Tuition increase approved by board

By Sean O'Connor
Lantern staff writer

The Ohio State University Board of Trustees unanimously approved the proposed 9 percent tuition increase on Friday.

"Our tuition proposal will allow the university to maintain its commitment to academic quality — even during the current recession — which is critical to our students as well as to Ohio's longer-term economic vitality and competitiveness," said Provost Ed Ray, who made the presentation to the board.

With the increase, tuition for a full-time student enrolled before summer quarter 2002 will now be $5,658 for three quarters, an increase of $468. Tuition for a student enrolled between summer quarter 2002 and spring quarter 2003 will be $6,174, an increase of $510. Students who enroll for summer quarter 2003 and beyond will pay $6,474.

Tuition for current non-resident undergraduates at the Columbus campus will increase 6 percent, an additional $188 per quarter, for a total of $15,645 per year. Incoming out-of-state students will pay $16,461 in tuition and general fees next year.

Ray said the tuition increases were based on the state budget Gov. Bob Taft proposed. However, if an alternative form of the state budget is adopted, the tuition increases may change.

"We reserve the right to come back to the board for further discussion," Ray said.

The board would have to approve any future changes to the tuition increases. The board also approved the purchase of about 26.4 acres of property on Ackerman Road. The price tag for the land and eight buildings is about $16.3 million.

High Street will be cut down to two lanes

Congestion around south campus may increase today as roads are closed or narrowed for construction purposes. High Street is limited to one lane in each direction in the area of the South Campus Gateway. The lane restrictions will continue through August.

West 11th Avenue from High Street to Wall Alley is closed until around June 10. East 11th Avenue will close from High Street to Pearl Street on May 13 and will be reopened on Aug. 28.

The closures are caused by the installation of storm sewers for the Gateway project.

Union reaches agreement with university

The Communications Workers of America Local 4501 approved a new three-year contract with Ohio State administration.

The contract was approved last week and will last until March 31, 2006. The contract includes raises of 2.5, 2.5 and 2 percent for each of the contract's years.

In 2000, the CWA Local 4501, whose members comprise most non-teaching and non-administrative positions at OSU, went on strike for three weeks, hampering many OSU services.

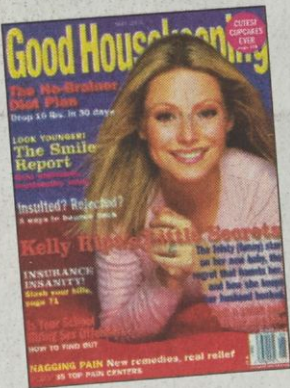

Representatives from both sides agreed the contract was reasonable for both the university and the union.

Good Housekeeping includes OSU pain center among top 35 in the nation

By Anne Allred
Lantern staff writer

The Ohio State University Medical Center has one of the top 35 pain centers in the country, according to the May 2003 issue of Good Housekeeping.

"We are highly interventional in doing procedures or operations to hopefully cure chronic pain," said Jill Niese, nurse manager of the pain center.

The Center for Pain Control is strictly for outpatients and is part of the department of anesthesiology. It treats from 500 to 600 patients every month.

Patients of the center are either pre-surgery, trying to exhaust all possibilities of avoiding surgery, or are experiencing pain following surgical procedures. The center's patients suffer from ailments ranging from migraines to nerve damage.

"Most patients are suffering from chronic low back pain (and) have had back surgeries in the past," Niese said.

The pain center, despite its recent recognition, has been part of the medical center only since June 2002. New technologies and procedures are part of the reason OSU was recognized as most proficient in treatment of chronic pain.

"Right now in the U.S., OSU can do all the most advanced procedures. There is nothing we can't do here that any other clinic, from the Cleveland clinic to Harvard (can do)," said Dr. Todd Schulte, the pain center's interim director.

One of the new procedures performed at the center is intradiscal electrotherapy as an alternative to surgery. The procedure is a new way to shrink down damaged disks while avoiding open surgery. About 60 percent of patients get better with this procedure, Schulte said.

Other new procedures include spinal cord stimulation to replace damaged nerves and lumbar fusion.

"Everybody gets somewhat better. There is almost always something we can do," Schulte said.

Good Housekeeping also named Dr. Steven Severyn as OSU's top pain doctor. Severyn is credited with being a large part of the pain center's success.

"I think Dr. Severyn has done a great job," Schulte said.

Severyn held the position of director of the center until he was deployed in February of this year; he is a member of the Army National Guard. In Severyn's absence, Schulte has filled the position of director.

"Fifty total staff in the entire University Hospital had the potential to be deployed. He's the only physician," said

Fraternity gives meals on wheels

By Sarah Snyder
Lantern staff writer

The young men of Sigma Phi Epsilon worked in two shifts Friday night to cook, prepare and package at least 1,530 meals to be distributed to Columbus and Cleveland area shelters the following day.

"This is the second year we've done this, and this year we have really improved on the quality of food and the number of meals we were able to make," said Dave Yeh, a sophomore in marketing and the event coordinator.

"Local businesses like SBX, CollegeTown, Men's Warehouse and a few others donated money for the project, along with money we made through fund-raisers," Yeh said.

The project was brought to Sigma Phi Epsilon's attention last year when Scott Phillips joined the fraternity as a freshman. His family's restaurant had been pursuing the project for years, and Phillips wanted to use the fraternity to put it on a larger scale.

"My grandma started this in Cleveland in 1993 at her restaurant, Guarino's," said Phillips, now a sophomore in political science and vice president of Sigma Phi Epsilon.

"She started out doing 200 meals on Christmas and Thanksgiving. I took over my freshman year of high school, and we started producing around 1,000 to 1,500 meals. Then I brought the idea to Columbus when I came here," Phillips said.

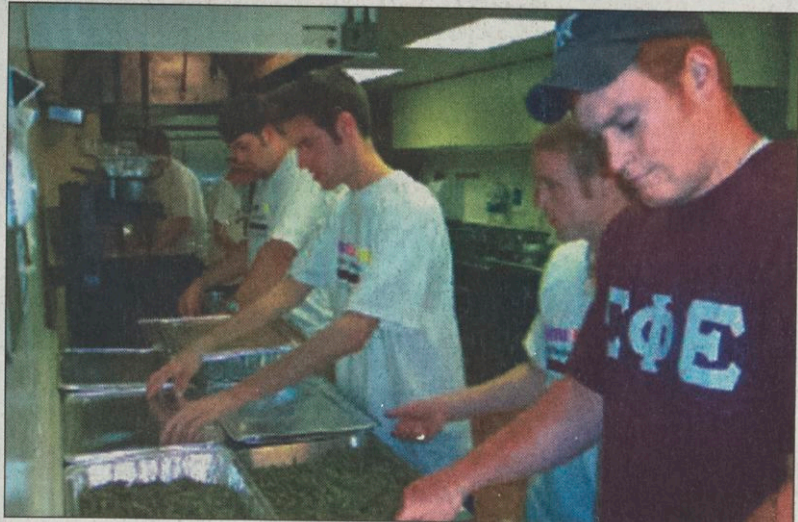

On Saturday the men split up into six driving shifts — three to deliver 430 meals in Columbus and three to deliver 1,100 meals in Cleveland — to churches and shelters the Salvation Army helped them find.

"Nationally, our fraternity supports hands-on community service over philanthropy, which usually involves just handing over money to a project," Phillips said.

Sungmoon Shiam, a junior in business, enjoys the hands-on service.

"When we do community service I actually get to participate in helping people," Shiam said.

usually what gets recognized," Phillips said. "This sort of thing gets the attention of the city, and it makes the university look good."

The fraternity plans to continue and expand upon the Fight to End Hunger in upcoming years.

"Next year, we want to expand on this service theme. Maybe a Fight to End Hunger week, bringing speakers in and producing even more meals," Yeh said.

"The buildings are in wonderful shape and the price is below the average of the two appraisals that were completed," said Jim Nichols, Ohio State treasurer. Two current tenants will continue to lease space on the property from the university for the immediate future.

Board Chairman James Patterson and undergraduate member Joe Shultz participated in their final board meeting on Friday.

Patterson, a 1964 graduate of the College of Food, Agricultural and Environmental Sciences at Ohio State, has been a trustee since 1994. OSU President Karen A. Holbrook presented a ceremonial gavel to Patterson as a token of the university's appreciation of his service.

"It has truly been my privilege," Patterson said referring to his opportunity to be chairman.

Shultz has served as the student trustee for the past two years. He is graduating after spring quarter and will attend Cornell University in the fall for graduate school.

Zuheir Sofia will leave his current position as vice chairman to assume the chairman's seat vacated by Patterson.

Sofia has been a trustee since 1995. He is chairman of Sofia & Company Inc., which provides financial and investment advisory services.

"It will be an honor to serve as chairman of the Board of Trustees of this great institution," Sofia said. "I am committed to Ohio State's goal of achieving academic excellence as set forth in the university's Academic Plan."

Tami Longaberger, a trustee since 1996, will take over the role of vice chairwoman. She is the president and CEO of The Longaberger Co.

The board's next meeting will be May 30.

Taft sets plan for $17.5 million security grant

Plan appropriates funds for creation of five more search and rescue teams

By Keli Gangl
Lantern staff writer

Gov. Bob Taft and the Ohio Emergency Management Agency filed a spending plan outlining the use of a $17.5 million grant from the United States Department of Homeland Security.

"All of the states have significant requirements to support a variety of homeland security components," said Todd Stewart, director of the University Program for International and Homeland Security. "This and previous grants are a down payment on a much larger bill."

Ohio's grant is the seventh largest in the U.S. from a $566.2 million congressional appropriation.

"This is the first time we are getting federal homeland security funding," said Jeff Grayson, spokesman for the Department of Public Safety.

The spending plan is divided between equipment, planning, exercises and training.

The equipment portion will be used to purchase equipment for local, regional and state emergency responders. Federal guidelines require 80 percent of the equipment portion be used for local government, but the Ohio plan outlines 85 percent of the equipment funds to local government.

The state will use a large portion of the equipment funds from protection equipment for emergency responders, and building regional emergency response capability.

The spending plan also allows funds for five urban search and rescue teams in Ohio counties.

Jack Bossert, grants branch chief at the EMA, said counties which felt that they have the capacity and resources for a search and rescue team were able to apply for the funds.

Cuyahoga, Franklin, Hamilton, Lucas and Summit counties will have teams similar to Ohio Task Force 1, one of the first search and rescue teams sent to New York after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

"Until now there has only been one search and rescue team in the state, leaving the rest of the state open," Bossert said.

The grant will be used to fund local exercises for emergency workers in 60 counties. This will complete funding for a two-year exercise schedule for each of the 88 counties. Twenty-eight counties already received funding from the 2002 homeland security grant.

Bossert said the majority of the grant will be used to hire a contractor to design, develop, put together and teach exercises to emergency workers.

The training portion of the grant will be used to improve existing awareness level training programs for emergency responders at universities, vocational schools, the State Fire Academy, the Ohio Peace Officers Training Academy and the Ohio State Highway Patrol Academy.

This grant is the largest of four anti-terrorism grants given to the Ohio EMA.

The federal Department of Homeland Security is reviewing the proposal, and funds will be received by the state 45 days after approval.

New Council of Graduate Student president addresses health care

By Derrik Chinn
Lantern staff writer

The Council of Graduate Students elected Jamie Depelteau president at a meeting Friday, deciding against Barbara Pletz in the only contested election for an executive position.

The council elected Depelteau to replace current CGS president J. Briggs Cormier. Depelteau, a graduate student in biomedical sciences, served as council treasurer during the past year. At the meeting, he expressed his intention to devote his time and dedication to the council.

"I intend to step up my efforts for all graduate students on campus," Depelteau said.

Depelteau addressed several issues relevant to graduate students during a 10-minute question and answer session prior to elections, including compensation for health insurance. He said the council is working to increase subsidization for health care with the intention of achieving full coverage.

Current health care subsidization for graduate students is at 30 percent, and will increase to 50 percent next year.

"We have a word-of-mouth contract for 100 percent subsidization within five years," Depelteau said.

He said the council needs to better publicize the efforts and accomplishments of CGS by increasing advertisement, holding larger functions and working more closely with the graduate school.

"CGS needs to be publicized to show the council's effective advocacy of graduate students," he said.

Depelteau said the graduate student council intends to serve as an open ear for all graduate students, receptive to problems or issues facing graduate students.

"They need to let us know so we can help them and work with them," he said.

Barbara Pletz, Depelteau's only opponent for the position, expressed similar sentiments on issues concerning health care subsidization and better publicity. She said the council needs to Candidates for the positions of CGS vice president, secretary and treasurer ran unopposed.

Vice president Kerry Hodak maintained her office position by deciding to serve a second term. Hodak, a graduate student in political science and law, thanked CGS senate members for their continual representation of the graduate student body.

She expressed her intention to attempt to recruit judges and participants for the research forum as well as establish better representation for both business and education graduate students. When asked why she decided to serve a second term rather than run for president, Hodak assured delegates she would be able to best represent the council as vice president.

The position of council secretary went to Cathy Baack. Baack, a graduate student in nursing, has participated in the research forum committee for the past two years.

Members voted Ann Farrelly into the position of council treasurer. Farrelly, a theater graduate student, previously served as the diversity chair under Cormier. Farrelly expressed her concern for current issues, specifically fair representation of the graduate student body.

The pain center has a small staff composed of four nurses and three doctors, not including Severyn. Without him, the center has experienced some stress.

"It's been incredibly busy. We are considering now seeing patients on Saturdays," Schulte said.

There is no word on when Severyn will return.

Other Big Ten schools mentioned in the list were the Universi-

Dr. Harold Cook, an anesthesiologist, believes that the success of the OSU pain center expands beyond the recognition by Good Housekeeping.

Quoting William Osler, "To cure sometimes, to relieve often, to comfort always, this is our work," Cook said. "I'll add that to hear the success stories of our patients who have been cured makes it all worthwhile."

Microsoft hosts software contest

By Stephanie Alberico
Lantern staff writer

The Ohio State University New Technologies Student Interest Group has teamed up with Microsoft and Ohio State's computer and information science department to sponsor a .NET programming contest to compete for more than $10,000 in prizes.

The .NET framework is a new approach to building software that makes life easier for software developers.

Any student at OSU, in any major, is eligible for the NETsig contest. The contest kicked off Jan. 23, and on May 23 the top finalists will make their project presentations and the contest winners will be announced.

For the contest, students are presented with a design problem that instructs them to design, implement, test and document a complete application, Web application or service that runs on the Microsoft .NET platform and would benefit Ohio State students, faculty, staff or alumni. Employees of Microsoft are ineligible for the contest.

NTsig, a Microsoft-sponsored student organization at OSU that brings new technologies to students, is hosting the contest. Top teams receive cash prizes and Xboxes.

"Microsoft .NET is a fairly new Microsoft technology, and for the contest the students have to use that only that to design a program," said Kyle Boon, a junior in computer science and engineering. "We are working on an application that gives directions around OSU campus."

Keith Ruston, a senior in computer science and engineering, entered the competition with two other students. They are working to make a program that is fun and beneficial to students.

"Everyone else seems to be quiet about what they're working on," Ruston said. "So that's as far as I'll go."

Ruston is a general officer of NTsig and assists with a variety of the organization's tasks, including lab work, Web site work and advertising. He became involved with NTsig after running into the group at an activities fair three years ago.

"NTsig allows students to get hands on experience with some things not available in any classes," Ruston said. "NTsig has its own library of over 400 books that allow its member to learn just about anything they want. These resources have allowed students such as myself to learn Windows 2000 architecture, DirectX programming, ASP.NET, new languages such as C#, and many other tools that will help students build a resume and get an edge in the job market."

NTsig was founded by Rick Payne and Ryan Giessl in 2000. Payne, a senior in electrical engineering, is the president of NTsig, which has more than 100 members. Over the last three years, Microsoft has provided the group with resources for projects and events.

"It's a group of computer enthusiasts that meet regularly to discuss and compare new technologies," Payne said. "We used to give away free software to members but stopped doing that because too many people took the software and ran."

"We need a way to bring technologies to students that they are not exposed to in the classroom, but will greatly help their careers in the field of technology," Ruston said.

The purpose of the contest is to give students the opportunity to learn Microsoft's .NET platform. Microsoft's .NET framework is a next generation programming platform and runtime that came out in 2002.

"The CIS department helped make sure that everything was within the rules," said Payne. "They are also going to be helping with the judging."

The applications will be judged by CIS faculty members along with Microsoft consultants. All entries must be accompanied by a guide or walk-through for the judges. The top five teams will be required to give a five-minute presentation of their project to the panel. Judges will then be responsible for scoring applications' functionality, usability and documentation.

Students organize protest to end drug war

By Sarah Snyder
Lantern staff writer

People driving past the High Street and 15th Avenue intersection on Saturday afternoon might have noticed a group of protesters holding signs with messages like "Legalize Freedom" and "End the Drug War Now." Or they might have heard chants like "one, two, three, four, let's end the drug war."

This protest was held by the OSU's chapter of Students for Sensible Drug Policy for their annual legalization of cannabis march.

"This is a worldwide event," said Russell Selkirk, a senior in political science and member of SSDP.

"On May 3, 4 and 5, over 200 different cities internationally march for the legalization of marijuana," Selkirk said. "Some universities also hold educational workshops and video series. We get some help from Cures, Not Wars, an organization that protests against the drug war. They made the posters and advertising fliers we posted around campus. We also have money that comes from our group's fund-raisers."

Sean Luse, a senior in political science and a student leader of SSDP, said the main problem is the drug war, not just the prohibition of marijuana.

"We have been holding this march for three years," Luse said. "We're working to end the drug war. We believe it is counter-productive and harmful, and drugs need to be controlled but not prohibited. Prohibition creates a black market, where there is no regulation on the age of people buying soft drugs like marijuana or on drugs' purity."

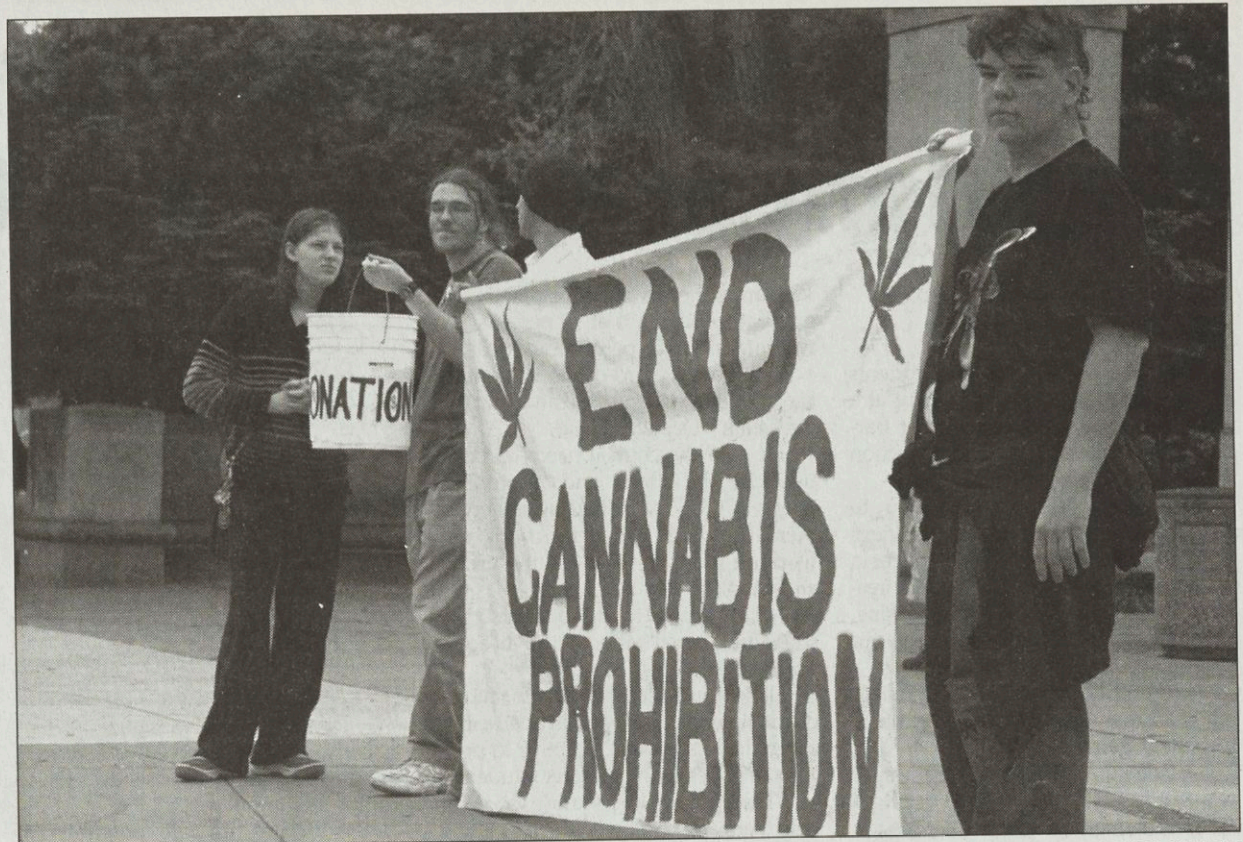

Bob Fittrakis, who is running for Columbus city council, took time out to come and speak at the rally.

"We all know how absurd it is that if you're caught with a small amount of marijuana, students cannot get federal financial aid. I will work to make these misdemeanors a simple civil infraction in Columbus. It will be the same as a parking ticket," Fittrakis said.

Some people are skeptical of how much protests like these will really help.

"I don't think what they're doing is going to help anything. The government is not going to do anything just because of this," said Amber Gordon, a junior in microbiology.

Although last year nearly 800 people came to the event, this year's attendance amounted to only 100 protesters. The Columbus police followed the march from the corner of 15th Avenue and High Street downtown to Buttles Avenue, where the participants reached Goodale Park and dispersed.

Fire in Western Kentucky residence hall ruled arson

By Murray Evans
Associated Press

BOWLING GREEN, Ky. — A college student who had what appeared to be stab wounds was pulled from a residence hall fire that authorities were investigating to determine if it was deliberately set, the state fire marshal's office said yesterday.

"Apparently this is a crime scene," said Ken Meredith, a spokesman for the fire marshal's office. "There is a young woman suffering from stab wounds, and it appears that the fire was set deliberately."

Bob Skipper, a spokesman for Western Kentucky University, said the fire seems "suspicious right now."

The victim was in critical condition with extensive burns and other wounds at Vanderbilt University Hospital in Nashville, Tenn., about 60 miles south of Bowling Green, Ky., he said.

"We are aware that there are other wounds, but at this point we don't know what caused them or how they are related to all of this," Skipper said. He said authorities had talked to the victim's roommate, who wasn't home at the time of the fire.

University and police officials would not release the name of the injured student.

Students and family members, however, identified the student as Katie Autry, and an online university directory listed a Melissa K. Autry as living in Hugh Poland Hall room 214, the room where the fire occurred.

A Kentucky State Police arson investigator was at the dormitory yesterday afternoon.

About 50 people were in Hugh Poland Hall when the fire started shortly after 4 a.m. in a room on the second floor, Skipper said.

The fire was confined to one room in the nine-story dorm, which houses about 300 students, and it was put out by the dormitory's sprinkler system, he said. All those who had been inside the dorm had been accounted for yesterday morning.

Andrea Pendleton, a freshman from Lexington who lives in the dorm, said she saw two firefighters carry the burned student out by her arms and legs.

"All of her clothes were burned off," Pendleton said. She said emergency officials treated the victim for about 15 minutes before taking her away in an ambulance.

In the dormitory, there was smoke and water damage throughout the second floor, but students who live on the other floors were being allowed to retrieve personal items yesterday afternoon, Skipper said.

The university is just wrapping up its spring session, with final exams scheduled this week.

Students milling around the dorm yesterday said it was the second fire in the dorm this semester. No injuries or evacuations occurred in the first fire, students said.

Israel slows down road map

By Dan Perry
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — The "road map" the world has unfolded for Israel and the Palestinians is the latest in a long line of grand designs for the Middle East. Despite enormous hurdles and a dismal record of past peace efforts, some people see opportunity this time around.

The blueprint comes at a time when U.S. influence in the region is at its height, backed up by tens of thousands of troops in nearby Iraq.

For the first time, the United States has enlisted the global community — the United Nations, the European Union and Russia are cosignatories — into a consensus for establishing a Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza, the lands Israel occupied in the 1967 war.

That makes the Bush administration the first in nearly 35 years of U.S. peacemaking efforts to formally and unequivocally accept the idea of a state called Palestine.

Recent months have created a promising "confluence of circumstances ... the defeat of Saddam Hussein (and) the assertion of American power in the Middle East," and a reevaluation by some Palestinians of their uprising against Israel, said Tel Aviv University strategic affairs analyst Bruce Maddy-Weitzman.

But the obstacles are formidable. For starters, the two sides don't even agree on how to read the map unveiled last week — whether it is Israel or the Palestinians who must make the first concrete move.

Much rests on how forcefully the Bush administration is willing to apply its new weight. It has already forced Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat to share power with a newly appointed prime minister, Mahmoud Abbas. But Arabs have long complained that it refuses to do the same to Israel. For an example of the kind of pressure they want to see applied now, they have to look back to 1956, and the Eisenhower administration's ultimatum to Israel to return the Sinai Desert to Egypt.

Every American president since the 1960s has been dragged into this conflict. A couple — Jimmy Carter, Bill Clinton — actually got to officiate at peace treaty signings — Israel and Egypt, Israel and Jordan. But most others saw their efforts come to nothing.

In an interview with Israel's Yediot Ahronot newspaper published Friday, U.S. National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice said the Bush administration was determined to push forward.

"There has been a tremendous change in the Middle East," she was quoted as saying. "The president expects all the nations of the region, including Israel, to seize the opportunity ... Our expectation from the sides have changed in the wake of the Iraq war and the appointing of a Palestinian prime minister."

The violence that accompanied this week's diplomatic events underscored the enormous challenge that lies ahead.

On Tuesday, Israel killed three militants and a bystander in military operations. Early Wednesday morning, a suicide bomber killed a waitress and two musicians in a Tel Aviv pub. On Thursday, the Israeli army raided Gaza in search of militants, killing 12 Palestinians, four of them civilians.

Abbas and his security minister, Mohammed Dahlan, seem ready to either persuade or force militants who reject the road map to lay down their arms.

But their bases in the West Bank have been decimated by Israel and their officers are under severe travel restrictions. Even far mightier Israel, despite killing scores of militants and arresting thousands, hasn't managed to stop the suicide bombings.

Phase I of the road map demands an Israeli statement of support for Palestinian statehood, a freeze on all construction in Jewish settlements in the West Bank and Gaza and the dismantling of dozens of outposts built since 2001. Any of these concessions could bring down Prime Minister Ariel Sharon's rightist coalition.

The Palestinian leadership is required to reiterate its recognition of Israel's right to exist in peace, call for an immediate and unconditional cease-fire and end all official anti-Israeli incitement. But the Islamic militants have already rejected a cease-fire and the Palestinian Authority has never shown much appetite for taking them on.

But if these steps are to be simultaneous, Israel is opposed, saying it doesn't want to take any concrete steps until it is convinced terrorism has been abandoned.

Plan for Mideast peace

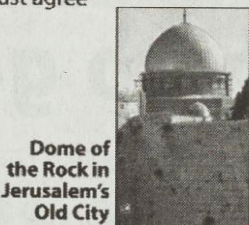

A "road map" to peace in the Middle East, authored by the quartet of the United States, European Union, Russia and the United Nations, is a three-phase, three-year timetable toward Palestinian statehood. Before the plan can start, Israel and the Palestinians must agree to end violence against each other.

Youth waves Palestinian flag in occupied West Bank

Dome of the Rock in Jerusalem's Old City

PHASE I

Palestinians must:

- Recognize Israel's right to exist
- Arrest, disrupt and restrain anyone conducting and planning attacks on Israelis anywhere
- Dismantle terrorist infrastructure (militias)
- Produce a draft constitution and hold free, open, and fair elections

Israel must:

- Agree to the creation of an independent Palestinian state
- End home demolitions
- Freeze all settlement activity and immediately dismantle all illegal outposts

PHASE II

- Begins after Palestinian elections and ends with possible creation of Palestinian state and provisional borders as early as 2003
- An international conference will launch the process leading to the establishment of a Palestinian state with provisional borders
- Existing autonomous zones will be expanded and possible dismantling of remote settlements will take place
- Palestinian constitution must be finalized and ratified
- Quartet members will promote international recognition of the Palestinian state and membership in the U.N.

PHASE III

A second international conference will finalize the permanent status solution by 2005 covering final borders for Israel and the Palestinian state, Jerusalem, refugees, settlements, and peace between Israel and other Arab states

OUR VIEWS

Minority gap

Racism exists in leadership positions

On Tuesday, Miami Hurricane backup quarterback Derrick Crudup Jr. backed down from his allegations claiming that race was a factor in the decision to keep him from the starting position.

Crudup was Heisman finalist Ken Dorsey's backup during Miami's run to the Fiesta Bowl last season. Since Dorsey's departure to the NFL, Crudup and transfer Brock Berlin had been competing to be the successor.

While Miami head coach Larry Coker has said the final decision on who will be the starter will not be made until the start of the regular season, Berlin was tentatively named the starter for the Hurricanes at the end of spring practice. Crudup claimed Miami's quarterback coach Dan Werner, who is white, used terms like "redneck" and "cracker" in practice sessions that made Crudup uncomfortable. Crudup said because he was the only black man in a room full of white men making racist remarks, he was unable to fully concentrate on what he was supposed to be learning — skills that would make him a starting quarterback.

Even though this issue was resolved when Crudup withdrew his complaint, the situation does bring a larger conflict to light. For a variety of reasons, minorities in this country have different needs and views than the majority. Yet, leadership positions are not proportionately filled by the nation's minorities.

College football might be the most blatant example of this disparity. Even though minorities make up well over half of the players in Division I football, only 3.4 percent — four out of 117 — of head coaching positions are filled by minorities. As the situation with Crudup points out, sometimes significant misunderstandings can occur as a result of this lack of minority representation. Werner might not even have known what he was saying was making Crudup uncomfortable and incapable of performing his duties to the team.

Majority rules in this nation; it is the nature of democracy. However, the minority should not have to suffer simply because the majority is in charge. The relationship between whites and the minorities of this nation are obviously not as good as they could be. Part of this is because whites still have a disproportionate amount of power, and even the most well-intentioned white person is still not going to know how to best serve the variety of different needs that minorities have.

Consider this: 7,860 people of a multitude of minority backgrounds attend Ohio State. They make up roughly 14 percent of students at this university, and yet there is only one major minority administrator whose job it is to consider minority students on this campus — Mac A. Stewart, the vice provost for Minority Affairs. The many other administrators on this campus are not going to know how their decision are going to affect how minorities function on this campus because the administrators have never had to face the same problems minorities do.

Race relations need serious improvement in this country. Even the most well-intentioned white leaders in this country are not going to know what it is like to actually be a minority in this country. While racism is not going to be solved by having a more representative minority leadership, it would certainly make the lives of minorities easier.

Monumental plan

New entrance in works for landmark

The National Capital Planning Commission has given preliminary approval to a plan to revise the way tourists approach the Washington Monument. The plan would have visitors entering the monument not through the front doors, but through an underground tunnel.

If this plan reaches fruition, the tunnel would be the only way to reach the monument. Proponents of the measure say it is necessary as part of Washington's more security-conscious climate. The extra steps will be no different than the stepped-up security checks visitors to the White House must now endure, planners say.

Comparing the construction of a 500-foot-long underground tunnel to a few extra pat-downs by Secret Service agents is dodgy at best and utterly ridiculous at worst. Not only will the tunnel almost certainly cost more than the extra White House security, but it is a less necessary procedure.

The White House is not only the home of the president but a workplace and meeting area for hundreds of top government officials. The Washington Monument, on the other hand, is not the habitual gathering place for anyone of national importance. Certainly, it is visited by thousands of tourists each day — but so are any of the dozens of national monuments in the D.C. area. This landmark should not require a measure of security that is not required of other landmarks, such as the Lincoln or Jefferson memorials.

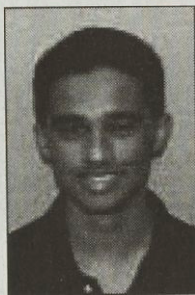

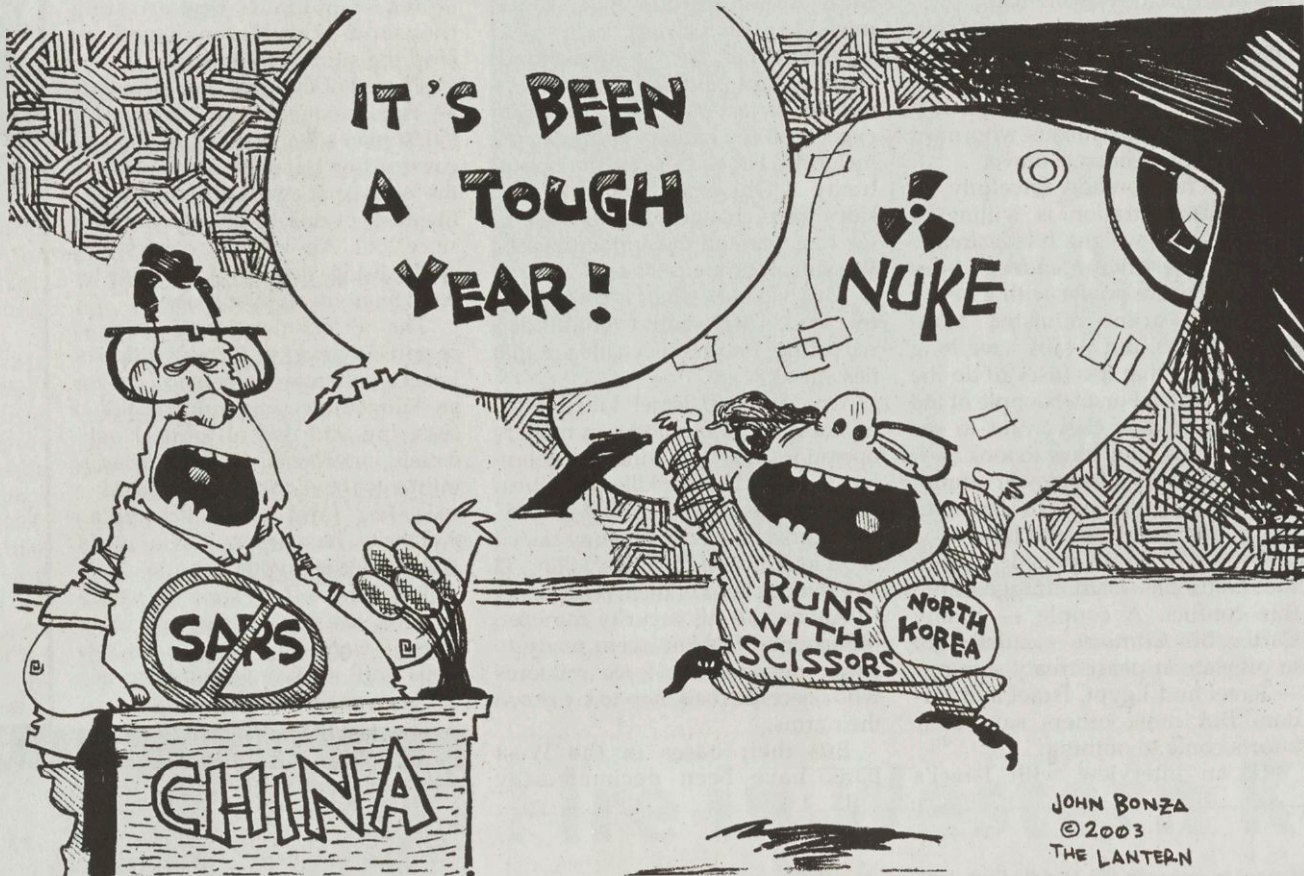

Another problem with this proposal is its implication it is no longer safe to walk near the monument. Not only does this assumption beg the previous statement about what makes the Washington Monument so special as to require this type of excessive security — it also raises an important question about the way Americans are choosing to live their lives.

Not long after the Sept. 11 attacks, there was a push by government and civilians alike to get back to "normal." The catchphrase during this period was, "If we don't continue to live as we always did, then the terrorists will have already won."

The proposed tunnel is a regression to those few days when Americans were afraid to leave their houses. If the tunnel is built, it could establish a precedent for heightened security by other popular U.S. landmarks, and similar tunnels could be built.

To say that it is unsafe to walk near a beloved national monument is a step backwards. As cliched as it sounds, if the Washington Monument tunnel is built, then the terrorists will have already won.

Long way to go for Israel

Disappointment is what comes to my mind when I think about Israel. Time and time again, Israel has not been able to live up to its potential. Of course, in many instances the country has succeeded — it's a powerhouse in biotechnology, military and other fields. However, the racist views the government holds continues to mar the country's image and will lead to the erosion of Israel's relevance in the world.

Prime Minister Ariel Sharon seems to think we're still in the 19th century, when a country could be defined solely by its religious background. A thirdworld country like Afghanistan may be able to pull this feat off, but it's not tied to the global economy nearly as much as Israel.

Israel is a modern society intertwined with the globe, and it can't continue to operate in such a narrow-minded scope. Sharon is trying his hardest to keep Israel a Jewish state. However, this is a dated ideology and globalization will not allow this in the future. If its leaders refuse to change, Israel will find itself with less clout in world matters.

While I don't approve of many Palestinian actions, the Israeli government hasn't done much to improve the situation. The rampant racism the government enforces would be considered appalling in many countries, including America. The government feels people deserve certain rights due to their religious beliefs. Much like African-Americans in U.S. history, Palestinians aren't allowed to occupy certain land, associate with certain people or even be considered for employment at some firms. Sharon doesn't consider this segregation to be racist. Along with many other Zionists, he feels this is a way to protect the Jewish majority in Israel. However, he doesn't understand this is only creating turmoil and destroying the country from the inside.

Israel is wasting so many of its precious resources fighting a war against the Arab world. Although it's surrounded by countries that loathe its presence, Israel has played hardball from day one and hasn't truly tried to adapt with its neighbors. Israel was created so it would be a safe haven for Jews worldwide. Unfortunately, leaders have endorsed the same racist tactics that Jews were accustomed to for hundreds of years. Israel isn't the safe haven it was intended to be. Instead, it's a dangerous land full of hatred and is constantly on the brink of disaster.

The government needs to work closely with the PLO to form a multi-ethnic state. Creating a Palestinian state will not solve the problems plaguing the country. While it will ease tensions, having two separate states will not solve long-term problems. Sharon should give equal rights to every citizen of Israel. It is naïve for the government to think people will willingly accept rights which are partial to Jews.

I realize my suggestions are easier said than done. However, if countries like South Africa could overcome ethnic tensions, there is no reason Israel cannot as well. The process will start if both sides have some humility. It's wrong for Palestinians to encourage suicide bombers just as much as it is for Israeli soldiers who use tanks to bulldoze homes just to flex power. Both Israelis and Palestinians must apologize for their sins and forgive each other. Once they hear each other apologize, the wheels will be set in motion towards recovery.

Unfortunately, the current administration shows no signs of working toward a peaceful country. Instead of taking the initiative to work with the PLO, Sharon continues to be arrogant and resentful of peace talks.

Due to its stubborn and racist views, the government has failed to fulfill the purpose of Israel. It's not a country where Jewish people can live peacefully with their neighbors. Instead it's a country filled with hate and hostility. Jews can live in numerous countries around the world where they will be safer and have a more stable environment.

The irony is that Israel and her army is imposing the same grief and sanctions on Palestinians that Hitler imposed on Jews in the 1930s and 40s. Jewish people continuously hold memorials dedicated to Holocaust victims and preach we must never forget the horrendous events that have occurred so we can move on to make the world a better place. Unfortunately, the Israeli government is unyielding when it comes to change and isn't learning from history's mistakes.

Kids and books, nothing better

It started as an addiction. I couldn't help it. There was nothing I could do about it. I would read anything and everything I saw.

At first, it started slowly. I didn't think there was anything harmful with something as simple as Repunzel. It was suppose to be an easy read for any kindergartner. But after the first time, I knew I couldn't get enough. I had to get more.

My reading didn't stop with the easy-to-read books. While sitting in the back seat of my parents' car, I would eagerly look at the signs that passed. Soon phrases such as "buy one, get one free" or "three-day sale" became a part of my everyday vocabulary.

I remember telling my mom how we should go downtown to the electronics repair shop because they were offering a two-for-one deal. If we gave them a radio to fix, the next item we brought in would be free. Of course, my poor mom looked at me like I was crazy. She had no idea what I was talking about.

However, soon I was going to graduate from reading the neon signs which littered the downtown area and the children's books that filled my Mickey Mouse bookshelf beside my bed. As a first grader, my mom took me to the library. I couldn't believe it. There were tons of books. It almost seemed like thousands.

The library became my favorite place in the world. It was such a wonderful place. Not to mention, the librarian was so nice with her hair tied up in a neat little bun at the back of her head. I soon forgot about those little children's books. I was older now. As a 7-year-old, I could read the books for big kids.

Series books such as the Sweet Valley Twins and the Baby-sitters Club were my top priority. Once I began reading the huge, 76-page chapter books, there was no turning back. I was a goner. I was a reading addict. I would try to read every single second of the day.

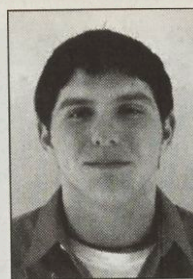

During breakfast, I pull the cereal box towards me to read the ingredients. I didn't care how boring it was. I just needed to lay my eyes on something. My eyes hungered for consonants and vowels. (It was fascinating to see how many words end with the letters "ium.")

At dinner, my father hated to see me with my nose poked into the inside of the book. He wanted what any normal father wanted — a conversation with his daughter. But instead of talking to a young girl, he would find himself facing the newest spine-chilling cover of the new Nancy Drew book.

Back during my childhood, reading was everything to me. Each page took me into a world I had never been. With Nancy Drew, I could join the girl detective as she sneaked into houses undetected and escaped exploding bombs. In a "Tale of Two Cities," I always wondered what it would feel like the novel's heroine, the beautiful young woman who was loved by two men. I even imagined myself as one of the Boxcar Children who were trying to live on their own, never knowing their grandfather lived just miles away.

However, now that I'm in college, I can't believe how much I've changed. It's a miracle if I can find the time to read at least one book in a span of six months. With all the work I have, the homework and exams, I feel lucky to have some free time just to go and catch a movie with some of my friends. It would be nice if just for a little bit I could be transformed to that little girl who had all the time in the world to read all the books she wanted to read.

GREG MOORE

Tow trucks should park shenanigans

They lurk in the darkness each night while students attend to the many responsibilities a college education entails. Feeding and preying on the wallets and mental security of college kids, the tow truck company is an entity hated as fiercely as the Michigan Wolverines themselves.

The recent experience of having my vehicle towed has led me to believe the men who make their living robbing from innocent people and temporarily stealing individuals' cars are truly heartless.

I am no better than anyone else, and I do not feel like I deserve special treatment, but I was forced to endure an unnecessary ordeal. As if getting my 1986 Audi relocated to a dark, ominous storage lot was not enough inconvenience, I also was lied to repeatedly by the towing company.

When I discovered my car missing at 2 p.m., I called the company that patrols the parking lot in my apartment complex.

"We don't have your vehicle. If it was here, we'd have it on record; we're required to report the cars within two hours after they come in. You need to contact the Columbus police," an unnamed man said.

I called the police and learned my car was not reported "towed" by any companies.

"Your car might be stolen; you need to fill out a police report as soon as possible," the operator said.

Before conceding that I lived in an unsafe neighborhood and believing someone would take my car, I called the tow company again.

"We don't have your vehicle. We report any car that comes through our doors within two hours. You need to contact the police," the same unnamed man said in his callous, inconsiderate tone.

I had to go to class and was unable to file a police report at the time. Being blindly optimistic, I returned home and decided to call the tow company one last time. I was told the same thing and was relegated to calling the police and reporting my vehicle stolen. While all this was going on, I was missing work, losing pay and jeopardizing my employment.

The police officer did not take the time to ask for the description or license plate number of my Audi.

"This is a little scam the tow companies have to make owners leave their car overnight and rack up storage fees," he said. "They have your car; you need to go down there and physically look for yourself."

I called the tow company for the last time in attempt to spare myself a wasted trip. I was told, "We don't have your vehicle." I shouted some expletives and decided I was going to check anyway.

Peering through the fence, I could make out several vehicles. Each car sat there like a dog at a pound waiting for its owners to claim them. My car was there; I had been lied to on several occasions although I gave the tow company my license plate number and car's description.

I had to get my car, so I paid the $102 fee. My car was towed around 4 a.m. the night before. Their excuse was that the year of my car was listed incorrectly and caused the misunderstanding and subsequent lying about their possession of my vehicle. There was nothing I could do.

I checked every source for legal options. The police said nothing could be done. My rental company said it was not its problem. Student Judicial Affairs tried to be helpful but did not know what could be done.

Lying and cheating goes without repercussions in today's society. I am not the only victim — a quick survey revealed nine of the 10 subjects' vehicles had been towed. But I wish I was the last.

Something needs to be done to eradicate campus of equivocal business practices and unnecessary towing. When the solution is brought to light, it will be my privilege to fulfill my journalistic responsibility of disclosing the information.

Debate yields no clear contender

By Nedra Pickler
Associated Press

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Democrats pursuing the presidency emerged from their first primary debate with deep divisions over foreign policy, health care and tax cuts and no clear front-runner to challenge President Bush.

After Saturday night's 90-minute confrontation at the University of South Carolina, Democrats were left with a field of nine candidates who face a long, tough challenge to sell themselves as the best opponent to unseat the popular Republican incumbent.

With eight months until the first nominating contest in Iowa, several among the nine have head starts in money, experience and organization.

The early leaders by those standards are four members of Congress — Sens. John Edwards of North Carolina, John Kerry of Massachusetts and Joe Lieberman of Connecticut; and Rep. Dick Gephardt of Missouri.

Lieberman, as Al Gore's running mate on the 2000 Democratic ticket, has the highest name recognition. Lieberman also is perhaps the most centrist candidate — some believe too centrist to win the party's nomination — made evident in the debate by his strong approval of the U.S.-led war in Iraq and his criticism of "big-spending Democratic ideas of the past" such as expensive health care programs.

"I am the one Democrat who can match George Bush in the areas where many think he's strong, defense and moral values, and beat him where he is weak, on the economy and his divisive right-wing social agenda," Lieberman told the audience in South Carolina.

Edwards is among the newer faces, a wealthy former attorney serving his first term in the Senate. Although his Southern charm and boyish good looks could appeal to voters in the campaign, he faces criticism that he lacks experience necessary for the Oval Office. Republicans also have attacked his trial lawyer background, but Edwards says he is proud to have fought for people in court and argues that Bush is beholden to corporate interests.

"Just because you speak the language of regular Americans does not mean your agenda is not the agenda of corporate America," he said Saturday night. "Just because you walk around on a ranch in Texas with a big belt buckle doesn't mean you understand and stand up for rural America."

Kerry is running as a proponent of ensuring the nation's security. He is a Yale-educated Vietnam War veteran who received a Silver Star, Bronze Star and three Purple Hearts for his service. Some fear that a New England senator will come across as too liberal for voters nationwide; many Democrats think Kerry, with his strong resume and campaign organization, is best positioned to win the nomination.

"I believe I bring strength to this ticket — strength about how we maintain a military that is strong but make ourselves stronger in the world," Kerry said during the debate.

Gephardt, the former House Democratic leader, is the only candidate making a repeat run for the White House. He entered the race in 1988 but ran out of money to sustain his campaign. This time, the hallmark of his campaign is to repeal many of Bush's 2001 tax cuts to finance a program costing $200 billion-plus per year to help businesses pay for health insurance for their workers. The pro-positional drew some of the sharpest criticism during the debate, with some of Gephardt's rivals suggesting it was too expensive and others rejecting the idea of any sort of tax increase.

"If you like George Bush's tax cuts, stick with him, vote for him," Gephardt said in defending his plan. "But if you want to finally solve this problem that's bedeviled our people for a hundred years, let's get it done. Let's get everybody in this country covered with good health insurance."

Former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean's rousing campaign speeches against the Iraq war and the moderate shift of the Democratic Party have attracted liberal voters, who dominate primary contests. Dean, a former physician, also says he wants to pass a plan to insure more Americans. But his opposition to the war has raised concerns that the Bush campaign would make hay assailing Dean on national security.

"We can't win this election if we worry so much about electability that the American people can't tell the difference between us and the Republicans," Dean said.

Baseball loses first series in Davis Stadium

JESSICA HAZEL/THE LANTERN

Ohio State third baseman Jedidiah Stephen comes up firing after fielding a grounder in yesterday's game against Michigan. Stephen and the Buckeyes dropped their first series in the history of Davis Stadium with a 9-4 loss against the Wolverines.

OSU pitching and defense struggle during 9-4 loss in Michigan series

By Matt Duval
Lantern sports editor

Coming into this weekend's series against Michigan, the Ohio State baseball team knew it had to win at least three out of four games to keep pace with Big Ten Conference front-runner Minnesota.

But after two losses on Saturday, the Buckeyes were willing to settle for a split with the Wolverines.

Too bad the Buckeyes didn't get anything they wanted.

For the first time in Davis Stadium history, OSU lost a series as the Wolverines took the last game of the weekend with a 9-4 victory yesterday. The Buckeyes had not lost a home series since 1996 when Indiana beat OSU at Trautman Field.

"When you stay in the world of athletics long enough, you're going to see everything," OSU coach Bob Todd said. "The world of athletics and baseball have a way of evening things out sometimes."

Similar to the first three games of the series, the Buckeyes struggled offensively. However, for the first time in over a month, the OSU pitching staff struggled just as much.

Lefty Chris Hanners started on the mound for the Buckeyes and quickly ran into trouble. After working through a scoreless first inning, Hanners walked Wolverine second baseman Jordan Cantalamessa to open up the inning. Hanners appeared to get first baseman Mike Sokol to fly out to right field, but OSU outfielder Christian Snively dropped the ball, sending Cantalamessa to third and Sokol to second.

With his defense struggling behind him, Hanners appeared rattled on the mound. He walked left fielder Chris Burhans to load the bases. After getting an out, Hanners' wildness appeared again as he walked in a run with the bases loaded. Michigan center fielder and Buckeye-killer Gino Lolloio drove in two more runs with a single. Lolloio later hit a solo home run in the sixth inning and finished the day 3-for-3 with three RBI and two runs scored.

"When you play a good hitting team like Michigan, they are going to take advantage of the errors," Snively said. "They took advantage of my error and scored three runs, which was big."

Michigan appeared on its way to an easy win as it held a 5-0 lead in the bottom of the eighth inning. But with two outs, Wolverine starting pitcher Drew Taylor began to show fatigue.

OSU center fielder Mike Rabin started with a single, followed by Snively's double. Designated hitter Steve Caravati, who has been nursing a bruised hand, brought both home with his double. Catcher Derek Kinner added another two-run double as the Buckeyes cut the Wolverine lead to 5-4. Taylor finally exited after throwing 131 pitches over 7 2-3 innings.

It took just one pitch for reliever Ali Husain to quell the Buckeye rally, as he got left fielder Cody Caughenbaugh to line out as Kinner stood at third.

"They made plays, and we didn't," Caravati said. "That was the bottom line for the weekend."

But in the top of the ninth, the Wolverines opened the game back up, scoring four runs off OSU pitchers Mike Madsen and Matt Davis.

"We just didn't put enough pressure on them in them, especially at the beginning of the game," Todd said. "Obviously our relief pitching didn't do their job in the ninth inning, but that was a big, big out when they go out of the eighth inning."

Price unfairly fired for behavior

If there were anyone I wouldn't want to have been last week, it would have been a college head coach.

The beginning of the week started with stories of Iowa State's men's basketball coach Larry Eustachy and his late-night parties with college students after his team lost games in Manhattan, Kan. and Columbia, Mo. Iowa State suspended him with pay and is expected to fire him this week.

Later in the week, reports emerged concerning Alabama football coach Mike Price and an excursion he had to a topless bar while in Florida for a pro-am golf tournament. Price, who was hired by Alabama from Washington State in December, spent hundreds of dollars at the bar, and the next morning a woman from the establishment ordered one of everything from a hotel room-service menu and charged it to Price's hotel bill. Price got his walking papers Saturday despite never coaching a game for the Crimson Tide.

It's hard to argue with Iowa State's decision to get rid of Eustachy, but Alabama may have been a little too quick on pulling the trigger.

For Eustachy, his party-crasher persona has become legendary — the only problem is that it's become legendary around schools other than his own. What was the university to think when the pictures of 47-year-old Eustachy holding a beer and kissing young college women on the cheek? Sure, it might not be technically wrong, but what kind of message is Eustachy's team supposed to get when its coach is out partying with members of a team that just beat the Cyclones? Eustachy needs to find treatment, but more important, he needs to find another job.

Unlike Eustachy, Price kept his bar experience in the off-season, not while his team was in the middle of the conference schedule. According to the bar's owner, Price was a "perfect gentleman" and was just having a good time at the bar. Simply put, Price was just looking for something to do in Florida, and he happened to pick a topless bar — something that is neither illegal nor as frowned upon as Eustachy's college parties.

I know I'm skating around the issue of the woman in Price's hotel, but it has yet to be proven that the woman was in Price's hotel room. The bar owner said that Price did not leave with anyone, and hotel officials have not said that the room service was supposed to be sent to Price's room.

Coaches are expected to be the leaders of young athletes and set good examples for them, but does that mean every college coach has to become a squeaky-clean shut-in with no life? It's almost as if college administrators want their coaches to do nothing but go to the office, sit, review film, run practice and then go home. That's unreasonable, and any coach will tell you he'd go insane if that's all he was allowed to do.

Price made a mistake, and he'll be the first to admit it. At the press conference Saturday, Price was apologetic and defiant in talking to the room full of reporters and fans. He continued to ask Alabama president Robert Witt for forgiveness and a second chance.

"To the university and the entire 'Bama Nation, I admit making mistakes and at times inappropriate behavior, but I also ask for your forgiveness," a tearful Price said.

"I don't think the punishment fits the crime," Price later added. "I think President Witt is making a mistake. He's not breaking the law, but he's making an error in judgment."

I have no doubt that Price will have an easy time finding a new job. He just shouldn't have to after one mistake.

Softball season finishes with loss

By Abby G. Hludzik
Lantern sports writer

The seniors bade their team farewell as the Ohio State softball squad wrapped up its regular season yesterday with a 6-2 loss against Penn State in a series split.

In the final game of the weekend series, the Nittany Lions came from behind in the third inning to sail ahead of the Buckeyes, thanks to a four-run fifth inning.

"We wanted to win and do it for the seniors," first baseman and pitcher Kristi DeVries said. "Everyone was into it, but it just didn't happen for us today."

After a scoreless first inning, OSU third baseman Kristine Himes singled on a strong drive to right field and advanced to second on catcher Annie Dedic's sacrifice bunt.

However, the Buckeyes couldn't take advantage as Himes was thrown out at third on DeVries' single. OSU's momentum was completely stopped as right fielder Amy Ellis struck out.

"This could have possibly been my last game ever," Himes said. "You just have to put your heart on your sleeve, and you leave it there. That's all you can do."

The first Penn State run was scored in the bottom of the second off a single by right fielder Megan Humphrey, which brought in left fielder Leigh Murray.

OSU answered back in the third with two runs to take the lead, as second baseman Jennifer Link hit her first home run of the season, scoring left fielder Karisa Evans.

The score remained the same until the Nittany Lions' fifth inning. Third baseman Destinie Chavez started the inning with a single, followed by Humphrey's single. A sacrifice bunt by outfielder Barbie Pierce advanced the runners, and a hit to center field from Gina Bianchini brought home pinch runner Jackie Dabrowski to tie the game.

The Nittany Lions then took a 3-2 lead when shortstop Mandy Nuxoll singled to bring Humphrey home.

The Buckeyes brought in DeVries on the mound, but Penn State center fielder Kelley Galigher continued the assault with her RBI double.

"They came out swinging," OSU coach Linna Kalafatis said. "They put the ball where they needed to — at that point I don't think we could have thrown them anything that they couldn't hit. They really came in focused and got the job done."

Penn State added another run in the sixth when Nuxoll singled on a bobbie by DeVries, bringing home Chavez.

"There is no doubt we had a good senior class," Kalafatis said. "Anytime you have career leaders, All-Conference players and All-Americans, you're going to be left with some open spots. There's turnover every year — you just have to keep going at it."

OSU comes up big in Owens Classic

By Mike Shriner
Lantern sports writer

This year's 18th running of the Jesse Owens Track Classic came to a close on Saturday night in the rainy, uncompromising weather at the Jesse Owens Memorial Stadium.

During the two days of action that included a 35-team field of many of the nation's premier athletes and several top-notch programs, a number of Buckeyes came away with impressive performances to keep the Ohio State tradition alive.

During Friday night's events, junior Sjaan Gerth and sophomore Aaron Fisher both ran away from the competition in the men's 3,000-meter steeplechase, placing second and third behind three-time Olympian and former OSU standout Mark Croghan, who won the event with a 8:39.34.

Croghan said that he was pretty happy with his race and that he enjoys coming back to run at his former home.

"As for the meet itself and just being a former Buckeye, we would always try to pride ourselves in competing well at home. So whenever I do come back here, I still like to think that way and try to continue forth in that tradition," Croghan said.

Gerth, who was 14 seconds behind the world-class athlete in an 8:53.68, said it is always an honor running against Croghan.

"Mark is an amazing runner, and I think it says a lot about the guy to come back each year. It is great he comes back to run alongside us, and I think a lot of guys appreciate it for what it is worth," Gerth said.

Gerth also said overall he was pleased with his performance.

"I wasn't feeling 100 percent going into it, so coming in second and running a personal best when not feeling well is always wonderful," Gerth said. "I am already seven seconds faster from when I first qualified at the beginning of the season so if I can keep that same line of progress then I'm really going to be on the hunt at Big Ten."

On Saturday, OSU men's and women's hurdle squads proved to be a strong force as three athletes scored a regional qualifier in their events.

Senior Molly Logan took first in the 100-meter hurdles with a 13.42, while junior teammate Brandi Hogan fell just behind her with a 13.65 to claim third.

On the men's side, senior Joel Brown claimed first with a 13.98 as he leaned out Central State's Ricardo Melbourne by .04 seconds.

He said despite the weather, he couldn't complain too much about the come-from-behind victory in the hurdles.

"It wasn't the best race I've had in the past, but I am taking what I can get. I was happy with the end part of the race, however, because it kind of shows me something for later on," Brown said.

Brown also played an integral part as the anchor of the winning 4x100 meter relay team that edged out Central Michigan's Dana Thomas by a photo-finished .02 seconds.

Ohio State runner Tiffany Simms-McCray tries to catch up to Central Michigan's Connie Mallinson and Miami's Sarah Correll during an 800-meter qualifying heat in the Jesse Owens Track Classic Friday.

In the shot put, junior Dan Taylor once again scored his second OSU record in as many days with a 67-0.75 effort to win.

On Friday, he put forth another record-setting effort in the hammer throw with a 211-4 but placed second behind professional athlete Derek Woodske (229-2). Later on Saturday, Taylor added a 177-7 winning performance in the discus as well.

In the women's throwing events, OSU earned two more regional qualifiers as senior Krista Keir took first place in the women's discus, barely edging out freshman Amarachi Ukabam. Keir later qualified in the women's shot put with a third-place toss.

OSU sophomore Keturah Lofton took third in the hammer throw with a regional qualifier toss of 191-4, while Ukabam posted a regional qualifier as well with a 176-11.

In the jumps, senior Tami Smith took second place in the women's high, while junior Billy Mills also took second on the men's side.

In other distance events, OSU senior Derek Butler claimed second in the men's 5,000 on Friday, as he regionally qualified with a 14:21.92. Buckeye sophomore Stephanie Ray claimed first place with in the women's 800-meter open competition with a 2:15.52.

MOVIE REVIEW

X-acting vengeance on the movie competition

'X2' scores $85 million in opening weekend

By David Germain
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The mutants of "X-Men" are stronger than ever, showing even more box office power than in their first outing.

The superhero sequel "X2: X-Men United" debuted with $85.85 million domestically, the fourth-best opening-weekend gross ever and a 58 percent increase over the $54.5 million first weekend of the original "X-Men" three years ago.

Receipts for "X2" came in behind the record $114.8 million for "Spider-Man" over the same weekend last year. The first two "Harry Potter" movies had the second and third best openings, $90.3 million for "Sorcerer's Stone" and $88.4 million for "Chamber of Secrets."

"X2" drew about 14.3 million viewers, up 4.2 million from the opening weekend for "X-Men."

Distributor 20th Century Fox blanketed theaters with the sequel, which played in a record 3,741 cinemas, topping the previous high of 3,682 for last year's "Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets."

Character development, strong action sequences help 'X2' succeed

By Todd LaPlace
For the Lantern

Comic book writers love to retell the origin of their characters. It's nearly impossible to read back-issues of "Spider-Man," "Superman" or "Daredevil" without reading about radioactive spiders, spaceships from Krypton and blinding canisters of radioactive waste.

Even the "Batman" movies couldn't resist rehashing the Caped Crusader's humble beginnings in his four films.

But Bryan Singer has more respect for us than that. The director doesn't waste a single second of "X2: X-Men United's" 134 minutes on the mutant team's origin — you're expected to know it already (and don't expect me to go over it here). It's a good thing too, because "X2" is overflowing with action and subplots, some of which still are shortchanged in this massive picture.

The Mutant Registration Act, briefly discussed in the first film, has once again reared its ugly head. The act will force all mutants to publicly admit they are different, which will also effectively strip mutants of their basic rights to privacy. The tyrannical figurehead of this new proposal is William Stryker (Brian Cox), a strong anti-mutant activist with a passion for dangerous experiments.

Of course, the rest of the film is spelled out from there. In order to take Stryker down and end his fervent hatred, mutants everywhere will have to join forces to defeat their common enemy.

Singer pushes Wolverine (Hugh Jackman) into the spotlight for the heroes. Armed with a quick healing factor, a pair of adamantium claws and a mysterious past, he is trying to find how and why he got his metal-framed skeleton. Also returning are Jean Grey (Famke Janssen), who has a combination of both telepathy and telekinesis; Cyclops (James Marsden), who has a powerful energy beam emitting from his eyes; Storm (Halle Berry), who can control the weather; and Rogue (Anna Paquin), who can steal another mutant's powers merely by touch. Returning to lead the heroes is Professor Charles Xavier (Patrick Stewart), perhaps the most powerful telepath on the planet.

Magneto (Ian McKellan), who can control anything made out of metal, also returns to play opposite Xavier, and he is once again aided by the shape-shifter Mystique (Rebecca Romijn-Stamos).

And besides the old cast of characters (only Toad and Sabretooth didn't come back), "X2" tosses a few more mutants into the mix — Nightcrawler (Alan Cumming), who can teleport; Iceman (Shawn Ashmore), who can create and control ice; Pyro (Aaron Stanford), who can control (but not create) fire; and Deathstrike (Kelly Hu), who has a healing factor and claws similar to Wolverine's.

Unfortunately, all of these new characters weigh the film down and unnecessarily complicate the plot. In "X-Men," the characters form the two opposing teams, with few subplots. In "X2," the characters all scatter to different parts of the world, making a single coherent plot hard to nail down.

While "X2" lacks a cohesive plot, it is saved by several choice moments. Because he is the new kid on the block, Nightcrawler has the most to prove on the big screen, and thanks to "X2's" bigger budget, he succeeds beautifully. While it seems like he should not be the most stealthy guy — his skin is dark blue, he's covered in religious tattoos and he has a long tail — he barely makes an appearance in the picture's opening sequence, thanks to his lightning-fast teleporting. Shot in "Matrix"-style slow motion, clouds of smoke zip in and out of the film as Nightcrawler takes out Secret Service agent after Secret Service agent.

The other strong moment in the film also occurs early in the film, as Stryker storms Xavier's mansion — which features cameo appearances by Shadowcat (she can phase through walls), Colossus (he can turn his body into metal) and Siyryn (she has a deafening sonic scream).

Strong acting from surprising places also aids in the success of the picture. Despite coming from vastly different backgrounds — one is a Broadway trained actor, the other is a supermodel — Cumming and Romijn-Stamos' blue characters steal the show from fan-favorite Wolverine. Because both characters get to kick quite a lot of ass in this film, each emit an infectious giddiness that makes them a joy to watch.

The other magnificent pairing is once again between Stewart and McKellan. In their views on mutant-human relations, Xavier and Magneto are at opposite ends of the spectrum, but the actors make a strong connection. This works for their characters, old friends who merely went in different directions.

While such action sequences make "X2" very entertaining, an overly ambitious screenplay and some lackluster acting — once again, Berry doesn't settle on an accent — drag the picture down a little. Still, "X2" remains an improvement over the first film, and may actually lead the filmmakers further in the right direction to make the inevitable third film even better.

CONCERT REVIEW

Yorn delights PromoWest audience

By Brian Duff
Lantern arts writer

Even before Pete Yorn stepped on stage Saturday night, the PromoWest crowd was atwitter. Female fans hung on their male companions, who were only too happy to bask in the artist's reflected glow.

When Yorn — the world's most unlikely sex symbol — stepped on stage, an electric current ran through the audience. Reduced to a lanky silhouette by a backlight, Yorn was all hair, elbows and jutting guitar, looking somehow alone in a room of two thousand people.

Although critically applauded throughout his young career for subtle lyrics and precision musicianship, Yorn's greatest attribute is his smoky vocals, which successfully blend melancholy with melody. His voice was captivating Saturday, drawing the audience into his moody disposition without depressing the mood.

Yorn is often compared to fellow New Jersey native Bruce Springsteen. Like Springsteen, Yorn simply does not write bad songs. Despite a relatively minute catalogue that consists of two albums and a handful of b-sides and covers, he turned out an impressive 20-song show that rarely faltered and never failed.

Yorn does not have a full-time band, preferring to record solo by playing individual instruments separately and mixing the tapes — a practice that reveals him as a truly talented musician, but presents logistical complications on touring.

However, the concert band played excellent renditions of even Yorn's most challenging songs, infusing the same attention to detail and precision that is the hallmark of his studio albums.

One of the largest criticisms of Yorn's new album, "Day I Forgot," is its relative similarity to his first and more critically lauded "Musicforthemorningafter." In concert this "failing" actually has a much more positive application. Because the albums work almost as one, transitions between songs from different records were seamless, lending cohesion to the show.

Audience reaction to both opening bands — Rooney and Grandaddy — were warm but impatient.

Through his fervent fan base, Yorn has developed a reputation as an excellent live performer, which Saturday's audience was anxious to experience.

Yorn didn't disappoint. Highlights were many, including "Black," an underrated rocker that is reminiscent of Joy Division — dark and British. Yorn scored energetic audience reaction with hits such as "For Nancy (cos it's already is)" and "Life On a Chain," from 2001's "Musicforthemorningafter," as well as newer songs like "Burrito" — possibly the best song ever written about a 7-Eleven.

The highlight of the show came at the finale of the extended encore with "Murray," generally regarded as Yorn's most accomplished song. Chugging guitars and an audience sing-along brought a melancholy nonsense to the show's end that the audience carried out into the night.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

The Lantern will not publish illegal advertising or the advertising of illegal products or services. The Lantern reserves the right to reject advertising that denigrates individuals, groups or organizations based on race, gender, nationality, ethnicity, religion, mental or physical capacity, veteran's status, age or sexual orientation. The Lantern Business Manager will refer questionable advertising to the Publications Committee of the School of Journalism and Communication. The committee will recommend a decision on whether to publish the advertising to the Director of the school.

- Complete name, address and telephone number for each advertiser is required.
- Copy must be furnished by noon three days before publication, except for special publications whose deadlines will be announced.
- An advertisement is required to occupy at least as many inches in height as columns in width. Any advertisement exceeding 18 inches in height will be considered a "full column" (21 inches) advertisement and charged accordingly.
- Make-goods and adjustments will be considered for those advertisements only where errors occur in (a) business or group name, address, or phone number, (b) item price or (c) date, time or place of event. The error must be solely the fault of the Lantern. Adjustments will not exceed the cost of the advertisement and will be based on the portion of the advertisement nullified by the error. Minor spelling errors will not qualify for adjustment. Complaints must be registered with the Business Manager within 45 days of publication to qualify; otherwise the advertiser accepts full responsibility.
- Guaranteed position is sold at the Business Manager's discretion.
- A composition charge may apply to any changes, revisions or cancellations made after deadline.
- No proof will be furnished for any advertisement received after deadline or for an ad smaller than seven column inches.
- If the Lantern finds it necessary to stop contracted advertising because of nonpayment, the advertising agreement will be violated and the advertiser subject to a "re-bill" fee.
- The Lantern reserves the right to require prepayment for advertising, or to reject advertising, if the advertiser is delinquent in payment, or if the advertiser's credit is impaired. Advertisers must prepay all advertising until a satisfactory credit rating with the Lantern is established. A certified check or money order is required for out-of-town advertisers.
- Contract advertisers will furnish the Lantern with a "rate-holder" ad meeting contract minimums for use in any contract period for which the advertiser does not provide an ad.
- A tearsheet will be furnished for all display advertising run in the Lantern. Additional tearsheets are available (limit 15) provided the advertiser requests them from the Lantern office prior to publication.
- The advertiser agrees to indemnify and hold harmless the Ohio State University, its Board of Trustees and its officers, agents and employees from and against any and all loss, cost and expense, including reasonable attorney fees, resulting from the publication by the Lantern of the advertiser's advertisement.
- Advertisers in the Lantern agree that they will not represent themselves in any way as being endorsed by the Ohio State University.
- A mail-order advertiser is required to submit a sample "proof-of-product" prior to publication.
- Advertisers must request the return of their original ad materials; the Lantern will dispose of such materials 60 days after their first publication.
