer was hanging out and spending time with the team. "We bring out the best in each other and laugh until our stomachs hurt, and I think those are the times I will really look back and appreciate when my career is over," she said.

"Mollie never gives up. She is always encouraging the team, she makes this 'Mighty Mouse' face sometimes to get the team fired up. It's really funny," Aber said. "She does it at six in the morning when we're eating breakfast before we go play — she knows how to get the team going. I think I'll remember that the most.'

"Mollie genuinely cares about the team. She is a great person to sit and talk with. She will be my friend for life," said Moskal. "Mollie is a great cook. She has had the team over numerous times for her fabu-

PHOTOS BY ANGELA HAMPTON/THE LANTERN Mollie Fankhauser is the captain on the No. 1 ranked women's golf team in the country, Ohio State. A fierce competitor on the course, teammates call her one of the friendliest people they've ever met.

Fankhauser said her toughest challenge when she first arrived on campus was to make sure she juggled her priorities of playing a sport and still having enough time to succeed academically.

"Academically I have learned to structure my time, and make sure I get everything done." Even though she graduated from a class of only 65 in high school, she said the classes at OSU didn't seem as big when she got here. "Mollie always has been a very outgoing student. She is very memorable and someone you always want to keep in contact with," said Sharon Salzer, athletic director for the Columbus School for Girls, and Fankhauser's former high school golf coach. Salzer said she remembers Mollie as a first-class person, and is very appreciative that she comes back to help coach and give advice to

"She has always been focused in what she wants athletically, but" she has always been able to stay focused on the big picture," Salzer said. "I think the support from her friends and family have provided her with a positive environment to succeed. Fankhauser said she has learned to analyze her own game; learning what to work on since her freshman year, which has helped her "She has done a great job realizing she does not have to force things," Hession said. 'She's very passionate about the game: takes it seriously, but she also has a great time playing," Aber said.

"I've seen a lot of quarterbacks (at OSU) going back to Stanley Jackson, Joe Germaine, Mark Garcia, David Priestley and Austin Moherman," Stultz said. "Some have transferred out. There's a lot of pressure coming in. Because he is so highly touted, it's going to the same."

Old Rocky Top Most 18-year-old males receiving a video tape through the mail probably would not watch it within plain view of their parents. Then again, most 18-year-old males don't get a video addressed from Peyton Manning, quarterback for the Indianapolis Colts.

"He's had Peyton Manning's films," William Zwick said. "Peyton Manning is a very nice guy. Last year, he sent him a drill film and told him what he looks at.'

Something Peyton Manning is known for, watching hours of game film, Justin Zwick is also compulsively into. Call him a nerd, but he is 6-foot-5-inches and 220-pounds.

"On Sunday (Shepas and Justin Zwick) spent three-and-a-half hours just watching Dayton. That's what it's all about," William Zwick said. "Film study is probably the most important thing for a quarterback."

Justin Zwick would still like to pick Manning's brain a little more and would even love to have Peyton Manning, his father and former NFL quarterback Archie Manning and his brother and current University of Mississippi quarterback Eli Manning over for dinner.

"(Peyton) Manning had to follow his dad's footsteps going all the way. I thought maybe if he could bring his brother (Eli) along that would be good because his brother is doing the same with him," Justin Zwick said. "Just go and see how they dealt with all the pressure of following in footsteps."

Jared Zwick

"My brother would have to be the biggest influence on me," Justin Zwick said. "I was a ball boy when he was playing high school football, so I was always around, hanging with his friends and throwing the ball. Ever since I could catch his pass- run', "William Zwick said. "That is what hap-es I was throwing with him. That started me off." When Justin Zwick's brother Jared, an OSU dental student, played high school football, Justin was the ball boy. When Jared Zwick's team made it to the 1994 State Championship game, Justin was on the sideline, getting an early taste of what big-time Ohio high school football was all about. "I think that helped him work harder all the way through, and he did," William Zwick said. "He has worked hard in the sports he played, in the weight room, in the summers and at home doing board drills. And it's sort of paying off."

In a big way. Justin Zwick's brother played football in college at Youngstown State, under OSU coach Jim Tressel would Justin Zwick still be verbally committed to ne Buckeyes? Who knows?

If John Cooper was still coaching at OSU,

Justin Zwick doesn't.
"I had a chance to get to know him (Tressel) under the four years my brother played for him,' Justin Zwick said. "I was working with my brother, I was up there throwing, lifting, things like that. I got to see how coach Tressel ran a program. I was around him quite a bit. So I think that had a lot to do with my commitment last spring. Just knowing the class act he is."

Jared Zwick has known that for a while. You can see the type of kids he's recruiting right now. This class they have 16 commitments. All pretty decent students. 3.0, 3.5 (grade point average) kids," Jared Zwick said. "In years to come it's going to be an exciting time in Colum-

William Zwick said 30 or 40 schools were after his son, dangling a full-ride scholarship to play quarterback. Some even hig passing schools like Florida. Let's not forget Justin Zwick likes to throw the ball. William Zwick said when Cooper was fired, the people Tressel brought in with quarterbacks/receivers coach Joe Daniels and Jim Bollman, the offensive coordinator, solidified his son's decision.

"Chris Spielman even said that when we were down for practice. He came up and said You know it used to be you would have to run, to set pened (to OSU against Wisconsin this year).

They're daring people to throw the ball.

"We've known (Tressel) for five or six years now at Youngstown," William Zwick said. "We know all his children. They associate with our kids, and it's a great experience now, especially when we get to see him. It was nice because he was Jared's position coach and we got to know him better that way and Jared did also."

Telemarketer

Since verbally committing to OSU, Justin Zwick has become a salesman for Tressel and his 2002 recruiting campaign.

"I've gotten to know all of the guys that are in my class that have committed already," Justin Zwick said. "I've been in contact with them, I've talked with them. It's a big group of guys that are coming in so far, and we're working on a couple others and hopefully we can get a couple others.

"During the season I try to lay off a little bit because I don't want to bug the guys," Justin Zwick said. "During the summer I would call them and introduce myself and start a relationship with them. They're going to be a teammate of mine, and I figure why not get a relationship going, and I think they like that too, because I'm showing interest in them.'

Careless Whisper

Ohio State President William "Brit" Kirwan violated a minor NCAA violation when speaking about Justin Zwick joining the Buckeyes at a recent Hall of Fame luncheon in Canton, Ohio, something Kirwan should not have done until February.

There is reason to be excited about a quarterback drilling a 15-yard out pattern, hitting a running back in stride in the flat, looking off his second progression and staying cool in the pocket. There is definitely reason for excitement for Buckeye fans. Not to mention in Massillon.

"I'm looking forward to it," Justin Zwick said. "It's neat to walk down while I'm down at the games (at OSU) and see all the people. You think about next year, I could be down here playing. It's

"I'll probably cry," Linda Zwick said. "You get goose bumps even when you're down there now on the field and the team comes out. It's an awesome feeling as a parent. You can't help but be

Israel rejects U.S. call to remove army

Associated Press

JERUSALEM — In a deepening confrontation yesterday, Israel turned down a blunt U.S. demand to pull its army out of six Palestinian towns in the West Bank.

Near one of the towns, Tulkarem, two Palestinians were killed yesterday by Israeli gunfire, Palestinians said. The Israeli military said its soldiers returned Palestinian fire there.

Israel sent its army into the West Bank towns after the assassination last Wednesday of ultranationalist Tourism Minister Rehavam Zeevi. The assassination was claimed by the radical Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestinian as vengeance for Israel's Aug. 27 killing of its leader.

Israeli officials said that they would not pull out of the towns until Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat turns over Zeevi's assassins and stamps out rogue military groups. But Israel TV reported yesterday that some troops might be pulled back as a gesture to the United States.

In the last eight months, Israel occasionally has sent its military into West Bank and Gaza areas that were handed over to Palestinian rule in interim peace deals. In all cases, troops pulled out within days. The current thrust is by far the largest.

In its bluntest language yet, the U.S. government told Israel on Monday to withdraw its troops and end the incursions. "No further such incursions should be made," said State Department spokesman Philip Reeker.

U.S. officials have expressed concern that a flare-up in Mideast violence might hamper efforts to keep moderate Arabs in the anti-ter-rorism coalition against the Taliban and Osama bin Laden in Afghanistan.

In Gaza, Arafat charged that Israel is ignoring the U.S. demands. "The Israeli position is a very dangerous one," he said.

In Nablus yesterday, thousands joined a funeral procession for Ayman Halaweh, a top bombmaker for the Islamic militant group Hamas, killed in an explosion in his car Monday. Palestinians blamed Israel for the blast and chanted calls for revenue at the funeral and chanted calls for revenge at the funeral.

Israel did not claim responsibility but issued a statement saying Halaweh had crafted bombs for attacks that killed 48 people. In the past year Israel has killed more than 50 Palestinians, including numerous bystanders, in targeted attacks on militants it blamed for plotting attacks on its civilians.

The confrontation with Washington is the most serious diplomatic clash since Ariel Sharon was elected prime minister eight months ago.

The incursions have also exposed cracks in Sharon's broad-based coalition, with moderates uncomfortable with the operation and suspicious that Sharon was pursuing a strategy aimed at bringing down Arafat.

Foreign Minister official Gideon Meir insisted yesterday that Israel would withdraw "immediately after it will clean up the terrorist nests which are deep-rooted there."

Palestinian officials have claimed they had outlawed the PFLP's armed wing and had made numerous arrests, but Meir said that Arafat is not moving against the militants, so Israel must the moderate Labor Party was less resolute, saying that if Israel received pledges that the Palestinians would deal with security issues "there is nothing preventing us discussing" a

Other senior Labor figures have warned that unless the operation ends, they may pull out of the government, seriously weakening it.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, also of the Labor Party, met with U.S. officials in Washington. Afterward, he told Israel TV that Israel would pull out "soon." Much of the incursion's focus has been on the biblical town of Bethlehem. Yesterday, gunfire there subsided as about 6,000 people, led by Christian clergy, marched to protest the violence. "God of peace, give our land peace," the crowd chanted as Israeli troops and tanks moved aside.

Israeli tanks held positions a few miles from the Church of the Nativity, marking the traditional birthplace of Jesus.

In his statement Monday, Reeker said Palestinians must arrest militants and stop attacks, but castigated Israel for killing Palestinian civilians. Since Israel's operations began Thursday, 28 Palestinians have been killed, many of them unarmed civilians.

Meir said civilian casualties were unfortunate but unavoidable, and drew a parallel to the U.S. operation in Afghanistan. "We see it now in Afghanistan. We see it in other places where the West is fighting terrorism," he said.

Overall, 707 people have been killed on the Palestinian side and 186 on the Israeli side in almost 13 months of violence.
