Funding to aid medical research

Faculty members spearhead efforts to raise money for scientific experiments

By Josh DeSonne
Lantern staff writer

The Ohio State slogan, "Do something great," extends beyond students and applies to faculty as well.

In the last six months, the OSU Medical Center has surpassed $100 million in research funding. The effort of many OSU faculty members has made the large sum of funds possible.

"What has changed at Ohio State, at least in terms of biomedical research, is setting higher expectations of the faculty," said Caroline Whitacre, associate vice president for health sciences research and vice dean for research in the College of Medicine and Public Health. "We want to increase our national ranking, and the best way to do that is to increase our research funding."

Whitacre said the amount of research funding has been rising for the last several years.

"At the end of the fiscal year 2000, we were at $61 million in total research funding. By the end of 2001, we were at $71 million and by the end of the 2002 fiscal year, we were at $91 million," Whitacre said.

The fiscal year ends in June of the calendar year. Between June and September, OSU passed the $100 million mark.

Brad Moore, vice president for research at the university, said the funding for research has been based on specific proposals by faculty members.

There are numerous exciting research projects going on, he said.

"One particularly nice example is the research of Dr. Lonnie Thompson and his wife, Dr. Ellen Mosely Thompson," Moore said. "They go to the tops of tropical mountains and drill holes in the glaciers at the mountain tops. They use the cores of those to understand the climate on the top of that mountain for thousands of years."

The researchers have won various prodigious awards and have been on CNN, he said.

"They're our most famous researchers," Moore said.

The Comprehensive Cancer Center of The Arthur G. James Cancer Hospital and Research Institute has applied and received funding for one of its projects.

The Cartoon Research Library could move into the Main Library as part of the library's overhaul.

No talking in the construction zone

Main Library plans renovations; special collections may be affected

By Mark Christman
Lantern staff writer

Plans are now under way to completely renovate the Main Library and possibly merge some branch libraries into the building.

Wes Boomgaarden, project manager of the renovation, said the time has come for the building, which has overlooked The Oval for nearly a century, to be upgraded.

"We plan to renovate the entire library — top to bottom. This is one of the largest academic building projects undertaken by the university," he said.

Most of the funding will be from the state, but the university must raise $30 million from private investors, Boomgaarden said.

"So far we have raised $11 million, so we are well on our way," he said.

Joe Branin, director of libraries, said space may be added by building one or two wings, adding a new entrance on the west side of the building and renovating the inside of the book tower.

Boomgaarden said some changes occurring inside the library may include expanding the computer lab and coffee bar and adding conference rooms and group study areas.

Additional changes may include bringing some of the branch libraries into the Main Library.

"We have made no definite decisions, but we are thinking of consolidating some of the special collections into the Main Library," he said.

The special collections he refers to include the Cartoon Research Library and the Theatre Research Institute, which are being considered so that they are more accessible to students and will be able to share reading rooms, Branin said.

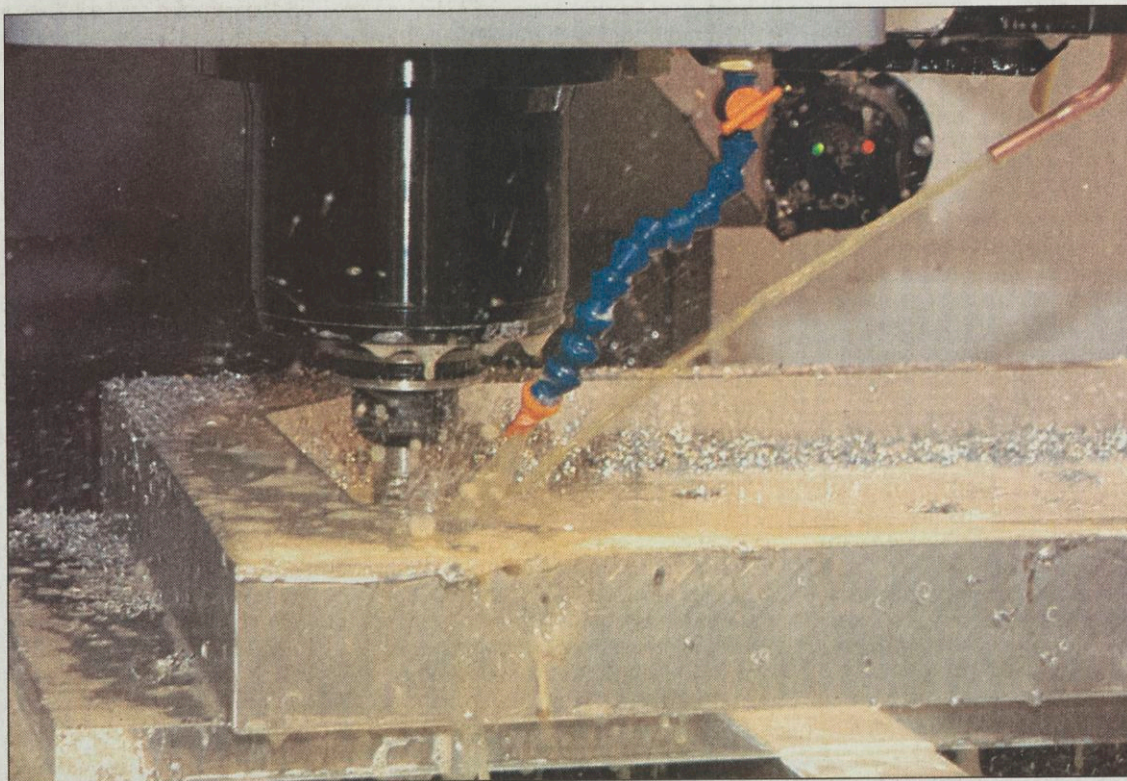

Lucy Caswell, of the Cartoon Research Library, said she thinks bringing all the special branches together is a good idea.

"This is not a done deal and still up in the air, but there are many advantages to being together," she said. "We all have the same goal, to improve and enhance library services."

Planning for the renovation began in 2001 with a feasibility study on how much it would cost and has now moved into the detailed plan-

OSU building world's largest telescope

With thirty-foot mirrors, the instrument will outshine Hubble

By Rosa Mercado

The construction of the world's most powerful telescope is underway, and Ohio State's Department of Astronomy is playing a major role.

The Large Binocular Telescope will be the world's largest telescope on a single mount and will have 25 times the light-gathering power of the Hubble Space Telescope.

"We will be able to see the faintest and most distant objects in the universe," said Patrick Osmer, chairman and professor in OSU's Department of Astronomy.

Osmer said the LBT project is significant for the department's status as one of the top 10 in the country.

"It serves as a magnet and a focal point for attracting good students and faculty, which adds strength to the program," Osmer said.

Gerald Newsom, vice chairman of the astronomy department, said the project will attract both graduate and undergraduate students interested in building scientific equipment.

"There's a tremendous need in astronomy for people good at designing optical instruments," Newsom said.

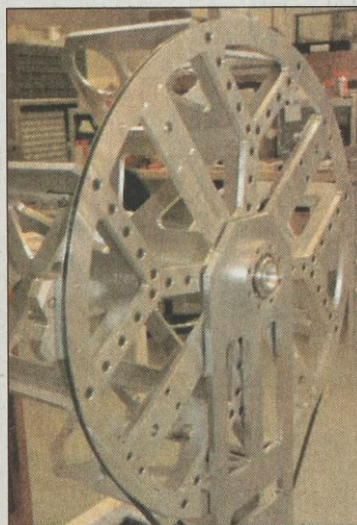

OSU's Department of Astronomy is working on two important features of the LBT.

One is the aluminization system that will place a reflective coating on the LBT's 30-foot-long primary mirrors. This work is being done at Columbus' Rickenbacker Airport.

In the basement of McPherson Laboratory, the department is building a multi-object double spectrograph.

Darren DePoy, astronomy professor and vice chairman of the instrumentation department, said they have been building the spectrograph for the past two years.

"The spectrograph gets attached to the back of the telescope," DePoy

One of several pieces of the spectrograph that is being worked on by the Astronomy department.

said. "As the telescope points its way around the sky, it carries the spectrograph with it."

Spectroscopy allows astronomers to analyze light from distant objects at both ultraviolet and optical wavelengths.

Marion campus dean bids farewell

By Laura Borchers
Lantern staff writer

Just as Ohio State's main campus is welcoming the new leadership of President Karen A. Holbrook, the Marion campus of Ohio State is saying good-bye to one of its most influential leaders — F. Dominic Dottavio.

Dottavio is the dean and director of Marion campus, but beginning July 1, he will become Heidelberg College's 13th president.

"His departure from our campus will leave a large vacuum not only for Ohio State Marion, but also for the Marion community, where he is extremely well liked and highly respected," said Debby Shade, spokeswoman for the Marion campus.

Within Dottavio's nine years at OSU, the Marion campus has seen many positive movements that have benefited students and staff such as the construction of a new library, a childcare center, a maintenance building and an outreach center.

Dottavio also led the campus to a defining moment in its history — its conversion to a residential campus. Officials have begun laying plans that schedule residential halls to open there in 2005.

"Becoming a part of the tradition and future of Heidelberg College is a wonderfully exciting opportunity," Dottavio said. "I am deeply impressed by the enthusiasm and passion for learning at Heidelberg."

Dottavio said it was the stress that Heidelberg places on the quality of the student experience that most appealed to him.

"We are indeed pleased that our search has produced such a fine candidate whom the board concurs will provide excellent leadership for Heidelberg College," said Gary Bryenton a Heidelberg board of trustees chairman.

Though Dottavio may no longer be directly serving OSU, his connections run deep. He graduated from OSU with a bachelor's degree in 1973. He earned his master's degree from Yale University and his doctorate from Purdue before returning to OSU to share his education.

"Ohio State is my alma mater and I just love this place," Dottavio said.

Low temperatures; high gas bills

By Bekah McCurdy
Lantern staff writer

Winter in Ohio brings snow, cold weather and high utility bills.

"It is not uncommon for gas bills to triple during the winter months," said Steve Jablonski, spokesman for Columbia Gas of Ohio.

The average amount spent on gas during the months of February, March and April for Columbia Gas customers is $150 each month. Average consumption is 15,000 cubic feet of gas per month during the winter. The months of August, September and October deliver average gas bills of $28 per month, with average consumption at 3,000 cubic feet of gas per month.

Higher bills during the winter months are credited to cold weather making furnaces run more and the rise of gas prices in the winter.

Jablonski suggests homeowners and renters have their heating equipment inspected and serviced every year and furnace filters changed every month in the winter.

Buckeye Real Estate offers free filters to their renters year-round.

"All they have to do is bring in their old filter and we'll give them a new one," said Julie Hutchison, leasing manager for Buckeye Real Estate.

Jablonski suggests installing a programmable thermostat or turning down the thermostat setting during the day when no one is home and at night when people are sleeping.

Homeowners should check around doors and windows to make sure there is enough weather stripping and insulation to stop the cold outside air from entering the house or apartment. Home weatherization kits can be purchased at hardware or home improvement stores for around $10.

Leona Gleason, office manager for G.A.S. Properties, said if renters need weather stripping replaced they should call the rental office and maintenance will make the repairs. As a less expensive remedy for drafty windows, Gleason sug-

Ex-Buckeye faces cocaine charges

Former Ohio State linebacker Marco Cooper appeared before a judge yesterday in a jumpsuit and handcuffs for his first hearing of a probation revocation for violating his probation after he was arrested last month for possession of cocaine.

On Dec. 16, Cooper, 20, was pulled over by police and cocaine was found in the car he was driving.

Judge Michael H. Watson set a Feb. 5 date for a second hearing for Cooper's felony count of possession of cocaine. Cooper also violated his probation by driving with a suspended license and not reporting to his probation officer.

Just one month prior, Cooper had been sentenced to five years of probation and 100 hours of community service for felony drug and weapons charges stemming from an April 27 arrest.

OHIO BRIEFS

Yo quiero ads in police cars

CHAUNCEY — Ohio motorists driving too quickly through the village of Chauncey may be pulled over by a police cruiser advertising local specials at the grocery store.

The Athens County village is considering placing local and national advertisements in rolling billboards atop their cruisers. Otherwise, the cash-strapped community will not be able to afford updated law enforcement vehicles.

Government Acquisitions of Charlotte, N.C., is offering the deal to the village. The company's Web site claims 76 communities in 23 states — including Portage, Ohio — have signed up for three-year leases.

Council President Bob Matthey discovered the police car deal on the Internet and won approval for the village to enter an agreement with Government Acquisitions.

More than one official, however, has questioned the legality of advertising on law enforcement vehicles.

Under a section of the Constitution last amended in 1912, local governments cannot raise money for any business. Commercialized cruisers, in the opinions of many, would cross the line.

Joe Case, a spokesman for Attorney General Betty Montgomery, said the attorney general's office is studying the question and should deliver an opinion within a month.

SBC plans to make basic rates stable

COLUMBUS — The Public Utilities Commission of Ohio approved a plan that will freeze rates on basic service provided by SBC Ameritech for Ohio residents.

Under the plan, rates for secondary services such as call waiting and second phone lines will be at the discretion of the company.

The plan calls on SBC to cap the price of basic service for the life of the deal and cap for two years the price of secondary services. Price increases after the initial two years would be limited to 10 percent each year.

PUCO chairman Alan Schirber told the Associated Press the plan allows competitive pricing in the local telephone market while securing rates for customer's basic needs.

Former footballer pleads guilty

FREMONT — A man who pleaded guilty to involuntary manslaughter ter in the death of a 4-year-old girl was sentenced to seven years in prison.

Jeffrey Green, a former football player at the University of Toledo, faced a maximum of 10 years in prison for the death of Samantha Moringelli. He was sentenced Monday.

The girl died two days after she was found unconscious in the home Green shared with the girl's mother, Carla Moringelli.

An autopsy found the girl died from head injuries.

Green told authorities the child was choking, and he attempted to give her CPR and later shook the girl in attempt to aid her. She died on Aug. 10, 2001.

Green, a Fremont native, was an offensive lineman from 1992 to 1994 at Toledo.

ning phase, Boomgaarden said.

An architect has been hired, and four different schemes of what changes may occur have been planned.

"We want to bring back the old grand reference hall," Boomgaarden said.

Branin said no definite plans have been made, but he estimates a cost of $100 million.

Branin said actual renovations will not take place until 2005 at the earliest.

"Our problem now is what to do when the renovation is started. We must decide how (the library) will be operated when part of it is not available," he said.

Boomgaarden said while plans are still undecided, he is looking forward to the change.

"The library will be radically changed. This is going to be a great project," he said.

Boomgaarden said any suggestions for improvements are welcome.

"We are having a hard time getting much interest because it seems so far off," he said. "We encourage students and faculty to be involved and give us their ideas of what should be done."

Students wishing to make suggestions can do so at the library's Web site, www.lib.ohio-state.edu.

gests placing a rolled-up towel on the window ledge as a buffer from the cold air.

Jablonski, Hutchison and Gleason all recommended setting the thermostat around 68-70 degrees.

"Adjust the temperature down to a comfortable level and dress accordingly, don't crank up the heat and run around in shorts and a T-shirt," Jablonski said.

Buckeye gives tips on winterizing apartments in a monthly newsletter sent to tenants. G.A.S. sent holiday letters to its tenants before the winter break with suggestions on preparing their rental units for winter weather.

Both rental companies have a few properties where utilities are included in the monthly rent. Buckeye advises tenants occupying those units to call the gas company for the previous year's budget so renters know approximately how much their heating costs will be for the winter.

If there is a sunny side of the house or apartment, Jablonski suggested opening the curtains or blinds while the sun is shining on that side and closing them when the sun goes down. This creates solar heating and can reduce the need for higher thermostat settings.

Some electrical outlets that are along outside walls can create drafts. Foam backing can be bought to seal the outlet cover from unwanted air.

DePoy said the four-meter-long spectrograph is about the size of a big car.

OSU shares in the LBT's construction with partners from around the world, and holds a one-eighth share of the LBT's cost. Partners include the University of Arizona, Italian observatories and German institutes.

The Research Institute, a private foundation in Arizona with the remaining one-eighth share, has given portions of the LBT's observing time to OSU and the universities of Notre Dame, Virginia and Minnesota.

DePoy said when construction is complete sometime in 2004, the instruments will be shipped to Mt. Graham International Observatory in Arizona, where the telescope will operate.

"The project involves faculty members from seven colleges and 15 departments. Over 200 faculty members are involved," Moore said. "There's lots of faculty working together from different fields, bringing their expertise together to work on cancer."

Peter Hoftiezer, a junior in molecular genetics and a medical center lab technician, said it is important for OSU to continue its pursuit of raising more research funding.

"The fact that OSU has received so much funding is exciting. It allows the hospital to research new treatments for patients and allows the students to learn about those new treatments that are on the cutting edge of medicine," Hoftiezer said.

Researchers are applying to several organizations for funding.

The National Institute of Health is the organization that contributes the greatest amount of research funding, Whitacre said.

"Researchers write grants about important topics in their field and then apply to the NIH. Then those are voted on by their peers who decide which have the most merit," Whitacre said. "Right now, about 25 percent of the grants submitted receive funding."

The decision of whether a grant receives funding depends on the experience of the lead investigator and their track record, she said.

Other important factors that are being considered are the quantity and quality of other proposals.

The National Science Foundation, Department of Defense, Department of Energy and the United States Army, as well as private corporations also provide OSU with funding.

"There has been a move by Congress over the last five years to double the NIH budget," Whitacre said.

The budget for next year has not been unveiled at this time.

WORLD BRIEFS

Bush hopes to wow critics again in '03

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, who stunned his critics in 2001 by winning passage of the biggest tax cut since Ronald Reagan, is hoping to repeat history with a bolder-than-expected $674 billion stimulus plan.

Both the size of Bush's new stimulus package — more than double what the White House just a week ago had been indicating would be offered — and its component parts, which are weighted heavily toward tax relief for the wealthiest Americans, demonstrate that Bush is not afraid to be bold in pushing his economic agenda.

Bush, who complained last week critics were using "class warfare" arguments, rejected the advice of some of his advisers to tone down the tax breaks for the wealthy to blunt such criticism.

Command center established in Gulf

WASHINGTON (AP) — Amid an accelerating flow of U.S. troops and weapons to the Persian Gulf region, the battle staff that would run a military campaign against Iraq is beginning to assemble at a command post in the central Gulf.

Battle planners from Central Command are heading from their permanent headquarters in Tampa, Fla., to Camp As Sayliyah in Qatar to be in position to carry out any attack order from President Bush, senior officials said Tuesday.

The officials stressed the move to Qatar does not mean war is imminent or inevitable. But it is an important step in the assembling of troops, weapons, supplies and technology needed to carry out an invasion.

The same Central Command planners were at the command post last month for a weeklong exercise before returning to their headquarters in Florida, but this time it is not an exercise.

Tens of thousands more combat forces are scheduled to flow into the region over the next few weeks. Among the forces expected to deploy from U.S. bases in the next several days are F-15E and F-15C fighters and B-1B bombers.

Iraq says U.S., UN actions out of line

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraq said yesterday the United States and Britain were preparing a "devastating" war against it and renewed charges that U.N. inspectors searching for banned weapons were exceeding their mandate.

Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz said the mission of the U.N. inspectors, who returned to Iraq in November after a four-year hiatus, went beyond the search for weapons of mass destruction.

"They are searching for other information about Iraq's conventional military capabilities, the Iraqi scientific and industrial capability in the civilian area, and also espionage questions."

Asked about similar accusations made by President Saddam Hussein on Tuesday, U.N. spokesman Hiro Ueki said U.N. officials had received no formal complaint about alleged espionage and had noticed no change in cooperation from Iraqi officials.

House to vote on $72B package

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 2.5 million jobless Americans would get 13 weeks of unemployment compensation from the federal government in legislation moving with unusual speed toward passage in the new Republican-controlled Congress.

The House yesterday was to take up the bill to restore federal benefits to more than 750,000 people who were cut off when the program expired Dec. 28. Another 1.6 million people who exhaust their state benefits would be eligible for federal aid until June 1.

The Senate already passed the $7.2 billion package Tuesday, opening the first day of a new Congress completely in Republican control. President Bush has urged Congress to move quickly. He must sign a bill by today to avoid disruptions in people getting benefit checks.

China ends promise of lifetime jobs

BEIJING (AP) — China is taking another step away from communist tradition by ending its promise of jobs for life to some 30 million government employees, state media reported Tuesday.

The government plans to institute work contracts that will require employees to pass tests on job skills, the China Daily newspaper and the Xinhua News Agency said, citing Vice Minister of Personnel Shu Huiguo.

The reports said Shu announced the change following a weekend meeting of personnel officials from around the country.

Congress' first day has pomp, bickering

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 108th Congress has opened for business sporting two new leaders, 65 freshmen and the familiar clamor of partisan conflict in the House and Senate.

"We've got to do a little less bickering and a little more problem-solving," said Sen. Norm Coleman, R-Minn., as lawmakers met Tuesday for the first time this year.

Yet within minutes, Republicans and Democrats were embroiled in battle in both chambers.

Even so, the day was dominated not by politics but the traditional pomp of Congress' first day and the personalities of its members.

In the House, Rep. Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., became minority leader, becoming the first woman to lead a party in either chamber of Congress.

Sen. Bill Frist, R-Tenn., became Senate majority leader, stepping in three weeks after Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss., relinquished the post after speaking wistfully of Strom Thurmond's segregationist presidential campaign of 1948.

Bush attempting to talk with N. Korea

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration has opened the door to dialogue with North Korea and is waiting for a response from Pyongyang.

The offer to talk is unconditional, but the administration is standing by its position that North Korea must give up its nuclear weapons programs.

"We are not going to pay again for North Korea to live up to its obligations," State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said Tuesday.

He referred to a pledge North Korea took in 1994 to freeze the programs in exchange for fuel oil and two light water reactors, a deal financed mostly by Japan and South Korea.

Still, the hard line the administration had taken toward an increasingly bellicose Pyongyang eased with the offer of a dialogue.

"If the North Koreans are prepared to reverse course and stop their aggressive pursuit of greater nuclear weapons capabilities, they know how to reach members of the international community," said Sean McCormack, spokesman for President Bush's National Security Council. "We are prepared to listen."

Flu-related deaths surge past AIDS toll

CHICAGO (AP) — Influenza has surpassed AIDS as a lethal killer and contributes to an average 36,000 annual U.S. deaths, largely because of a vulnerable aging population for whom the vaccine is often ineffective, government research shows.

The U.S. flu-related death toll surged fourfold from 16,263 in 1976-77 to 64,684 in 1998-99, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reported in yesterday's Journal of the American Medical Association. Those numbers average out to 16,000 more deaths yearly than the previous estimate of 20,000.

Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson said the news "that influenza may be taking an even larger toll than we have realized" underscores the importance of flu shots, especially for older people.

Drug breakthroughs in the mid-1990s helped reduce U.S. AIDS deaths from 51,000 in 1995 to about 15,000 in 2001. But the main weapon doctors have against flu — a vaccine — has proven disappointingly ineffective in the most susceptible population: people 65 and older.

Sixty-car pileup blamed on ice

By Catherine S. Blake
Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Nearly 60 vehicles wrecked on a six-mile stretch of Interstate 80 during the morning commute yesterday in a string of crashes blamed on fog and black ice.

The Utah Highway Patrol reported 14 crashes involving 59 vehicles, at least five of them tractor-trailers.

No immediate reports of fatalities were issued; however, 11 people were taken to hospitals. At least four people were seriously injured, including a woman in her 40s who was crushed from the chest down when her car was shoved under a burning tractor-trailer, authorities said.

"This was all caused by the weather," said patrol Capt. Alan Workman. "It was the moisture on the roads freezing over."

At one crash site, 17 vehicles had piled up, and chairs and other household items had been strung across the interstate by a tipped-over semitrailer.

lyst from Tooele, said he was headed to work on his motorcycle when people on the side of the road tried to wave him down because of the conditions. He had just stopped when he was hit by a minivan.

"It sounded like gunfire going off," he said. "It just exploded. It was just unbelievable. What you're thinking is, 'How can the cars just keep coming and coming? Can't they see this accident?"

Two Oklahoma officers will avoid civil rights charges

By Ken Miller
Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY — Two police officers who were shown on video hitting an unarmed black suspect repeatedly with nightsticks will not face civil rights charges, federal prosecutors said yesterday.

U.S. Attorney Robert McCampbell said there was no evidence that the Oklahoma City officers willfully deprived Donald Pete of his constitutional rights. He said police conduct based on mistakes or bad judgment is not enough to add up to a willful violation.

"We considered the facts that officers ceased to use force as soon as the suspect was handcuffed," McCampbell said.

Police approached Pete on July 8 after an anti-prostitution advocate called police about a couple having sex in a van in a church parking lot.

The advocate, Brian Bates, then videotaped the subsequent arrest. His video showed the two white officers striking Pete more than two dozen times.

The videotape, which was shown on television news shows across the nation, led to complaints from civil rights advocates and members of the black community. Pete has filed a tort claim with the city seeking $7.7 million in damages.

The officers, Greg Driskill and E.J. Dyer, said Pete would not comply with their orders and was trying to destroy evidence by eating marijuana. They are on restricted duty pending Oklahoma County District Attorney Wes Lane's findings.

Former governor was for 'firm' action at Kent

COLUMBUS (AP) — Before National Guard troops opened fire on Vietnam War protesters at Kent State University in 1970, Gov. James Rhodes instructed the troops to "act quickly and firmly," The Columbus Dispatch reported yesterday.

After the shooting, in which four students were killed and nine were wounded, FBI records show the governor's main concern was protecting the men who pulled the triggers, the newspaper reported.

A thick FBI file on Rhodes, obtained by the Dispatch through a Freedom of Information Act request, provides a closer look at Rhodes, who died on March 4, 2001, at age 91.

Rhodes sent the troops to Kent State on May 3, 1970, after protesters burned down the ROTC building on campus the night before.

Before the shootings, Rhodes spoke with an FBI agent and praised Director J. Edgar Hoover's dedication to "dealing firmly" with people "who would subvert our government," according to a July 18, 1969 memo.

"In Ohio, he (Rhodes) has not hesitated to use the National Guard to deal with these situations and has instructed the Guard to act quickly and firmly," the memo said.

A shooting eyewitness, June Romeo of Berea said yesterday that acting "quickly and firmly" didn't mean "giving an order to fire. That's incredible to me. It's been said there was an order to fire and I still have trouble understanding it," she said.

In a May 22, 1970, conversation with an FBI agent visiting the governor, Rhodes expressed concern that guardsmen might be charged with a crime.

Rhodes "commented at one point that if (Ohio National Guard) members were indicted in regard to this matter that he felt a million dollars should be spent to defend them, if necessary," said a memo by the agent.

A state grand jury exonerated the guardsmen but indicted 25 other people, including Kent State students and former students. Those charges were dropped a year later. Eight guardsmen were tried on federal civil rights charges in 1974 but were acquitted.

Romeo, 50, now an associate nursing professor at Cleveland State University, said Rhodes' comment on legal support to the guardsmen wasn't surprising.

"It supports the idea that he was strongly behind their actions and the Guard acted inappropriately and against what they were trained to do," she said.

One of those wounded at Kent State, Alan Canfora, 54, said Rhodes' comments show he was more interested in casting "blame on the victims at Kent State instead of blaming the killers."

Rhodes never publicly apologized for his role in the Kent State shootings, although he reportedly said in private that the day was his saddest as governor.

"It was a terrible thing," Rhodes told The Columbus Dispatch when he was 90. "But no one plans a train wreck, either. It just happened. And life goes on."

Rhodes was governor for a record 16 years, from 1963 to 1971 and from 1975 to 1983.

Cleveland kicks ads off the curb

CLEVELAND (AP) — Curbside kiosks throughout the city no longer show an exotic dancer.

Cleveland Mayor Jane Campbell said the ads for a strip club projected an improper image of the city.

Omni Media, the company that owns the kiosks, removed the ads for Penthouse Key Club this week.

Omni Media spokeswoman Amy Jenyk said the ads had appeared on 27 kiosks, most of which were downtown. The ads featured a silhouette of a scantily clad woman beneath the club's name.

Jenyk said the company did not consider the image to be indecent but agreed to pull the ads one month early.

Under a 20-year deal, Omni Media pays royalties to the city to place more than 150 kiosks on sidewalks. The kiosks usually feature neighborhood maps, public-service messages and ads.

"I applaud them for swift action in this matter," Campbell said.

Paul Noah, operations director for the strip club, said he could understand Campbell's position.

"If I were the mayor, and I was getting this kind of political pressure, I might have done the same thing," he said.

But Noah contended that his silhouetted model in shorts and a top was no more revealing than ads for lingerie stores.

Penthouse Magazine plans to license a chain of upscale strip clubs around the country.

Free speech banned in part of downtown Salt Lake City

By Debbie Hummel
Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Over the years, Mormons and non-Mormons in Utah have battled over alcohol, sex and theocratic rule. But nothing in generations has illustrated the divide more clearly than the clash over free speech on Main Street.

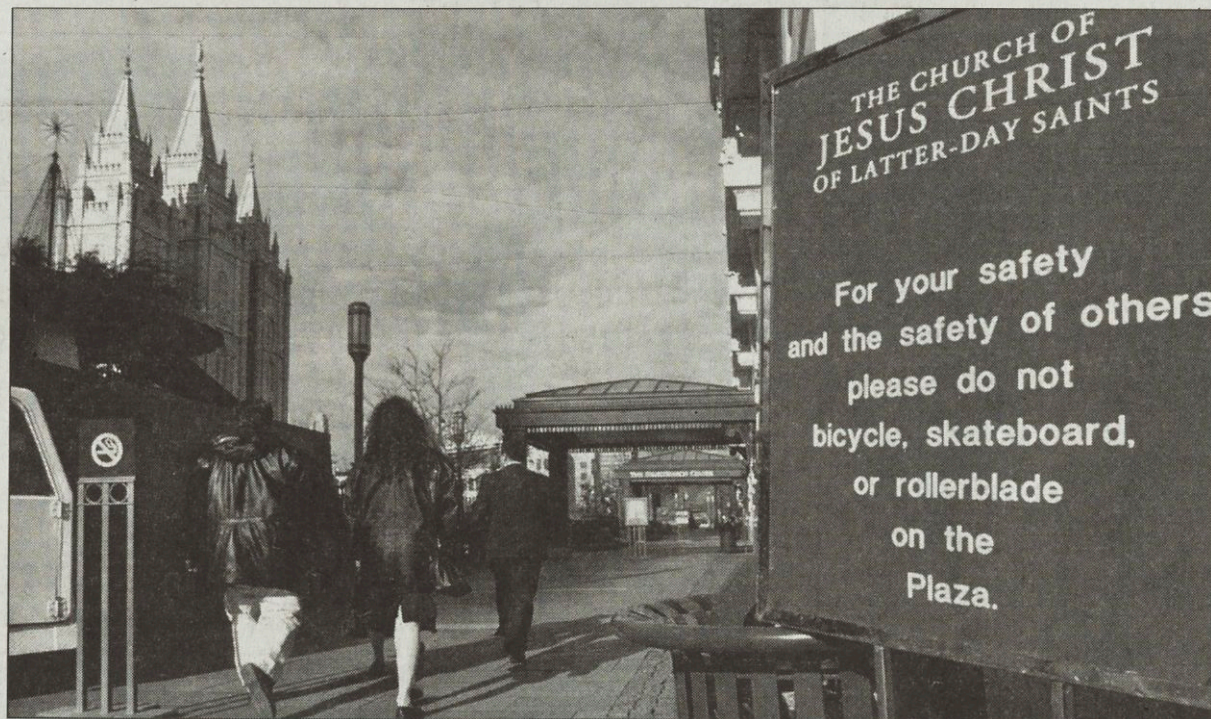

In 1999, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints bought a block of Main Street from the city for $8.1 million. The deal linked the church's downtown complex of headquarters buildings with its sacred Temple Square.

With the city's blessing, the church banned smoking, picketing, sunbathing, bicycling and obscene or vulgar speech, dress or conduct in what used to be a public space. The city insisted only that the church keep the block open for people to pass through.

The restrictions made strange bedfellows of street fundamentalists and the faithless alike, who claimed the deal bargained away First Amendment rights.

In October, the American Civil Liberties Union and the Unitarian Church won a federal appeals court ruling that threw out the restrictions and held that the site is akin to a public sidewalk when it comes to free speech.

The church has said it will take the dispute to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary. Mayor Rocky Anderson, a non-practicing Mormon and former ACLU attorney who was not in office when the deal was struck, has offered the church alternatives, including giving up all city rights to the block or imposing its own restrictions on when and where people can protest.

But the ACLU has criticized those proposals, too, and non-Mormons have seized on the issue as evidence of what they see as the church's undue influence in Utah.

"The relationship between the Mormons and the non-Mormons, I hate to define everybody else by non-Mormon, but the relationship has been pretty iffy going back 150 years," said Stephen Pace, a longtime Salt Lake City resident and critic of local government. "The thing about this Main Street plaza thing, is it has dramatically and unnecessarily picked at the scab. I don't think there's anything in the last 50 or 60 years that can compare."

All seven members of the City Council belong to the Mormon Church, and the state Legislature is at least 90 percent Mormon. Utah is about three-quarters Mormon; Salt Lake City is about 50-50, Mormons and non-Mormons.

The Main Street deal heightened the tension.

"When this happened in City Council, I was just outraged," said Craig Axford of Salt Lake City.

Moderate alcohol intake can prevent disease

By Janet McConaughy
Associated Press

Scientists know drinking can prevent heart attacks, but new research shows that how often you imbibe is a lot more important than what or how much.

As little as half a drink every other day is enough to reduce the risk, regardless of whether it is beer, red wine, white wine or liquor, the study indicates. Whether you drink it with your meal or at some other time also appears irrelevant.

"It was a surprise that — almost regardless of other factors associated with drinking — frequency of use seemed to be what reduced the subsequent risk of a heart attack," said Dr. Kenneth Mukamal of Harvard University Medical School, who led the study.

Those who drank at least three days a week had about one-third fewer heart attacks than did non-drinkers. And it made almost no difference whether the drinking consisted of half a drink or four. Those who imbibed only once or twice a week had only a 16 percent lower risk of a heart attack.

Some studies have indicated that alcohol raises the level of "good" cholesterol and also thins the blood, warding off the clots that cause heart attacks. Alcohol breaks down fairly rapidly in the body and its effects on red blood cells are short-lived, according to Mukamal.

Mukamal speculated that regular, moderate drinking is beneficial because it helps keep the blood thinned.

"We think it may be much like people take aspirin every day or every day. A little bit of alcohol on a regular basis helps keep the platelets from becoming sticky and prevents heart attacks," he said.

He noted other studies which have found people with a gene that keeps alcohol longer in their system seem to benefit the most from moderate drinking. "That helps reinforce the notion that maintaining a low level of exposure is the way to go," he said.

Mukamal and other doctors emphasized the study applies only to moderate drinkers. The dangers of heavy drinking are well-established and include alcoholism, drunken driving and damage to the liver and brain.

Plane in N. Carolina hits hangar, kills 21

By Paul Nowell
Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — A commuter plane taking off with 21 people crashed into an airport hangar and burst into flames yesterday, killing everyone on board, authorities said.

The cause of the crash — the deadliest U.S. air accident in nearly 14 months — wasn't immediately clear.

US Airways Express Flight 5481, a Beech 1900 twin-engine turboprop, was taking off in clear, windy weather from Charlotte/Douglas International Airport when it hit the corner of the hangar at full throttle just before 9 a.m., officials said.

Benjamin Witkege told The Charlotte Observer the plane attracted his attention as he and his girlfriend arrived at the airport.

"The plane was climbing too steep," said Witkege, 19, of Roanoke, Va. "I told her, 'It looks like that plane is not doing right.'"

As they stopped to watch, he said, the plane moved into a twisting dive.

Nineteen passengers and two crew members were aboard the flight, which was operated by Air Midwest and headed to Greenville-Spartanburg, S.C., said Federal Aviation Administration spokeswoman Laura Brown.

The plane took off to the south and veered sharply back toward the airport and crashed into a US Airways hangar, said airport director Jerry Orr.

"The plane is so destroyed there's not much to see," said Charlotte police spokesman Keith Bridges. "It's just a horrible sight."

The pilot contacted the tower after takeoff and indicated an emergency, FAA spokesman Greg Martin said. "However, it was cut short and the emergency was never identified," Martin said.

The National Transportation Safety Board sent a team of investigators to the scene. They likely would check into possible engine failure or pilot error, whether ice was on the wings or whether the flaps deployed correctly, said Chuck Eastlake, an aerospace engineering professor at Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University in Daytona Beach, Fla.

"Any airplane that crashes on takeoff, whether it rolled over its back or not, probably is a candidate for engine failure to look at," Eastlake said.

Martin said the plane should have had a flight data recorder and a cockpit voice recorder that could provide some information about why it crashed.

There was no immediate indication of terrorism, the FBI said.

Orr said there were no survivors aboard the plane, but three people on the ground who were thought to have been missing had been accounted for.

At Greenville-Spartanburg airport, a room had been set up for friends and relatives arriving to pick up passengers from the flight, spokeswoman Roslyn Weston said.

The plane was about 8 years old and had 15,000 hours of flight time and 21,000 takeoffs and landings, said Jonathan Ornstein, chief executive of Mesa Airlines, which owns Air Midwest.

A maintenance alert had been issued in August for the same model of airplane after attachment bolts for the vertical stabilizer were found loose on a plane during a scheduled inspection.

According to FAA records, the aircraft that crashed had reported service difficulties 10 times. In November, the company reported a leaking fuel pump, which was replaced. In May, the plane's left main landing gear wouldn't retract as it was taking off; it landed safely and the problem was fixed. Other problems were minor, including a stuck light switch, cracks on a flap and chafing on brackets that attached a flap.

The government's maintenance records did not say whether the plane's vertical stabilizer had been checked after the alert, and the company's records were not immediately available.

"We clearly are deeply concerned about this event, about our crews and our passengers," Ornstein said from the company's headquarters in Phoenix shortly after the crash. "I can only express our greatest sympathy, my personal sympathy, to all those involved."

The crash came after a year in which there were no deaths aboard a passenger or cargo airliner in the United States. It had been the third time in a decade that a year went by without a fatality on a commercial plane, according to the FAA.

Federal support holds steady for testing law

By Jennifer Loven
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush marked the first anniversary of signing a sweeping education bill yesterday, by promising anew that its emphasis on school and student accountability will improve academic performance.

Some states have complained that the No Child Left Behind Act, with its heavy emphasis on testing students, forced state and local governments to spend money on new mandates without financial help from Washington. Bush rejected the charge and said he will propose holding the federal commitment steady at $387 million, the same level as the current year.

BUSH

"This issue is not just about money," he said during a speech in the White House's East Room. "We must spend money more wisely. We must spend money on what works, and we must make sure we continue to insist on results for the money we spend."

Bush also approved five state plans for ensuring yearly education improvements, part of an effort to show progress on the school reforms enacted last year.

Noting he signed the bill into law a year ago, Bush said "the time for excuse-making has come to an end."

The No Child Left Behind Act requires annual testing and awards more control to families with children in poorly performing schools.

The plans receiving Education Department approval were those from Massachusetts, New York, Indiana, Colorado and Ohio, White House press secretary Ari Fleischer said.

The speeches and announcements allow Bush to draw attention once again to the politically popular topic of education. Touting the law has become a crowd-pleasing staple of the president's speeches over the past year and is seen by White House political advisers as an important component of Bush's 2004 re-election campaign.

Under the law, states must devise and offer tests in reading and mathematics each year, for every child in grades three through eight, beginning in fall 2005. Under current law, states are required to test students three times only, throughout their K-12 education in reading and math.

Schools with stagnant scores get more money, but students must be offered the option of transferring to better-performing public schools.

After three years, a school district must offer tutoring at its expense. After four years, it must begin paying transportation costs of students who opt to attend other schools.

By the end of the month, states must give the federal Education Department their plans for holding schools accountable for making progress each year, reporting performance and helping their students achieve proficiency in the tested subjects. Several states submitted their plans early.

If school districts don't perform well enough they could lose federal funds.

Democrats planned to hold a news conference and send Bush a letter yesterday to protest what they say is inadequate funding for states to comply with the law.

"America's public schools cannot overcome the enormous obstacles they face on the cheap," said the letter being orchestrated by Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass. "If we fail to act on our responsibilities now, we will be setting up our children to fail in the future."

Fleischer fired back at Kennedy, saying Massachusetts officials reported they have "ample" funding and that federal funding for programs affected by the new law increased 49 percent from 2000 to 2002.

Third budget cut dependent on taxes from holiday sales

By John McCarthy
Associated Press

COLUMBUS — Legislative leaders fear deficit estimates will be grim, forcing them to slash state agency budgets for the third time in 18 months. Gov. Bob Taft is hoping only limited cuts will be needed.

Taft hopes that a small increase to cuts already in place will allow the state to end the 2003 budget year in the black on June 30, as required by law.

Through the first six months of the budget year, revenue has fallen short of expectations by $64.8 million, said Tom Johnson, Taft's budget director.

House Speaker Larry Householder and Senate President Doug White said Tuesday that estimates are not complete, but they suspect the deficit could be as high as $250 million.

"We know we have a responsibility to be more serious about this in the next days and weeks. Right now, I just don't know," said White, a Manchester Republican.

Householder, a Glenford Republican, said the timing is troublesome, since the state has just six months left to close a deficit with budget cuts. Increasing revenue sources also would be difficult with so little time remaining, he said.

"They (cuts) have to be much more dramatic than what they have to be at the beginning of the two-year cycle because you don't have much time left," he said.

Johnson would not comment on the $250 million figure. He and Taft are waiting until sales tax receipts from the holiday shopping season are available, probably in the first week of February, to estimate the size of the deficit.

"The Office of Budget and Management is reviewing the situation and will make recommendations to me in the near future with respect to whether we need to make a correction in this year's rates of spending, which is, I would say, probable that we'll have to do that," Taft said.

The state twice has had to close holes in the $45 billion two-year budget that took effect July 1, 2001. The state cut agency spending, increased the cigarette tax by 30 cents a pack, began taxing trusts and used other targeted tax increases to close a deficit totaling $3.4 billion.

About $65 million left in the state's rainy day fund will be available to help fill the current hole, Johnson said.

Taft was scheduled to meet privately with his Cabinet yesterday to tell agency directors to get ready for more belt-tightening, spokeswoman Mary Anne Sharkey said. Rather than cutting new programs, Taft hopes that cuts already in place can be increased slightly, she said.

"A lot of it is going to be a continuation of what already has been implemented. For example, in the governor's office nobody has had a pay raise for 18 months," Sharkey said. "Any prudent Cabinet member who is getting general revenue money would be wise to hold off hiring anyone who is not essential."

Barley's
brews up
good time

What business do I have reviewing a restaurant, you ask? No, I don't have any formal training, but I have been eating every day for over 22 years, often multiple times, so I should be an expert, right?

Anyway, my first review takes us to Barley's Brewing Company, located at 467 N. High St. near the North Market. The eating area of this alehouse is about as wide as a pencil and fits three tables across, so you can imagine how close your neighbors are crowded around you on a weekend night.

We were stuck with the center table, which should have seated two rather than four. I recommend asking for one of the side booths if available. The bar area, on the other hand, has plenty of surrounding space and is open after the kitchen closes.

The décor consists of a nice selection of European commercial art bounded by an attractive array of wood floors, walls, tables, etc. The restaurant provides plenty of noise with the food — whether it's from the diners or the Allman Brothers blasting overhead — but hey, it's a brew pub, so what do you expect?

Barley's has a large selection of beers brewed right in the building, including seasonal brews and a nice variety of scotch for those of you who are of drinking age and not driving. Each of us sampled the Scottish ale and the pale ale, and the consensus was that the pale ale was much better, although the Scottish ale did have a certain zest to it. Gallon jugs of these tasty local brews are available to take home at the restaurant and can be found in some area supermarkets and carry-outs.

For starters we tried a full order of Barley's Unconventional Wings ($7.25/4.95 half). These wings are char-grilled and not deep-fried like most places, which upset fellow reviewer Gutter (a.k.a. the human garbage disposal), but everyone else enjoyed the switch, not to mention the plump, full wings.

We also shared a full order of Mildred's Sauerkraut Balls ($5.95/3.45 half). Don't be scared by the name — these batter-fried clumps of sauerkraut, cheese and Italian sausage are delicious. If you're not a big fan of sauerkraut, don't worry; you can hardly taste it. We hardly had time to finish the appetizers before the main dishes arrived, and speaking of service, the wait staff was always on its feet and quick to refill our drinks.

Keeping with the theme of the sauerkraut balls, co-reviewer L-Jo had the Turkey Nut Burger ($7.45), noted on the menu as a Barley's classic. "It tasted like it was done on a George Foreman," she said, "which isn't necessarily a bad thing."

Gutter went with the Creole Burger ($6.95) which wasn't as hot as he expected it to be. Nor was he a fan of the tomato paste that smothered the burger: "The burger itself was good though," he said. "It was cooked perfectly and a good size."

With Buffalo chicken being a staple in my diet, and fish and chips tragically being left off of the menu, I went with the Buffalo Chicken Wrap ($7.45). It wasn't bad, but not great. There were more tomatoes and lettuce than chicken, which was dried out anyway. The fries, on the other hand, were pretty good and the others agree.

My brother Ryan tried the Seafood Pasta Florentine ($13.95) a chef's special that night. "They should have called it salmon surprise. There was only a gaggle of mussels and only four shrimp and the succubus (L-Jo) ate one," he said. "I think I would opt for a sandwich next time."

The restaurant also offers soups, salads and veggie entrees such as the Garden Pasta ($10.95). The dessert menu is small, yet varied and everything is under $5, including the apple pie ($4.95) served à la mode with a pecan topping and caramel glaze.

Overall, Barley's gets high marks for its pub grub, and it's not a bad place for a night out either.

Nicholas Gill is a senior in English and journalism and can be reached for comment at gill.147@osu.edu. He is now, for a limited time, accepting recommendations on future restaurants to review in the vicinity of this Hong Kong of college campuses, so it's now or never.

Wexner to host
'Lime'

By Eric Christ
Lantern arts writer

ZT Hollandia, a theater ensemble group from the Netherlands, will intrigue people in Columbus by bringing its small-scale theater to the Wexner Center to perform a one-man play, "Quick Lime," today through Saturday.

The story of "Quick Lime" is based on historical events which transpired in Nazi-era Germany, and revolves around would-be revolutionary Marinus van der Lubbe. van der Lubbe is the man responsible for the burning of the Reichstag building, an event which would have repercussions he did not expect.

"Hitler grossly exaggerated the damage that this fire had caused, and made it seem as if it was something on the scale of Sept. 11 here. He actually faked the pictures documenting the fire," said Charles Helm, director of performing arts at the Wexner Center.

Hitler used the event and van der Lubbe's leftist politics as a pretext to jail or exile communists and left-wing sympathizers all over Germany declaring martial law, Helm said.

Karen Simonian, spokeswoman for the Wexner Center, stressed it is not necessary for audience members to be knowledgeable about the history of World War II or international theater to enjoy the performance.

"This performance will be of interest to a wide variety of people," Simonian said. "Certainly history buffs because it is about a specific moment in time, but also anyone who is just interested in the nature of being a good-intentioned revolutionary."

"Quick Lime" is more than a simple recounting of historical events.

"As a theatrical experience, it's really about bigger things — individuals in society, the attempt to put your stamp on history and make change — and how that can sometimes go terribly awry," Helm said.

Because the gallery areas of the Wexner Center are under construction, theater performances will take place in the performance space of Mershon Center as black-box productions, a setup which allows a close, intimate setting and gives the spectators a view of the action, Simonian said.

The collaboration between the Wexner Center and Ohio State provides student performers the opportunity to interact with working professionals and witness a rehearsal before the actual performance, said Lesley Ferris, chairwoman of the theater department.

"It's just a great opportunity for the students to interact with a major international theater company," Ferris said.

ZT Hollandia incorporates a number of diverse elements such as experimental lighting, an electronic score and puppetry to recount van der Lubbe's story.

"It's an interestingly-staged show, not just a guy on stage talking to you. There is more going on," Simonian said.

ZT Hollandia will perform "Quick Lime" at 8 p.m. today and tomorrow and at 3 p.m. and 8 p.m. on Saturday at the Mershon Center. Admission is $16 for the public and $10 for students.

'Sex' will soon
leave the city

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Sex and the City" will end after its sixth season, with the final episode airing early next year.

The Emmy-winning comedy will stretch its sixth season over two years, HBO announced Tuesday at a meeting of the Television Critics Association.

Twenty episodes will begin production in March. Twelve will be broadcast this summer and the rest starting in January 2004.

HBO didn't entirely shut the door to more episodes, however.

"All the principals involved felt that this was a strong place to go off," said Carolyn Strauss, HBO's executive vice president in charge of original programming. "If somewhere along the line they change their mind and feel that they could do more of this, it would be fantastic."

UNITS offers premium cable options after end of free trial

By Gillian Irwin
For the Lantern

Students living in campus housing now have the option of ordering premium cable channels through UNITS.

During autumn quarter, students received standard cable with ten free premium channels. Upon their return to campus for winter quarter, the free trial had ended. To continue receiving the channels, students now must order packages through UNITS.

The ten premium channels available are HBO, HBO2, HBO Signature, Cinemax, Showtime, Showtime Too, Showtime Beyond, The Movie Channel, Encore and Starz!

Jamie Lambert, outside plant manager of UNITS, said those premium channels were chosen based on past customer feedback and surveys.

To obtain premium service, students must go through UNITS and obtain a cable box. There is no charge for equipment, Lambert said.

She said that UNITS is offering free installation through Jan. 31. Orders placed after that date will include a $10 fee.

Rates for the packages were decided based on market rates in the Columbus metropolitan area, Lambert said.

Pricing of packages varies, ranging from $40 per month for all ten premium channels, to $8.95 a month for only Cinemax or the Encore and Starz! package.

The HBO package includes three HBO channels and costs

$14.95 per month. The Showtime package offers three forms of Showtime and The Movie Channel for $11.95 a month.

Other Ohio colleges also offer students premium channels, while options and prices vary by school. Several schools said student interest was low, citing each school's own movie channel as the reason.

At Bowling Green, HBO and Cinemax are part of general cable service offered to students, said Nick Hennesy, associate director of resident life. He said students have the option of ordering other premium channels, but most do not. He also said the student government offers a channel that shows recent movies.

"That satisfies the bulk of students," Hennesy said. "There are so many things on the channel. There are also videos and DVDs available at the front desk."

At Kent State, students can get the three HBOs for one price, said Peter Horwitz, senior LAN administrator. He said there is an additional cost for Showtime and any other channels after that, though many students do not take advantage of what is offered.

"Though numbers are up from last year, interest in the extra channels has been low," Horwitz said. "Part of the reason is because we have our own premium movie channel."

Ohio University offers HBO as part of its basic service to all students for no extra fee. Brian Thompson, operations manager of administrative services, said OU also has its own movie channel that runs 20 new movies per month.

"All students receive the same bulk service within their residential room," Thompson said. "Bulk service (is) billed as part of general room charge. No additional fees apply."

OSU also has its own movie channel that shows recently released movies, but UNITS is not concerned about competing with the OSU movie channel, said Lambert, because most students want the premium channels for original programming, such as "The Sopranos."

Lambert said UNITS will not know until next autumn how students really feel about the new service, but things are going well so far.

"Many orders are coming in," Lambert said. "The entire campus enjoyed the quarter of free service."

She said UNITS hopes to announce more services soon, including digital cable and pay per view.

"(We) want to offer service comparable to when people move off campus," Lambert said.

Project celebrates unknown hero

By Katie Beyl
Lantern arts writer

A hero is often measured by his or her contributions, and two graduate students are working to keep the memory of a family hero's contributions alive.

"When I am little again," a combination of dance, video and motion-capture animation showing at Sullivant Hall, serves as a tribute to a man whose name has nearly been forgotten.

For graduate students Kareen Balsam and collaborator Vita Berezina-Blackburn, their latest production is presented as a "dance memorial" to honor Janusz Korczak, a figure who has had a tremendous impact on Balsam's life and family.

"He's an amazing person who has touched many lives. He would consider me to be his ancestor," Balsam said of Korczak. "I'm a survivor of his teachings."

In Korczak, Balsam's grandfather, who was living in an orphanage in Warsaw during World War II, found a figure whose dedication and love left ripple effects on generations to come. Korczak, a scholar and author, had the opportunity to escape extermination in Nazi concentration camps. Seeing that his wards were being sentenced to death in the camps, he traded his freedom and life in order to comfort them before their demise.

"I wanted to do a piece where I could express the emotion that I carry for this kind of gratitude, and I also wanted to remind people here of a forgotten hero," Balsam said.

From the story to the technical difficulty, Berezina-Blackburn, who collaborated with Balsam on the project's technical aspects, said she has never worked on such a multifaceted project.

"This is groundbreaking for me. This scale of motion-capture projects has never been done here before. It's the first at OSU," Berezina-Blackburn said. "There are very few projects with dancers and motion-capture technology."

The complexity in motion-capture lies in the cost and skills required to properly capture the dancer's movement. Working with the Advanced Computing Center for Art and Design, both Balsam and Berezina-Blackburn were able to visually represent dance in a non-traditional manner.

"(Motion-capture) is very interesting. It's very different than looking at a video of people dancing, or animation and dance. Traditionally, not enough dance is animated," Berezina-Blackburn said. "The movements are so subtle and complex. You have to be a very good animator to capture the dancer."

Tiffany Cunningham, a third-year graduate student in dance, was interested when she heard about Balsam's project. Balsam choreographed four dancers to represent her mother, grandfather, Korczak and herself. Cunningham, who played the role of Balsam's mother, had never been exposed to motion-capture before.

Kareen Balsam's historical dance project "When I am Little Again" is on display in the Sullivant Hall Rotunda.

"I think for me, the mystery was, 'How is this going to come together?' When I saw what she's doing in the lab — how it's coming together — it's beautiful, it's invigorating. I see a different level than what I'm used to as a performer," Cunningham said.

While the editing process to capture motion properly was difficult at times, the use of technology added a new dimension to Balsam's tribute.

"The fact that in her dance, she combines herself, her mother, grandfather and Janusz Korczak, she can meet in an imaginary space, and meet with her ancestors," Berezina-Blackburn said. "Here she cannot do it other than through this imaginary virtual space. Dance is the way she communicates her feelings, the way they can talk."

Looking to memorialize the past, Balsam's memoir is choreographed in a looping narrative, with no predetermined beginning or end. The performance's total sequence lasts 12 minutes. Balsam said everyone is welcome to come and go as they wish.

"I'm wanting people to be inspired by the connection of generations — the trivia of everyday family life and the perspective of history," Balsam said.

"When I am little again" will run from Jan. 9-10 from 6-8 p.m.

Spartans up next for women

By Matt Baker
Lantern sports writer

The No. 23 Ohio State women's basketball team will look to improve on that ranking when they battle the Michigan State Spartans tonight at the Schottenstein Center.

The Buckeyes (10-2, 1-0) are coming off an upset victory over the Texas Longhorns on Sunday. They are undefeated at home this season at 7-0.

Ashley Allen had one of her best scoring games of the season with 17 points.

"I missed my first three shots and Coach told me I need to be more aggressive. After that I just played," Allen said.

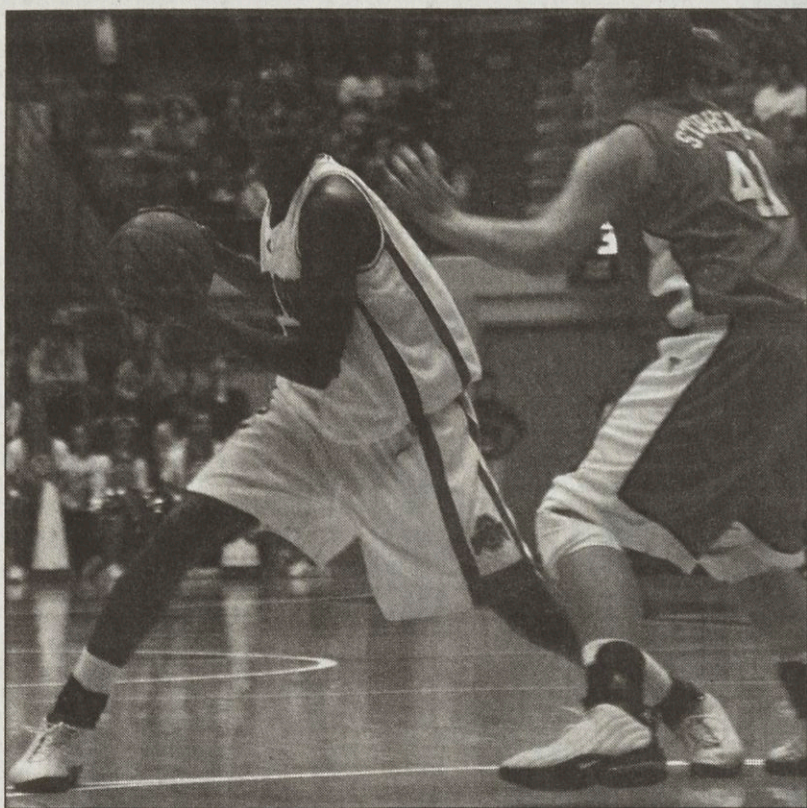

Allen believes it was more mental than anything in finding her shooting stroke. She leads the Big Ten in three-point shooting with a percentage of .475. But she is not satisfied and says improvements can be made.

"I need to get better at boxing out so I can become a better rebounder," Allen said.

The Spartans (7-5, 1-1) will be entering this game after an upset victory of their own with a win over annual powerhouse Purdue.

They are led by freshman Lindsay Bowen, who is already starting to enter the freshman record books at MSU.

She sealed the Spartan upset of Purdue with a game clinching three pointer late in the game, and has yet to miss a free throw as a Spartan this year.

The Spartans have been hit by the injury bug which the OSU program has been so familiar with in the last few years.

Starting the season with 12 players, they are now down to only 9. This has forced them to not only play many of their starters for many minutes, but also even turn to their field hockey team to borrow players.

The Buckeyes have avoided the numerous injuries so far, which may be a contributing factor to their strong play and ranking. They have not been ranked since January 1999.

However, this does not impress OSU women's basketball coach Jim Foster.

"It's something we do not even talk about," Foster said. "It just gives you guys something to write about."

Foster did not see the Spartan upset of Purdue but knows they will present a tough challenge.

"They are a good solid basketball team who play a tough match-up (zone) that is a little different than others," Foster said.

Foster said he believes at this point in the season, the Buckeyes should be familiar with anything an opponent can throw at them.

"It all depends on how you respond when you see a lot of it that will determine your success," Foster said.

He also has been happy with the bench contribution the Buckeyes have received this year, especially from D'wan Shackleford and Didi Reynolds.

"I feel like we have seven starters, and when you have that much experience coming into the game, it doesn't weaken yourself, and that experience is invaluable," Foster said.

Injury may cripple men's hoops team

By Amanda Manser
Lantern sports writer

Injuries have plagued the Ohio State men's basketball team all season and the Buckeyes may be without another of their top players when they travel to No. 25 Michigan State tonight to kick off Big Ten Conference play.

Starting shooting guard Sean Connolly is listed as day-to-day with a sprained left ankle and has not practiced all week.

The timing could not be any worse, as the Spartans (8-4) were predicted to finish at the top of the Big Ten in the preseason.

OSU (7-4) is coming off an overtime loss last Saturday to No. 24 Louisville and looks to kick off the conference season with an upset.

"I think it's a great start," said guard and Michigan native Brent Darby. "It's one of the toughest places to play probably in the country. It will be a battle. It's a great situation for us."

The Buckeyes will also suit up a new player for the battle against MSU. Freshman Nate Salley, a reserve safety for the OSU football team, practiced with the basketball Buckeyes on Tuesday. Salley returned home from the Fiesta Bowl Saturday night and was knocking on the door at basketball practice on Monday.

"We're happy to have him," OSU men's basketball coach Jim O'Brien said of his new addition. "I don't think there's a downside to it and we'll see. He just might be able to help us out."

The team has welcomed Salley with open arms, Darby said. Salley averaged 18 points per game at St. Thomas Aquinas High School in Fort Lauderdale, Florida. Salley actually discussed playing both football and basketball with O'Brien during his recruiting process.

"I just want to come out, give my best effort and do what I do," Salley said. "I'm pretty confident — not cocky or anything — but I believe that I can do it."

Salley will be a member of the scout team during practice and also a much-needed extra man on the bench for O'Brien's squad.

The Buckeyes will need all the men they can get against yet another deep and talented Spartan team.

Along with Connolly, sophomore guard Brandon Fuss-Cheatam also missed practice on Tuesday. Fuss-Cheatam continues to recover from knee surgery.

"It's hard to find a set rotation," O'Brien said. "I think we're making some progress. We have to deal with what the situation is and we are doing the best we can with that."

Hockey coach expects more from unbeaten Buckeyes

After slow first period, No. 9 team puts on pressure and shut out Findlay 4-0

By Nick Houser
Lantern sports writer

After blanking Findlay 4-0 and putting up a season-high 47 shots Tuesday night, one would think Ohio State men's hockey coach John Markell would be happy.

With the No. 9 Buckeyes extending their unbeaten streak to eight games with a win over the Oilers at the Schottenstein Center, Markell is expecting more as his team rolls into CCHA play.

The latest victory in the Buckeyes' streak, which dates back to Dec. 6, saw them statistically post some of their best numbers of the season over a budding Findlay program.

OSU (14-4-2) recorded three power play goals and held the Oilers to just 15 shots, tying the second lowest total allowed this season. Freshman goalie Dave Caruso also recorded his second consecutive shutout.

But the numbers were deceiving for Markell, who felt his squad was not playing like one ranked in the top 10 nationally.

"I was pleased by our 4-0 effort," he said. "In games like this, you hope to get some guys in the goal-scoring column. I would have liked to see us score more than four goals on 47 shots, but you have to give credit to their goalie."

After a scoreless first period, the Buckeyes were able to power up their offense thanks to junior Scott May's sixth goal of the season with 11:33 left in the second period. Taking a pass from center R.J. Umberger, which glided from right to left through a crowd of defenders, May punched the puck into the open left side of the net to complete the power play.

OSU had been firing up close all night to that point and it finally found Findlay goalie Kevin Fines out of position.

The opening score severely dashed any upset hopes the visitors may have had.

"If we would have scored in the first period, then we would have gained some momentum and kept on going," May said. "But, we scored in the second period and were able to get fired up."

The Oilers achieved their opening strategy to stay in contention through the opening moments in hopes of avoiding the same 10-0 blowout from their last visit to Columbus, in 2000.

"The key for us was the first 10 minutes tonight," said Findlay men's hockey coach Craig Barnett. "We went up to Kalamazoo (Mich.) last week and were down 3-0 after the first 10 minutes and that's a long hill to climb."

Barnett was impressed by his goalie's early effort.

"Kevin (Fines) made some great saves for us early in the game that kept it close," he said. "He played very well but was tired at the end."

After breaking onto the scoreboard, the offense started to come together for OSU.

The tandem responsible for the initial tally reversed roles with just more than 20 seconds remaining in the second period. Only five seconds into a five-on-three power play, Umberger took a pass just in front of the blue line from May and fired it past Fines.

Umberger has scored 11 goals during the team's winning streak.

For his effort, Umberger was named the Division I Top Player of the Month for December by the Ice Hockey Collegiate Commissioners' Association yesterday.

Umberger won three consecutive CCHA Offensive Player of the Week awards last month. Also during the stretch, the first-round pick of the Vancouver Canucks and 2001 CCHA Rookie of the Year scored four game-winning goals and also contributed a game-tying score.

The offense made up for lost time in the third for another pair of goals. With 9:59 left in the contest, sophomore JB Bittner scored as he fired a shot just in front of the blue line. Luke Pavlas and Doug Andress assisted him.

Paul Caponigri, assisted by Ryan Kesler and May, closed up shop for the hosts when he converted on a power play opportunity with 1:26 left to play.

OSU will return to CCHA play when they host Markell's alma mater Bowling Green for a two-game series starting Jan. 16.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

The Lantern will not publish illegal advertising or the advertising of illegal products or services. The Lantern reserves the right to reject advertising that denigrates individuals, groups or organizations based on race, gender, nationality, ethnicity, religion, mental or physical capacity, veteran's status, age or sexual orientation. The Lantern Business Manager will refer questionable advertising to the Publications Committee of the School of Journalism and Communication. The committee will recommend a decision on whether to publish the advertising to the Director of the school.

- Complete name, address and telephone number for each advertiser is required.
- Copy must be furnished by noon three days before publication, except for special publications whose deadlines will be announced.
- An advertisement is required to occupy at least as many inches in height as columns in width. Any advertisement exceeding 18 inches in height will be considered a "full column" (21 inches) advertisement and charged accordingly.
- Make-goods and adjustments will be considered for those advertisements only where errors occur in (a) business or group name, address, or phone number, (b) item price or (c) date, time or place of event. The error must be solely the fault of the Lantern. Adjustments will not exceed the cost of the advertisement and will be based on the portion of the advertisement nullified by the error. Minor spelling errors will not qualify for adjustment. Complaints must be registered with the Business Manager within 45 days of publication to qualify; otherwise the advertiser accepts full responsibility.
- Guaranteed position is sold at the Business Manager's discretion.
- A composition charge may apply to any changes, revisions or cancellations made after deadline.
- No proof will be furnished for any advertisement received after deadline or for an ad smaller than seven column inches.
- If the Lantern finds it necessary to stop contracted advertising because of nonpayment, the advertising agreement will be violated and the advertiser subject to a "re-bill" fee.
- The Lantern reserves the right to require prepayment for advertising, or to reject advertising, if the advertiser is delinquent in payment, or if the advertiser's credit is impaired. Advertisers must prepay all advertising until a satisfactory credit rating with the Lantern is established. A certified check or money order is required for out-of-town advertisers.
- Contract advertisers will furnish the Lantern with a "rate-holder" ad meeting contract minimums for use in any contract period for which the advertiser does not provide an ad.
- A tearsheet will be furnished for all display advertising run in the Lantern. Additional tearsheets are available (limit 15) provided the advertiser requests them from the Lantern office prior to publication.
- The advertiser agrees to indemnify and hold harmless the Ohio State University, its Board of Trustees and its officers, agents and employees from and against any and all loss, cost and expense, including reasonable attorney fees, resulting from the publication by the Lantern of the advertiser's advertisement.
- Advertisers in the Lantern agree that they will not represent themselves in any way as being endorsed by the Ohio State University.
- A mail-order advertiser is required to submit a sample "proof-of-product" prior to publication.
- Advertisers must request the return of their original ad materials; the Lantern will dispose of such materials 60 days after their first publication.
