The Rev. Stephen Van Kuiken, from the Mount Auburn Presbyterian Church in Cincinnati, speaks during a rally on April 8, 2003. A church judicial commission is preparing to rule on an issue involving Van Kuiken, who was rebuked for continuing to marry gay couples after a church court orderd him to stop.

Minister on trial for gay marriages

By Lisa Cornwell Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) members and other church observers around the country are closely watching the next phase in the case of a Cincinnati minister convicted of violating church law by performing same-sex marriages.

On April 29, the Presbyterian court in northwest Ohio that oversees churches in Ohio and Michigan will rule on whether the Rev. Stephen Van Kuiken violated the denomination's constitution.

Church observers say the case could have a major impact on the authority of the Presbyterian constitution at a time when various Protestant denominations are struggling with challenges to the authority of their governing documents.

"All mainline Protestant denominations are having to deal with a broader issue than just the gay marriage and ordination questions," said David Neff, editor of Christianity Today magazine. "They are having to decide what is the authority of the church doctrines that have provided the basis for those denominations.'

sis if denominations start viewing their governing documents as general guidance rather than in Lenoir, N.C., that affirms biblichurch law.

"If denominations lose the authority of their church documents, how will these groups define their identity?" he said.

Two other denominations have faced similar problems. The United Methodist Church recently acquitted a lesbian minister on a charge that she violated church law by living openly in a lesbian relationship and an openly gay man was consecrated as an Episcopal bishop

The constitution of the 2.5 million-member denomination defines marriage as a covenant between a man and a woman. The highest Presbyterian court ruled in 2000 that ministers may bless same-sex unions but cannot marry those couples.

The significance of the Van Kuiken case goes to the heart of the question of whether the Presbyterian Church will enforce its own constitution or has, in fact, declared that it is no longer a Kuiken continued to marry couconstitution but a local option for ples after the court ordered him churches - merely a guide or a to stop and was ousted in June as the Presbyterian Lay Committee - the independent group based cal traditional values.

Michael Adee, a spokesman for the Minnetonka, Minn. based More Light Presbyterians organization that works for full participation of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered people in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), also expects the case to affect how the constitution is interpreted.

It is up to the legislative body of the church to change the constitution, but every court case influences its interpretation," Adee said. "I think this case will Presbyterian definitely focus more attention on our constitution and point out changes that need to be made if we are to be truly diverse."

It has been almost a year since the judicial commission of the Cincinnati Presbytery — a cluster of Presbyterian churches in the Cincinnati area — convicted Van Kuiken of violating church law by marrying same-sex couples and publicly rebuked him. Van wish book," said the Rev. Parker a Presbyterian minister by the Neff said there could be a cri- Williamson, chief executive of Cincinnati Presbytery for violating the court order.

The permanent judicial commission of the synod that oversees Ohio and Michigan churches in February reinstated Van Kuiken, ruling Feb. 6 that the Cincinnati Presbytery could not remove him while the lower court's order was under appeal.

Van Kuiken, a married heterosexual, is hoping the Maumee court will rule in his favor again, despite the constitution.

I have always said that just following orders has never been an excuse," he said. "Individuals and the courts should have the ability and the obligation to follow their own consciences."

A new library

OSU gets cheap on new plans

Last week the university administrators decided the fate of the William Oxley Thompson Library book tower when they chose to adopt one of two suggested architectural plans — the Tower Scheme, which incorporates building additions around the main tower. The interior of the tower will be redesigned and renovated, but the general structure and floor size will remain the same.

The main advantage of the New Core Scheme — demolishing the structure and installing a new building — is its greater utilization of space. However, Wesley Boomgaarden, a main library renovation project officer, said the Tower Scheme was chosen for two reasons: cost, and "its iconic value to Ohio State," according to The Lantern. He expounded upon this, saying, "An important second factor was tradition, legacy and heritage in the look and feel of the stacks tower in the Oval."

In short, the main advantages are lower costs and hypocrisy. While it may be beating a dead horse, the argument is still applicable: The university gave up any right it had to using "iconic value" as a viable reason for leaving anything alone during renovations to any other part of campus the second it made the decision to overhaul the Oval in the middle of spring.

That technicality aside, the "tradition, legacy and heritage" of the book tower are questionable. To many students, the upper floors of the tower are claustraphobically short, the concrete-block walls are uninviting, industrial and not conducive to studying, and the tower itself has been surrounded by rumors of sexual assault and indecency made possible by the upper floors' small corridors, absorbance of sound and opacity of the walls of books.

The odds students would reject an atrium design to save the tower are slim to none, and slim just transferred to Michigan.

By taking tradition out of the equation, we have essentially picked cheaper over more expensive so we could "stay within budget." But is that what the university needs?

While buildings dedicated to individual fields of study are important, a campus' main library is to the university administrators what rim size and bling luminance is to a Honda Civic owner, everything.

The students are no less proud and also benefit enormously from having a library that is not only rich in resources, but aesthetically pleasing and designed with studying mentality in mind — all things a university owes its students — especially those who will be deprived of a main-campus library for as long as three years. And unlike a building dedicated to physics or architecture, almost all students who attempt to gain passing marks need the main library at some point in their careers.

Skimping on a main library is like cutting corners on the foundation of a skyscraper: counter-productive, a source of embarrassment to students, and detrimental to any person who uses the facility on an even semi-regular basis. If OSU wants to save tradition, it should save the ones most students care about — not the ones they can use as token concessions to students and excuses for penny-pinching. If OSU is going to deprive students of a library, the university must give this project the best effort it can to give young scholars the best finished result it can.

More dorm rooms

New buildings better than used

Ohio State is trying to open more doors — at least for students desiring to live on campus. Because residence halls are becoming overpopulated, the need for extra space is no longer a simple request, but a necessity. Many residence hall inhabitants are faced with cramped quarters and scarce study space as study rooms undergo a "Trading Spaces" transformation into temporary housing. But few students banished to such locations would call their sojourn there brief — often, not enough rooms open up during the year to upgrade students into a permanent dorm room. Housing requests are on high demand, especially because incoming freshmen (minus commuters) are required to live on campus for the first year. This, coupled with a high return rate among second-years and tempting, new, renovated residence halls, has students looking to stay on campus, rather than off.

To accommodate those interested in residence halls, The Office of Student Affairs has offered several suggestions to increase housing. The project proposes to convert the offices of Lincoln Tower, Archer House and the space at the Fawcett Center into resident rooms and spaces, potentially adding 1,000 beds. While revamping old buildings may seem costeffective, the plan calls for a quick fix without considering if the housing is convenient to students.

The Fawcett Center, situated off of Olentangy River Road across from the Schottensteins Center, is the most segregated from main campus than the other two locations. Even Lincoln Tower is in walking distance from the major buildings. Most choose to live in residence halls for easy access to on-campus locations and activities. But Fawcett is out of reach from the hustle and bustle OSU's campus is notorious for. At the least, a frequent busing system would have to be installed to give students fast and easy transport.

While the Fawcett's primary drawback is distance, the Archer House is also lacking, but in space. Although it is located on north campus and is home to Human Resources, which will move when the Gateway project is complete, the entire structure does not have enough space for many rooms. Perhaps instead of returning Archer to its former state, the Lincoln Tower offices should be moved there, making it easier for students to visit high traffic offices such as the registrar, financial aid and Buck ID.

The upside to using pre-existing buildings lies mainly in the cost, but just as state-of-the-art research facilities are being built, the same should be so for residence halls, as students deserve modern, up-to-date facilities that will not already host problems many older buildings have. Paving the way of a student's future means providing a solid education, and a conducive place to live, giving students the OSU experience they paid for.

See you later, Español!

In his first policy statement since taking office Saturday, Spain's Prime Minster Jose Rodriquez Luis Zapatero ordered all of the 1,300 Spanish troops out of Iraq due in part to tactical differences.

"With the information we have, and which we have gathered over the past few weeks, it is not foreseeable that the United Nations will adopt a (satisfactory) resolution," Zapatero said to The Associated Press.

The move is an embodiment of longstanding public disapproval of Spanish involvement in Operation Iraqi Freedom. It stands as the sharpest, most acute critique of Bush's handling of the situation since France's non-involvement nearly one year ago.

"Driven by the deepest democratic convictions, the government does not want,to, cannot and will not act against or behind the backs of the will of the Spanish people." Zapatero said.

Spanish people," Zapatero said.

This action should prove favorable to the majority of Spanish citizens, who had opposed going to war and the pro-war stance of former Prime Minster Jose Maria Aznar. But the effects of such a crucial policy change are uncertain for American citizens.

Most likely, the new developments abroad caused by Spain's decisive break with Bush's conservative administration will mean intensive shifts in the everyday vocabulary most Americans take for granted.

As was the case with french fries and French kisses, American citizens everywhere will now be forced to rename words relating to Spain and its cultural influence on the United States.

Plans to formally reject or rename many Spanish words already are being drafted by top Bush executives. Topping the lists of words in question are enchilada, which will be changed to "freedom rolls," and Spanish Harlem, which New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg has agreed to rename "Liberty Village." While these linguistic changes will have lasting, countrywide influence, they may affect Ohio State students more acutely than any other demographic group. According to top officials, margaritas will soon be called "victory cocktails," and tequila will now regain its former, more appropriate label — "devil."

Other parts of the U.S. vocabulary is also uncertain.

As U.S. involvement prolongs and other countries start to drop out of a cause most were less enthusiastic about than the United States, the country's vocabulary will be forced, unfortunately, to shrink. With more than 20 countries helping the American war effort, the possibilities for grudge-influenced re-labeling are nearly endless.

Many experts realize the loss of allies such as the Ukraine or the Philippines would have little or no effect on American speech. Still, many have said publicly, the repercussions of losing Italy or Poland could be dangerous.

"Entire menus and sections of major cities would have to undergo massive government restructuring," said an expert speaking under conditions of anonymity. "Not to mention churches and monuments all over the country."

Many feel that even this type of action is not out of the question.

"America has a long history of deleting or changing words to get back at a certain country for not agreeing with us," said one, referencing both the recent anti-French wave and the anti-German linguistic changes during World War II.

Many feel that the most detrimental loss would be of the United States' closest ally, Great Britain, whose populace has continually voiced disapproval of how the Iraqi invasion has been handled.

"I don't mean just from a tactical standpoint," he said. "Having to rename all the words from Great Britain would be a task almost unthinkable."

Low wages at Wal-Mart

is a graduate student in journalism and communication. He can be reached for comment at huge.8@osu.edu. It was the summer of 2000, and I headed east toward the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts to attend a three-day music festival. Relieved to rid myself of the claustrophobic, cubicle-based internship that had ruined most of my summer, I relished the chance to be on the road with good friends, lots of music and little responsibility.

Somewhere along Interstate 90 in western New York, we realized that we had forgotten to bring a tent — an important item for a weekend-long, outdoor event. One friend suggested we stop at an approaching Wal-Mart.

"No way. Wal-Mart sucks," I said.
"Well, what the hell else are we going to do, sleep in the rain?"

He was right. It was supposed to rain all weekend, and the thought of trying to sleep on a bed of mud with raindrops falling on my face was enough motivation to break my staunch opposition to Sam Walton's corporate empire.

We bought the tent and continued eastward. The festival was great, but the rain barely let up for the length of the weekend. The roof of the tent leaked, a pole snapped and one of the zippers broke on the second day.

"Wal-Mart still sucks," I said, and since that day, I haven't set foot in one. Simply put, the entity that is Wal-Mart has systematically reduced the potential standard of living for a vast portion of the world's population.

By employing more than one million U.S. citizens (and untold numbers of non-citizens), who average less than $20,000 a year in salary and have little available to them in terms of affordable health care, Wal-Mart is waging war on the middle class.

But the effects of Wal-Mart's priceobsessed business model don't stop there. In order to stay afloat, competitors are forced to adopt similar practices low wages, no unions, no benefits — if they have any hope of competing with Wal-Mart. While this may force businesses to become more productive and creative, it will also force some out of the market completely — anyone remember Big Bear?

A recent report on National Public Radio discussed the possibility of Wal-Mart expanding its empire into other areas of commerce, such as banking and home loans. In reality, Wal-Mart's size enables it to enter any market. How about Wal-Mart University or Sam Walton Memorial Hospital? Cheaper is surely better.

In a free market economy, how can the seller be blamed? Wal-Mart provides the same goods at a lower price. Even some Wal-Mart detractors have argued that the benefits of such business practices are passed onto the customer, who is the primary focus and beneficiary.

This argument is a complete fallacy. The main beneficiaries of Wal-Mart's business model are those at the top of Wal-Mart's corporate structure, including its CEO, H. Lee Scott Jr., who raked in $18 million in 2002.

Our role as customers in Wal-Mart's structure is that of a tool used to meet the end goal of bringing in money. By patronizing Wal-Mart, we are enabling a corporation to continue to pay its workers barely livable wages and offer health benefits that are priced too high for some to even consider.

We, as customers, are furthering a system that has driven suppliers to extreme measures in order to reduce their prices—including the shipment of thousands of manufacturing jobs to China and other parts of the world where wages are disgustingly low and working conditions are abhorrent.

Wal-Mart shoppers perpetuate an economic trend that is hurtling toward a single-minded obsession with price. Selling goods at the lowest possible prices comes out of paying the lowest wages. We have seen this system before in our country.

It was once called slavery.

YOUR VIEWS

Scientific studies helpful, not stupid

There is a clear line between being cynically skeptical and being cynically ignorant. The arguments made in Friday's editorial "Stupid Studies" is not only beyond ignorant, but misguidedly simplified, and at worst inherently stupid. The arrogance shown by the author to write such an "asinine" argument based on ill-informed assumptions about the futility of these types of medical research is astounding.

There are a lot of things in the world that we think are explained already but actually have not stood the test of science. Think about this example — "caffeine, sleeplessness linked in teenagers." You might say: "Duh, stupid, it is so obvious it keeps you awake. That's why people drink coffee in the morning, idiot."

coffee in the morning, idiot."

Well is it? Might there be other factors: stress, TV, Wal-Mart, hormones, etcetera.? What happened if we replaced caffeine with TV? "Late-night TV shows, sleeplessness linked in teenagers." Duh. It makes sense, right?

Teenagers enjoy watching latenight TV and it helps them keep awake in the wee hours of the night. It's so obvious. Well is it? Is it the soda-pop teenagers love drinking or late-night reruns on cable TV? Could it be their raging hormones or just the stress of trying to do well in school? Or could it be that high school classes start too early in the morning?

As you can see, if you can account for all of these, then caffeine might not be linked to a teenager's sleeplessness after all. That is why there was this "asinine investigation" to really see how big of an effect, if there is any, caffeine plays in sleeplessness in teenagers. With this study, at least we "definitely" know now that caffeine plays a role.

I am also disturbed that the editorial is directing its cynicism and misguided skepticism toward science. Is this a reflection of how ignorant our society has become?

A society in which a contigent of the population supports anti-scientific lessons in high school biology (thinks the sun revolves around the earth) thinks that magnets really relieve muscle aches, promotes banning dihydrogen monoxide and believes pills will make your male member longer and your mammaries bigger, etcetera. Are these scientists really "money-mongers?" I don't really see any huge monetary rewards for these scientists who are doing these studies.

In fact, they might be subject to lawsuits by soda, coffee, beer and liquor industries (in addition to low-carb propagandists). Such lawsuits, no matter how frivolous, are very costly, especially for a typical scientist who doesn't earn that much compared with other professionals.

The author of this editorial might think these studies by "uninspired, unimaginative money-mongers" were trivial. If the author would actually take the time, effort, inspiration and imagination to explore these studies, maybe he might learn something new instead of whipping out hateful, invective shill towards scientists who are actually trying to make sense of these issues and help the cause of curing, preventing or at least lessen the burden of these diseases.

In conclusion, your ignorant, "asinine" editorial has added nothing in increasing the understanding of sleeplessness, health benefit (or lack thereof) of low-carb diets and alcoholism. It is an obvious waste of ink, column space, reading time and money.

U.S. considering mandatory draft

I have just become aware of the fact that legislation is pending in the U.S. House and Senate that could have a life-changing impact on most students at Ohio State and all young adults in the U.S. Senate Bill 89 and House Bill 163, which propose reinstating the draft, have been introduced and are now being considered by the Armed Services Committees.

If enacted, these bills will require two years of military or other national service for all men and women ages 18-26, with no educational deferments possible. If you'd like to interrupt your education and life to spend a couple of years in Iraq or whatever the next country is we decide to invade, you can ignore this. If you'd rather not, let your senators and representatives know they can't quietly slip the draft back into law. Our voices and votes count — use them.

Men's volleyball takes conference title

OSU puts injuries, rough losses behind; sweep weekend games to take title

By Cornelis Trouw Lantern sports writer

Amid flashbulbs and family members, the Ohio State men's volleyball team celebrated its first Midwest Intercollegiate Volleyball Association title in four years Saturday night after wins over Quincy and Ball State at St. John Arena.

On Friday, junior middle hitter Scott Spurlock's 11 kills and 10 blocks powered OSU's 3-1 (30-27, 30-27, 24-30, 30-24) win over Ball State, which put the Buckeyes within one win of the title. Sophomore outside hitter Andy Cole led the Buckeyes (20-8 overall, 13-3 MIVA) Saturday with 16.5 points and 14 kills, as the team swept Quincy in three games (30-26, 30-24, 30-20) to clinch the MIVA title outright.

In addition to the league's regwins this weekend mean the Buckeyes will host the MIVA tournament next weekend.

"Everybody's got to come here now," Hanson said.

The players also said they recognized the significance of fying in multiple ways.

"Personally, I think it's a big step from where I was when I came in as a freshman," Spurlock said. "As a team, it's huge because we get home-court advantage in the playoffs. As banged-up as we are, it's nice to be at home and not have to

The team honored its seniors before the game Saturday. Senior setter Mark Peckham said winning the MIVA title was the realization of a career-long goal.

"I really didn't want to leave here without bringing home a conference championship,"

The OSU women's track and field team took first place at the 2004 All-Ohio Track and Field Championships on Saturday, while the men finished fifth. For the women, it was their second consecutive All-Ohio title. OSU, with its team score of 158.5 points, outdistanced runner-up Akron by over 35 points.

Skies weren't as rosy for the men, leaver. The Buckeyes finished with a team score of 89, placing them three points behind fourth-place Akron. The University of Cincinnati took first place overall with a team score of 215.50.

One major reason for the men's finish was their inability to field their typical full roster. The Buckeyes competed without most of the men's distance team and All-American thrower Dan Taylor.

"(For) the guys it was impossible to win because we had eight different guys out in California," coach Russ Rogers said. "I wasn't looking to win the men's, but we're definitely going to win the women's. We're full

"I think I did pretty good," Morris said. "The wind was a factor, but other than that I think I did pretty good."

In addition to Morris, senior jumper Nosa Ehimwenman earned first place in the triple jump and fourth place in the long jump for the men.

Other individual winners included senior Molly Logan and freshman Jenna Harris. Logan won the women's 100-meter hurdles with a time of 13:06, while Harris anchored the 4x100-meter relay team en route to its winning time of 46.03. Logan also competed in the Morris said he would have liked to have done better in his start.

Film rendition of grim Marvel hero couldn't be worse

By James Moore Lantern arts writer

"The Punisher," the big screen adaptation of a comic book antihero, is disappointing and remarkably bad in nearly every way.

The film is a mishmash of the character's story of origin, a dozen generic action movies, a liberal cribbing from the far superior comic book miniseries "The Punisher: Welcome Back Frank" by Garth Ennis and Steve Dillon, and a dull plot. Frank Castle (Thomas Jane) is a recently retired FBI agent whose last case has come back to haunt him. In revenge for killing a mob boss' (a hammy John Travolta) son, Castle's entire family is massacred while conveniently attending a family reunion on a tropical island. Surviving the attack, Castle returns to New York, moves into an apartment building with some unusual neighbors and launches a one-man war on the mob responsible for his family's deaths.

of 1980s action/revenge movies. A Reagan-era extremist-vigilante aesthetic permeates every aspect of the film, from the plotting to the way the violence is presented.

The dialog is frequently laughable. For example, after Castle's family is murdered, the man who saved his life during the attack says, "Go with God," to which Castle grimly intones, "God's gonna sit this one out." Dreadful.

The music staggers from ominous puesdo-opera at dramatic moments, to nu-metal tracks that play over the credits. More importantly, the pacing is horrendous as scenes end abruptly.

To some extent, the flaws lie in the character himself. The Punisher is an emotionally dead man who has lost all humanity and has become, for all intents and purposes, a serial killer. Whether the film works depends on whether a viewer can sympathize with his psychosis, as well their capacity to appreciate copious amount of explosions.

The action sequences are occasionally interesting but more often sloppy and unoriginal. The movie uses a pre-Matrix/John Woo style of violence that generally lacks any impact because the Punisher is apparently invincible. There's no risk for the character, which inspires no interest.

The film is not entirely without its positives, most of which are taken from the Ennis miniseries. The supporting cast of Spacker Dave (Ben Fostor) and Bumpo (John Pinette) provide great comedy relief and a human dimension to the film, "The Punisher" feels like the and while Rebbeca Romijn-Stainbred offspring of any number mos is far too glamorous and entirely miscast to play Joan, she too brings a human element.

The filmmaker's attempts at Ennis-esque dark comedy are well done, if infrequent, which demonstrates how dour the rest of the film is.

By the end of the film, "The Punisher" reveals itself to be a bloated, mixed-up and bizarrely retro film that will appeal only to action junkies and the most diehard fans of the comic.

1. Complete name, address and telephone number for each advertiser is required.

Copy must be furnished by noon three days before publication, except for special publications whose deadlines will be announced.

An advertisement is required to occupy at least as many inches in height as columns in width. Any advertisement exceeding 18 inches in height will be considered a "full column" (21 inches) advertisement and charged accordingly.

4. Make-goods and adjustments will be considered for those advertisements only where errors occur in (a) business or group name, address, or phone number, (b) item price or (c) date, time or place of event. The error must be solely the fault of the Lantern, Adjustments will not exceed the cost of the advertisement and will be based on the portion of the advertisement nullified by the error. Minor spelling errors will not qualify for adjustment. Complaints must be registered with the Business Manager within 45 days of publication to qualify; otherwise the advertiser accepts full responsibility.

Guaranteed position is sold at the Business Manager's discretion.

A composition charge may apply to any changes, revisions or cancellations made after deadline.

No proof will be furnished for any advertisement received after deadline or for an ad smaller than seven column inches.

If the Lantern finds it necessary to stop contracted advertising because of nonpayment, the advertising agreement will be violated and the advertiser subject to a "re-bill" fee. The Lantern reserves the right to require prepayment for advertising, or to reject advertising, if the advertiser is delinquent in payment, or if the advertiser's credit is impaired. Advertisers must prepay all advertising until a satisfactory credit rating with the Lantern is established. A certified check or money order is required for out-of-town advertisers. 10. Contract advertisers will furnish the Lantern with a "rate-holder" ad meeting contract minimums for use in any contract period for which the advertiser does not provide an ad. 11. A tearsheet will be furnished for all display advertising run in the Lantern. Additional tearsheets are available (limit 15) provided the advertiser requests them from the Lantern office prior to publication. 12. The advertiser agrees to indemnify and hold harmless the Ohio State University, its Board of Trustees and its officers, agents and employees from and against any and all loss, cost and expense, including reasonable attorney fees, resulting from the publication by the Lantern of the advertiser's advertise-

13. Advertisers in the Lantern agree that they will not represent themselves in any way as being endorsed by the Ohio State University.

14. A mail-order advertiser is required to submit a sample "proof-of-product" prior to publication. 15. Advertisers must request the return of their original ad materials; the Lantern will dispose of such materials 60 days after their first publication.

"We didn't drive it well," he said. "You have to play from the fairway if you were other end of the green. going to have a good round.'

enough low rounds to earn an overall score of 886 and take the tournament win. Their score stood nine strokes below the Buckeyes, who finished with Senior Brett Williams named a laundry list of reasons for the course's difficulty.

"The pins were really tough, the course

Brown said that in order to overcome those challenges, a golfer must focus on who closed his Sunday with a holed chip

"You've got to hit the ball for 18 straight holes," he said. "You have to drive good, The Buckeyes managed a third-place hit good irons, chip good and putt good."

That advice became evident to freshman Colin Biles during the 18th hole yesterday. After a sliced drive, Biles found himself in the rough and in front of a guys didn't play very smart on their home tree. The freshman then repeated his first error, slicing his ball and nailing the Brown said not only did the Buckeye impending tree. He continued his lack of stroke and watched it sail over the green. Lost in a web of rookie frustration, Biles yelped and fired another shot over the

The shot of the day came from Doran, from the fringe.

"You chip it to make it," said Doran. "I was out of it individually, but maybe we needed it to beat (another team)."

It may have been the best shot of the match, but the best competition came from Kent State's Ryan Yip and Toledo's Brad Heaven. The two completed their rounds tied for the best individual score. To decide the victor they played sudden-death playoff golf.

On the second hole, Yip two-putted to garner a four. The pressure turned to Heaven, who stared down a 20-foot putt that would send the matchup to another hole. As the ball approached the gallery The hole was a microcosm of the lost gasped, and when the ball kissed the edge of the hole and lipped just wide of falling in, the day was done and the golfers spent.

The disappointing finish for the Buckeyes did not dim the dreams of Brown, whose goal for his team has not changed.

"Our ultimate goal is to win the Big Ten championship," he said. "We have potential but we have to play all the time.

Tressel said the scrimmage gave the team an opportunity to participate in a larger number of plays than what will be allotted to it on Saturday for the Scarlet and Gray game.

"There was a bunch of plays out there today, and there's a lot we'll learn. Every scrimmage and every practice is critical," he said. "I think we're competing hard, and (the players are) doing everything asked of them."

The offense will wear the scarlet practice jerseys until the next jersey scrimmage, which will take place before the regular season starts. Since Tressel took over as head coach the offense has worn the scarlet jerseys once before after last year's spring jersey scrimmage. He said the defensive players are a competitive group and look forward to the chance of wearing the jerseys again.
