Faculty appointment legislation stirs debate

Clinical teachers possibility for hands in colleges of law, business

By Dave Lieberman Lantern staff writer

119th year, No. 78

A new breed of professors could be arriving on Ohio State's campus within the next year.

Legislation to allow colleges to make clinical faculty appointments is being hotly debated within Faculty

These clinical faculty members would be non-tenured and serve primarily to instruct students on working with real patients or clients.

The proposed legislation, authored by Vice Provost Barbara Snyder, is in response to a desire by some units such as the Moritz College of Law and the Fisher College of Business - to hire clinical faculty for specialized programs and centers. If approved, these colleges could attract more instructors, offer additional sections of core curriculum courses and provide better management of internship and clinical opportunities for their students.

Provost Ed Ray, during his speech to University Senate Thursday, asked senators to work with Snyder to draft agreeable rules which would enable a college to offer clinical faculty appointments. Ray specifically cited the possible benefits to the College of Law's Housing Clinic and Legislation Clinic - programs which provide students with the practical skills necessary to adjudicate landlord-tenant disputes or assist political leaders in developing legislation.

"The market for the best and brightest faculty to staff such clinics is national in scope," Ray said. "Our ability to attract the best colleagues here depends, in part, on whether we can offer them clinical faculty appointments.

Dean Nancy Rogers said with clinical faculty appointments the College of Law would be able to recruit and retain the best attorneys to co-teach and supervise students in clinical courses, such as criminal-defense instruction or dispute mediation. In most cases, they would be co-teaching the course with a tenured-faculty

"Clinical teachers are particularly effective teachers in 'lawyering skills' courses because they tend to focus their teaching and research on issues related to practice," Rogers said, noting the college's tenured faculty has unanimously supported hiring clinical faculty.

At this time Faculty Rules only permit the College of Medicine and Public Health to hire clinical faculty. The primary responsibility of these individuals is to provide patient care within Ohio State University Medical

If Snyder's legislation is enacted, Rogers would still have to submit a specific proposal by the College of Law to University Senate for approval. The Fisher College of Business also has a proposal to use clinical faculty to teach core undergraduate

However, the legislation has stirred intense debate in Faculty Council — the governing body of the university's faculty — over possible negative effects of allowing clinical faculty appointments in the future. Marilyn Blackwell, chair of Faculty Council and professor of Germanic literature, said, "There is a strong likelihood that people applying for a clinical-track faculty position would have weaker qualifications than

Dumpster firebug in treatment program

By Mike Gehrig Lantern staff writer

After being charged twice with setting Dumpster fires in the off-campus area, Brent Thomas, 21, from Newton Falls, Ohio, must complete a 30-day alcohol treatment program. He has to finish the program before appearing again in front of the judge who sentenced him to jail two times in the last

In August, Thomas, who does not live in Columbus, was charged with a fire code violation, felony arson and possession of criminal tools after starting two Dumpster fires while at a party east of campus.

He appeared before Franklin

County Environmental Court Judge Richard C. Pfeiffer on Dec. 20. Pfeiffer ordered Thomas to spend three entire days in jail and to spend every night in jail for the next three months.

That same evening an undercover police officer caught Thomas starting fires in trash bins on East 11th Avenue and Chittenden. Thomas was again charged with a fire code violation and possession of criminal tools, as well as resisting arrest.

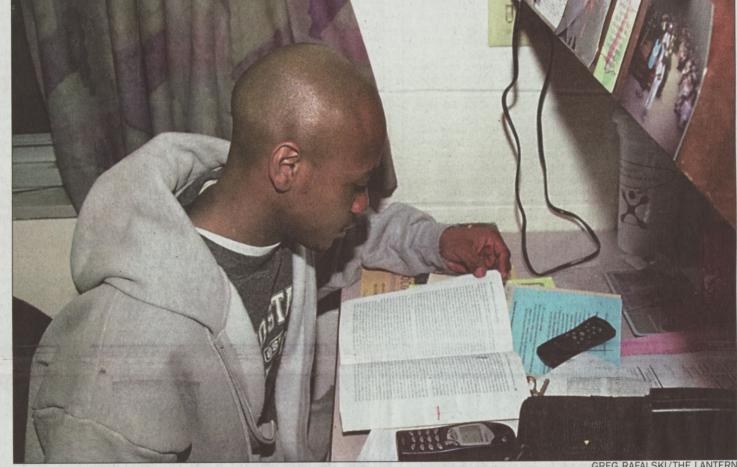

"It's outrageous. It's not a joke," said Sgt. Earl Smith, spokesman for the Columbus Division of Police. Smith said the Dumpster fire problem is still very serious, even though there have been several recent arrests. "There's no excuse for it other than stupidity, which shouldn't be an excuse," Smith said.

Thomas' father claimed his son, who is diabetic, did not know what he was doing because he was intoxicated.

More students than ever are entering col-

The study researched incoming freshmen for autumn and summer 2000-2001, ages 19 and younger, who took remedial English or math. The study refers to remedial classes as those taken by freshmen for no college credit. The study only included state funded colleges and universities. Out of the 57,985 freshman researched, 29 percent took math, 19 percent took English and 36 percent took

Eighty-four percent of students who took English 109 in Autumn 1998 were successful in other courses in the field, compared to 89 percent for all other first-year students that quarter. Those figures fall in line with the other kinds of retention studies that we've done on our own program," she said. OSU's main campus rated well in the study. Out of the 5,130 students, 4 percent were enrolled in remedial math or English. The study results were divided by branches, and the Marion campus of Ohio State ranked the highest with 298 students researched, and 47 percent enrolled in remedial math or English. The OSU main campus had the lowest percentage. "There is a lot of good teaching or writing Households eligible for HEAP receive assistance through a one-time payment of up to $175 per winter season.

"These payments from CMACAO go directly to the customer's heating source, reinstating the utility or keeping it from being shut off," said Larry Hall, spokesman for CMACAO.

To qualify for the program, a household must meet the poverty guidelines set by the federal government. A household of four can have a total gross household income of up to $26,475 and still be eligible for the HEAP program, according to the Ohio Department of Development's income guide- Almost 700 of those came from

There are two ways to apply for the program. Interested families and households should call 340-HEAP to schedule an appointment with an income counselor or visit one of the six action centers located in Franklin County. The closest action center to campus is the Northside Action Center, at 15. 15th Ave., in the Short North.

HEAP also offers Emergency Home Energy Assistance Pro-"Among criteria for eligibili-

Families interested in EHEAP are encouraged to come to one of the action centers for immediate help.

According to the CMACAO 2000-2001 report to the community, 13,181 families avoided disconnection or had their utilities restored through the emergency HEAP program. This

"That doesn't mean that the bill goes away, but that does mean that you won't have to make a $200 gas payment if you only have $25."

Besides seeking heating bill relief there are other things students can do to help lower winter heating bills.

Pfeiffer ordered psychological testing for Thomas at the last hearing, in addition to the 30-day alcohol treatment program.

According to Dressler, the judge must weigh two issues: what is best for the defendant versus sending a message to others.

Kirwan promotes diversity while in NYC

Lantern staff writer

Ohio State President William "Brit" Kirwan spoke in New York Thursday about the importance of promoting racial and ethnic diversity to a group of corporate executives and university presidents.

"There is a significant demographic shift underway in our nation, with a rapid growth in minority populations and essentially no growth in the majority population," Kirwan said.

The Business-Higher Education Forum, an organization consisting of university presidents and CEOs, released a report stating it is crucial to increase the participation rates of minorities in higher education, or America may face a social and economic crisis.

The report, "Investing in People: Developing All of America's Talent on Campus and in the Workplace," also documents how greater diversity adds value to the workplace and the learning environment of universities. Kirwan, who sits as co-chair of the forum's Diversity Initiative, said while minorities partake in higher education and graduate from college, it is at a

One challenge discussed in the report states college campuses should create an environment which values diversity and provides support which helps students complete their studies. They want to review some of the strategies and policies designed to foster diversity and make sure they are meeting their goals.

The report also wants to ensure teachers are prepared to work effectively with racially and ethnically diverse students. The report encourages corporate foundations to provide support for diversity initiatives and share their results with professional peers.

Kirwan has already presented the findings of the report to the other university presidents

A summary of comments from a Nov. 15 Faculty Council meeting identifies additional concerns - an attack on tenure and the vulnerability clinical faculty will have because they will not have tenure. Legislation makes it possible for clinical faculty to comprise up to 16 percent of a college's total faculty. However, Faculty Council insists the cap on clinical faculty be no greater than 10 percent, Blackwell

A straw vote was also taken at the meeting. One senator voted in favor of the legislation; 22 senators voted against it; and 14 senators said they would be in favor of allowing clinical faculty if substantial revisions to the legislation were

The Faculty Council summary also revealed senators generally accepted the College of Law's proposed use of clinical faculty. There was greater concern over the College of Business's plan to use their clinical faculty to perform undergraduate teaching duties.

Doug MacBeth, professor of educational public policy and leadership, summarized the perspective of many of the faculty during that Nov. 15 meeting.

"The proposed new (legislation) would have a profound influence on the shape of the university throughout its colleges, its faculty, its mission, it governance," Mac-Beth said. The legislation is now being revised by Snyder to address some of the faculty senators' concerns. A finalized version should be submitted to the senate for discussion later this quarter.

Tubbs said Bush suffered an abrasion on his left cheek the size of a half dollar and a bruise on his lower lip, apparently from falling onto the floor from a couch.

Bush was alone in the room watching TV while his wife, first lady Laura Bush, was in a nearby room on the telephone.

Tubbs said Bush believes he was out only for a few seconds because when he awoke, his two dogs were sitting in the same position they were when he lost consciousness.

"He said it (the pretzel) didn't seem to go down right," Tubbs said.

According to the study, students who take college preparation curricu-lum in high school are better prepared than students who don't. College preparation curriculum includes four years of English, science, social studies, and three years of math.

The study points out that while most colleges are selective in their admission process, some colleges must admit any student with a high school diploma, a factor that could influence

"I agree with a study that says students who take college preparatory classes are better prepared than stu-dents who don't," said Chad Wise, a freshman in business.

Remedial classes are designed to help students address their weak areas in these subjects before moving on to higher course work.

The classes are smaller, allowing more individual attention for students. Students are asked to do challenging, college level work over the course of three quarters, as opposed to working on college level reading and writing in one five-hour course.

SAN VICENTE DEL CAGUAN, Colombia - Stoking fears that Colombia's war will enter its bloodiest phase, leftist rebels declared the peace process over yesterday and prepared to abandon the safe haven that has served as headquarters for three years of negotiations.

Moments before the announcement by the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, a military warplane circled over the site of the failed peace talks in the hamlet of Los Pozos. Troops massed in military bases across this South American country, and even reservists were called to duty, prepared to retake the guerrilla sanctuary, an area roughly twice the size of New Jersey.

The government ceded the zone to the rebels, known by their Spanish acronym FARC, as a condition to start the peace talks and the rebels had pledged to give it back if the talks ended.

President Andres Pastrana, meanwhile, met with armed forces commander Gen. Fernando Tapias at the presidential palace in the capital, Bogota. There was no statement from the government or the military following the closed-door discussion.

Three years of talks have only yielded squabbling, and at midnight Saturday Pastrana's patience appeared to have worn out. He ordered the insurgents to come up with a viable peace offer or leave by tonight.

The ultimatum ... handed down by the president changes everything we have agreed upon during the past three years and thus closes all possibilities for the current process," said Simon Trinidad, a FARC commander. Trinidad did not say exactly when his group would withdraw from the towns in the zone.

However, he said the rebels had been in contact with Fidel Castro, adding the Cuban leader might be able to break the impasse.

The swift turn of events indicates Colombia's 38-year-old civil war which pits the U.S.-backed military and a brutal right-wing paramilitary group against the FARC and smaller guerrilla factions — will intensify.

seen," said Adam Isacson, an analyst with the Center for International Policy in Washington.

Isacson said he didn't expect a big battle to erupt in the safe haven, because the rebels may melt away into the jungle, but he predicted fighting would intensify elsewhere, a fear shared by many Colombians.

"If there is war, it'll hit the whole country, and I won't feel safe just because I live in the city," said Isabel Martinez, a 22-year-old resident of Residents of the safe haven's main town were terrified the illegal paramilitary force — which has secret links with some military units would enter the zone and begin executing them, merely because they have coexisted with the rebels.

"We're very afraid," said Isabel Gonzalez, a maid who has two sons and three daughters. She fears the children will be killed or forcibly recruited into the ranks of the paramilitaries or rebels.

"Oh God, please help us," she moaned. U.N. envoy James LeMoyne, who stayed in the zone yesterday despite the fading hopes of salvaging the peace process, urged the paramilitaries to refrain from violence and insisted Colombian forces pro-

Inside the zone yesterday, rebels disbanded checkpoints, preparing to give up the area's five main towns as previously agreed if the peace process failed. The rebels were expected to try to hold onto their longtime strongholds in the surrounding villages and countryside.

U.S. Ambassador Anne Patterson met with Pastrana yesterday after the rebels announced their pullout. The United States has trained and equipped some Colombian military units, mostly for missions against insurgents directly involved in the country's cocaine and heroin trade.

However, the U.S. government has labeled the FARC a terrorist organization, leaving open the possibility it may later provide direct counterinsurgency aid.

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — President Pervez Musharrafs pledge to crack down on terrorism failed to persuade India to ease the tense military standoff, and Kashmiri militants vowed more attacks against Indian rule in the contested Himalayan territory.

India's government yesterday welcomed Musharraf's promise to prevent Pakistan from being used as a base for terrorism and to ban five Islamic extremist groups. Two of the groups have been accused by India of the Dec. 13 attack on the Indian parliament in which 14 people were killed.

More than 1,000 people, most of them from the five groups, were rounded up during a weekend crackdown that began just before Musharraf's speech was broadcast Saturday, Interior Ministry official Tasneem Noorani said.

Police also raided the offices of at least two Kashmiri groups not covered by the ban, according to members of the organizations. At least 80 people from those organizations - al-Badr Mujahedeen and Harkat-ul Mujahedeen — were arrested.

The government is targeting (militant) groups at the behest of America and India," said Mustag Askari, an al-Badr spokesman. "But any crackdown or restrictions won't hurt our struggle. Our Kashmiri jihad will continue.

In New Delhi, Indian External Affairs Minister Jaswant Singh welcomed the ban on the two extremist groups blamed for the parliament attack - Jaish-e-Mohammed and Lashkar-e-Tayyaba. However, Singh told reporters India was "looking forward to full implementation of this measure" so that members of the groups do not continue their activities under other names.

Musharraf's ban on extremist groups does not extend to all Kashmiri guerrilla organizations. More than a dozen are allied in an umbrella organization, the United Jihad Council.

Drawing the Line Recent redistricting biased, unfair

Redistricting is by nature a partisan process

Whether it be Republican or Democrat or Federalist or Jeffersonian, the political party historically in control of reapportioning political districts in a state is bound to try and draw a map favorable to itself.

But it seems more and more often, political parties are willing to sacrifice their credibility with the American public in order to redraw the lines. Parties no longer even try to pretend that they are trying to draw districts fairly and serve the people.

They are considered a matter of politics as usual, and Republicans and Democrats don't even bother calling each other on it anymore. It is a blatant partisan process, where the party in control tries to stack the districts in their favor. The only battle they fight is one of semantics

Because Republicans are in control of the Statehouse and the governor's office, they get to decide how the congressional districts will be set up for the next decade. Because its population did not grow at the rate of some other states' during the 1990s, Ohio lost one if its 19 congressional

It is a given that Republicans will redraw the maps in their favor, but another wrinkle has been added — legislative Republicans have targeted the seat of James A. Traficant, D-Youngstown, an independent-minded and controversial House member who has been under investigation for various charges of wrongdoing. To call Traficant a black sheep would be an understatement.

A similar case has occurred in California, where Democrats have redrawn their map to eliminate the district of embattled House Democrat Gary Condit, who has been under fire for his relationship with missing intern Chandra Levy.

In both cases, the state representatives in charge of redistricting are trying to push out politicians whom the party feels are an embarrass-

While one is certainly entitled to their opinion on whether or not Traficant and Condit are good representatives of their districts, it is only the opinions of the people who live within those boundaries that actually

Let the voters decide whether or not these men deserve to be elected. Sneaking them out by redrawing the boundaries is a disservice to the

And while we're at it, pressure Congress to make a bipartisan effort to set some guidelines to ensure the redrawing of districts is simple, fair and sensible. Anything else cheapens the integrity of the process.

Unfair Evaluations

Last week, Bush administration officials and lawmakers took a momentary break from their focus on the War Against Terrorism to hail the adoption of the president's $26 billion education bill, "Leave No Child

While getting members of both parties together to champion one of this country's most essential domestic policy issues is commendable, the flawed bill, more aptly titled, "Leave No Child Untested," falls far short of making a credible difference for the majority of American school-aged

In the long run, the bill's and its proponents' erroneous focus on standardized test scores will relegate many schools to test-prep centers.

There has never been a better judge of academic ability than the classteacher. The move to almost complete reliance upon proficiency tests, however, has further displaced public school teachers, became they are left out of the central decision-making role in teaching.

To truly improve public education, we must learn to think outside the

A state, therefore, can use local, classroom-based assessments as well as state exams to fulfill the requirements.

These evaluations have the potential to encourage high quality teaching and learning at the same time they provide concrete evidence of school improvement.

We call on Ohio lawmakers to move toward individualized assessments instead of relying on standardized tests.

Education is an issue of national importance but the experts, the people who should be making these key decisions, are local players — public school teachers, boards of education members and the like, who know better than anyone else how to meet the needs of the children in their areas. Supporters of the president's education bill, including legislators from both parties, should be applauded for their diligence in pushing the legislation through Congress. Although the final result leaves significant room for improvement, the intent — to improve the educational experience of this country's youth — is a noble one. As it stands, however, this bill doesn't make the grade.

A renewed focus on teacher involvement and empowering local officials by increasing funding to improve the learning environment must remain at the top of the list of ways to revamp the legislation in order to make a real and lasting imprint on public education.

Schools need money, not standardized tests or a man whose level of education is suspect, President Bush sure does seem preoccupied with the issue.

This week, he claimed victory when he signed an education bill, which was one of the central plat-forms of his presidential campaign. The new law dramatically increases the role of the federal government in public education. I guess this is a new brand of conversatism, which is against bigger government unless it conveniently solves a political prob-

But, that aside, standardized tests are a wonderful thing. In fact, Congress should implement mandatory testing for its own members just to be sure that the men and women who represent us have enough of an education to competently do the jobs we elect them to might claim otherwise, but a standardized test isn't the only way to gauge one's knowledge. But for all of those who are Bush-like out there and have difficulty taking tests, how fair is it to judge them by this arbitrary standard? Schools don't really need standardized tests. They need money. This bill actually does put some money into education, including nearly $1 billion to ensure that every child can read by the third grade. But pumping a few federal dollars in isn't a long-term solution.

The real problem is that there are poor schools and there are rich schools. By and large, rich schools are succeeding and poor schools are failing. It is economic stratification, instead of racial stratification in "separate but equal" schools in the early part of the century. But it amounts to the same thing. Schools need money and they need it to be distributed equally. States need to take their share of responsibility in ensuring their schools are equally and adequately funded. As we've seen in Ohio with the DeRolph fiasco, this is easier said than done.

So politicians can pat themselves on the back all the want to, but the real problems in education aren't going away anytime soon.

ound guilty, Geognal Enron, government caught in conflict of interest he Enron scandal has recently been all over the press. Don van Natta Jr. of The New York Times succinctly describes the story like this: "A Texas corporation, led by Bush's most generous campaign contributor, files the largest bankruptcy petition in American history. A handful of executives are able to sell $1 billion worth of the company's stock before its collapse, but thousands of employees are barred from selling, losing their life savings and retirement accounts."

Not only is this a story of corruption by Enron execs, but it illuminates the extent to which the government is in bed with big business.

President Bush received $2 million in campaign funds. Vice President Cheney met with Enron execs six times in closed meetings, after which American energy policy was changed in ways that ben-

Attorney General John Ashcroft received $57,499 in campaign contributions from Enron. He has excused himself from the Justice Department investigation.

There's a herd of Senators and Representatives that bellied up to the Enron trough.

The longer this story is covered, the longer the list of government officials with ties to Enron. It seems like all you have to do is scratch the surface and there's more evidence of affiliation.

In a New York Times article it was reported that "the entire U.S. Attorney's office in Houston recused (excused) itself from the (Enron) investigovernment officials. Not to be considered unappreciative, Washington has returned the favor by employing former Enron executives in powerful positions in the federal government. For example, Army Secretary Thomas White was a former Enron exec that, according to an article in The Nation, had "stock and options totaling $45 million to $100 million."

Are the American people supposed to believe that there hasn't been serious and extensive conflicts of interest going on? To assuage the growing public outcry the Enron scandal is sure to incite in the American public, our friends in Washington will be under increasing pressure to pass measures that prevent such widespread and egregious influence from existing in the future. It is the perfect opportunity to enact legislation that tries to limit the most effective ways that this can be accomplished

is to pass comprehensive campaign finance

Anyone running for office needs millions of dollars to have a even a snowball's chance of winning. Candidates meet with big money and hold expensive dinners in hopes of accumulating enough cash to run a competitive race. But nothing's for free. Everything's got a price. Favors. Influence. Access. All big contributors want something in return. Just like Ken Lay wanted something when he and Enron dumped millions into Bush's purse.

In order to take big business out of play, at least to an extent, there must be reforms in how our system runs. Instead of candidates paying tens of thousands of dollars for media time, each potential official should be given free press. Television networks and newspapers need to give equal and free time on TV and space in newspa-

I know this is just a start, but it is during electoral races that corruption takes root in a politician's life. After every re-election campaign, the relationship grows deeper and the foothold of big money in the democratic process grows stronger. And then you've got Enron.

To try to cure our government of the sickness of bought politics, we need to start at the source. The Enron scandal could be the open door to the passage of campaign finance reforms that the Congress has been thus far reluctant to address.

Bush's policies widen gap between rich and poor n elderly couple in Texas Agets $740 per month in Social Security benefits. Anti-seizure medications cost them more than $500 per month. Medicare doesn't cover prescription drugs. Medicaid, the joint federal and state program for the poor, won't pay for them either. Under Texas Medicaid rules, the couple makes too much money to qualify.

In last year's campaign, George W. Bush promised three things: a prescription drug benefit, a Social Security fix and a tax cut. He squandered so much revenue fulfilling the third pledge that the first two are now out of reach. Last January, the Congressional Budget Office predicted a $5 trillion surplus for the coming decade.

In one year, $3 trillion of that has fully evaporated, and CBO figures show that more than half of the lost surplus will result from the long-term effects of Bush's tax cut package.

Now he wants more. Bush has pounded Democrats for refusing to pass his economic stimulus bill. They refuse for good reason: The only thing Bush's plan is meant to stimulate is the check-writing fingers of rich donors, like the Enron officials who kicked in $100,000 to the top 1 percent of tax filers those with incomes over $384,000. More than 80 percent would go to the top 10 percent of filers, but a married couple with two children and an income under $66,550 would get no tax cut whatsoever. Not only is Bush's stimulus plan unjust, it's bad policy. Threequarters of his proposed tax cuts come after fiscal 2002 - an odd way to fight a downturn that is expected to end this year. And under Bush's plan, the money goes to people who have disposable cash

After adjusting for inflation, after-tax incomes of the richest 1 percent of Americans grew by $414,000 between 1979 and 1997, while after-tax income for the poorest ten percent actually fell.

We have the widest gap between rich and poor since WWII, and federal tax policy has made things worse. In 1979, the richest 1 percent paid 37 percent of their incomes in federal taxes. By 1997, that rate had fallen to 32.7 percent. Bush has now eased millionaires' burdens with cuts that will average $46,000 apiece for the top 1 percent, compared to $600 for the middle fifth of taxpayers and $70 for the bottom fifth.

In that same time span, the poor got poorer. Measuring poverty by a standard that includes subsidies and benefits, the average poor person fell $2,059 below the poverty line in 1979 and $2,527 below the poverty line in 2000. More than half of all African-American children live in poverty. And despite all the hoopla about welfare reform, a study by the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities shows that even during the 1995-99 boom years, the poverty rate among single mothers didn't budge.

For those who say the rich deserve every billion they can get, I beg to differ. Bill Gates sells software. He delivers his software on interstate highways that taxpayers spent hundreds of billions to build and maintain. He sells his software in 50 states where taxpayer-supported legal systems assure that he can collect payment. Talent and initiative deserve their due, but without society's help, Gates would be trading abacus beads for blueberries.

In 1996, the Republican Congress sent Bill Clinton a welfare reform bill that attacked a complicated social problem with a meatax. They sent the bill three times, and the third time, he signed it. When I saw 5-year-old kids with nowhere to go, I remembered that Newt Gingrich had decided to teach the little bastards a sense of responsibility.

John Kennedy once spoke of America facing a "long twilight struggle." He was right. We do. But the struggle that concerns me isn't a struggle with communism, or even terrorism - one collapsed, and the other we may rein in. I am not confident that we can defeat the more insidious threat that leaders like Bush, Tom DeLay and Trent Lott personify — the corrosive power of ignorance and greed.

GOP denies intervening in Enron's bankruptcy

By H. Josef Hebert Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Two Bush cabinet members said yesterday they never considered intervening in Enron's spiral toward bankruptcy, nor informed President Bush of requests for help from the fallen energy giant.

"Companies come and go. It's ... part of the genius of capitalism," said Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill, when asked if he was surprised at the sudden collapse of Enron. The company's failure has left the one-time energy trading behemoth's stock virtually worthless and thousands of workers' pension funds in disarray.

Last fall, a month before Enron declared bankruptcy, O'Neill received two telephone calls from Enron's chief executive, Kenneth Lay. Lay also called Commerce Secretary Don Evans at the time, reaching out for help to harness the energy company's financial slide. O'Neill's view of Enron's collapse was characterized as "cold-blooded" and reflective of "the 18th century, but not the 21st century" by Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., whose Committee on Governmental Affairs is leading Senate investigations into the Enron debacle.

Separately, Lieberman said that an internal Arthur Andersen LLP memo on Oct. 12 directing that all but basic Enron working papers be destroyed "raises very serious questions about whether obstruction of justice occurred."

Andersen this past week revealed that Enron documents had been destroyed. But Lieberman said most troubling was that the memo, disclosed in a report in Time magazine, "was specifically about Enron" and not a general directive to clean out files. Congressional investigators want to find out why Andersen did not raise flags about Enron's business practices.

Lieberman and Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., said on CBS' "Face the Nation" the administration may have been right in not intervening to try to save Enron. But they said the government's response - as well as earlier federal monitoring of its business practices — may have been hampered by the energy company's freewheel-ing flow of campaign contributions. and millions of dollars that were contributed by Enron executives, which ... creates the appearance of impropriety," said McCain, a longtime voice for campaign finance reform. McCain acknowledged getting $9,500 in Enron contributions in two Senate campaigns.

Lieberman, who said he received $1,000 from Enron in his 1994 Senate campaign, said one focus of his committee's investigation will be "whether any of the influence" from Enron money affected the administration's handling of the Enron collapse, or oversight by federal agen-

"I don't feel at all compromised," added Lieberman, referring to his committee's investigation.

O'Neill said that Lay, in a call of three or four minutes, "asked me for nothing." But O'Neill acknowledged that during one conversation Lay said Enron's ability to sustain its credit rating "was a critical aspect" of keeping a merger with rival Dynegy on track. The merger later fell apart.

The Treasury Department has acknowledged that, around the same time in late October and early November, another Enron executive repeatedly contacted Peter Fisher, a Treasury undersecretary, trying to get the government to encourage banks to extend credit to the struggling company. Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., whose Senate Governmental Affairs subcommittee has issued 51 subpoenas in connection with its Enron investigation, said yesterday on ABC, "I have no doubt that they were asking for the government to take action.'

But an Enron spokesman, Mark Palmer, said the calls "were informational" and "not about trying to improve our credit rating.

Neither O'Neill nor Evans said they informed President Bush of the telephone calls. But Evans said he frequently discussed Enron's situation during general meetings with the president in November and December.

The tone of those conversations was "how sad it was to see what was happening to that once great company," Evans said on NBC.

Enron filed for bankruptcy on

O'Neill said his concerns involving Enron were over the possible impact on U.S. and global capital markets, but he was assured by Fisher that there weren't going to be problems in that area. O'Neill said that at the time of the calls he was deeply involved in pushing the president's stimulus package in Congress, pursuing the financial trail of terrorists and dealing with other issues of greater concern.

"I didn't think this was worthy of me running across the street (to the White House) and telling the president," O'Neill said on "Fox News Sunday." "I don't ... tell the president every time somebody calls me."

Priest to go on trial for 130 alleged abuse cases

By Robert O'Neil

BOSTON — A former Roman Catholic priest who has been accused of molesting more than 130 people was scheduled to go on trial today for allegedly abusing an 11-year-old boy.

John Geoghan, 66, is charged with committing indecent assault and battery on a person less than 14 years old when he was a priest at St. Julia's Parish in Weston. Prosecutors say Geoghan put his hands down the boy's swimming trunks in 1991.

Geoghan, who was defrocked in 1998, faces 84 civil suits. More than 130 people have claimed he fondled or raped them during the three decades he served in Bostonarea parishes.

"There's a huge amount of victims affected by this monster," said Mark Keane, 32, who said he was abused by Geoghan at the same Waltham Boys and Girls club where the 11-year-old boy was allegedly molested. "I couldn't be happier to see him be charged criminally."

Geoghan's lawyer, Geoffrey Packard, declined comment.

The archdiocese has faced scrutiny since it became publicly known that Geoghan was sent to St. Julia's in 1984, even though he had been removed from two other parishes after being accused of molesting children.

In a turnaround following years of silence, Cardinal Bernard Law apologized Wednesday to the alleged victims. Law also ordered clergy and volunteers to report allegations of abuse against

"There is no way for me to describe adequately the evil of such acts," Law said.

Mitchell Garabedian, who represents 70 alleged victims in civil suits against the archdiocese, said Law's apology rings hollow.

"If Cardinal Law is sorry, why doesn't he just end the depositions of my clients, end the pain, and settle the suits?" he asked.

Jury selection begins today and prosecutors expect the trial to take ess than a week.

If found guilty, Geoghan faces a maximum sentence of 10 years, Middlesex District Attorney's office spokesman Anson Kaye said.

Honesty 'In the Bedroom' refreshing

By Jordan Gentile For the Lantern

There is a very striking scene about three-fourths of the way through "In the Bedroom" that helps to illustrate the film's power.

A husband and wife, played by Tom Wilkinson and Sissy Spacek, seem to be going about their business just as they have since the day their grown son (Nick Stahl) was murdered at the hands of his girlfriend's estranged husband (William Mapother).

She is terse and silent. Her husband treads lightly, making small conversation. What he doesn't know is that she has just returned from the store, where she spotted their son's killer for the first time since he was let out on bail.

Anger is welling up inside of her as she puts away the groceries. He asks if something is wrong. Something is.

To our surprise, a shouting match erupts. She blames her husband for the killing and insinuates that he secretly lusted after their son's girlfriend (Marisa Tomei), encouraging the affair so that he could live vicariously through him. If he hadn't been so tolerant, she charges, their son might have been more diligent in attaining his dream of becoming an architect and less ardent in pursuing a married woman with children.

The husband has a rebuttal. An aimless escape from her criticism, her smothering and her impossibly high standards

"In the Bedroom," the first film by writerdirector Todd Field, is distinguished by moments like these. Many films begin with a shocking act of murder. This is the rare movie that isn't terribly interested in the fate of the killer or the subject of violence, using these issues merely as a catalyst for a more complicated discussion.

The real subject of the film is grief and the thoughts and feelings it lays bare. "In the Bedroom" deals with the way it feels for a father to pace through his dead son's workspace, staring teary-eyed at sketches and blueprints for structures which will never be

Or what it's like to be the mother of that same dead child, listening to friends brag about their grandchildren and thinking about the grandchildren she has been robbed of.

It is a tribute to the screenplay, by Field and Rob Festinger, that problems and tensions which predate the tragedy are explored as fully, perhaps more fully, than even the immediate consequences of it.

Viewers will nod in agreement as the father admonishes his wife for being so incredibly unforgiving as to drive their son into an unstable relationship. Remembering the awkward exchange between Wilkinson affair, he suggests, might not have been so and Tomei earlier in the film, we also suspect compelling if it didn't offer such an attractive that the wife may be right about her husband's secret desires.

Not enough credit can be given to Wilkinson and Spacek, whose performances are so impressive that the Grand Jury at the Sundance Film Festival, after screening "In the Bedroom," created a special award for their contribution.

Alternating between shock, bitterness, vulnerability and every other conceivable emotion over the course of the film, they have stretched their craft farther than any two actors in the past year. Critical response to their work has been so positive that one or both of them has a considerable shot at collecting some hardware in March.

The last 20 minutes of the film may come as a bit of a shock. After the initial violence, "In the Bedroom" falls into a more contemplative rhythm. The quiet, middle passages of the film are its heart. Another violent climax seems nowhere in sight, but violence is again where the film takes us in the end.

Even here though, Field manages to invoke suspense without exploitation or dishonesty. When the smoke clears and dawn breaks, all of the questions about how the principal characters are going to find peace in their lives are still left hanging, perhaps more precariously than ever before.

"In the Bedroom" is now playing at the Drexel Theatre on East Main Street.

'Flawed' flawlessly executes story inspired by Greek mythology

By Ravenn Moore Lantern arts writer

Have an appetite for love and destruction? Hungry for three Greek gods?

Ensemble Actors' Theatre (EAT) presented its first new work of 2002, Greg Maier's "Flawed." "Flawed" was inspired by Greek mythology and the original story re-imagines the origins of three Greek gods, Haephestas, Aries and Aphrodite.

EAT is composed of OSU graduates and students who write and perform their own works.

EAT co-founder Chris Dick-Haephestas, played Creighton James played Aries and Laura Gale played Aphrodite. "Flawed" was written and directed by Maier and produced by James.

"By attempting to viscerally engage the audience through an on the island, Aphrodite sees unpredictable and unconventional method of storytelling, we are striving to revitalize the theatrical experience," said Gale, an EAT co-founder.

"Flawed" journeys through the love triangle between three Greek gods who have been exiled to a deserted island and the struggles of their daily lives.

Cave rocks, carved wood bowls and spoons, chairs and tables are stage left. A wood burning furnace heating metal to make weapons and craftsman tools were stage right. As Haephestas's voice-over played, he was beating metal, and Aries was swinging a sword in defensive motions.

Aphrodite, the goddess of love, comes to the island that Aries, god of war and Haephestas, god of art, inhabits. Haephestas takes care of Aphrodite. Unaware that other people were

Aries by a stream. Aries is startled by Aphrodite and puts a knife to her throat to scare her and then leaves. Aries falls in love with Aphrodite and makes it known to Haephestas. Aphrodite tries to seek Haephestas's love, but he pushes her away. Aries plans to marry Aphrodite and take her to another island. When Haephestas finds out, he reveals his love and Aphrodite cannot choose between the two. Haephestas warns Aries not to hurt Aphrodite. "If you touch her I will kill you," Haephestas said. "You can't kill me," Aries said. "I wish I could," Haephestas responded.

Haephestas and Aries have many conversations about Aphrodite. "Take a human woman's child if you want to see a human woman's strength," said

Aries. Aries demands that Haephestas make him a ring for Aphrodite, Haephestas does not want to and a battle ensues. Aphrodite stop's them from killing one another.

At the end of the play there are voice-overs from the three characters that give the audience insight on the characters' emo-Aphrodite's voice-over repeated questions about love; Haephestas, statements of fire and art; and Aries, thoughts of war and weapons.

"Flawed" was a romantic play that presented a good twist to the mythological love affair. The plot was filled with suspense and hope as Haephestas disclosed his love and true feelings for Aphrodite and Aries fought to keep her.

The actors' performances were well received. EAT's next production is in February.

Gravity 44 won't be held down

Local band Gravity 44 goes all out every performance, giving its best effort at entertaining and energizing

By Michelle Woodgeard For the Lantern

Night after night campus area residents Ty Pierce, Lance Weinkamer, Jim Kilburg and Matt Good spend hours near blurred faces, distracting searing lights and students that just can't get enough of the type of music that leaves listeners physically exhausted.

These guys don't hang out at raves, but they do make up local hard rock group Gravity 44 and their gig this weekend at the Scarlet and Gray Cafe was yet another intense experience for both the foursome and their expanding arsenal of fans.

From the perspective of an average concertgoer, it may be difficult to fully appreciate the energy that not only generates from the band but also explodes from the passionate crowd.

Vocalist Pierce illustrates what he feels at the front of the stage.

"Because of the lights, I usually catch just a glimpse of a face, but what I feel and notice much more is the rush and force that is coming towards me," he said.

Guitarist Good agrees. "I feel weird looking at people during the show but I know once people find out what we're about and about our intensity, they will keep showing up."

The group's drummer makes a convincing case for as live show.

"It's pure excitement," he said. "Anyone who comes to check us out, won't be bored."

Taking the stage after up-and-coming acts, Via Sahara and Intake, the band made good on Kilburg's promise Saturday night, playing fan favorites from their October release, "A Further Iteration" such as "Space Madness" while keeping things fresh with new tunes, "11 O' Clock", "I.G.A." and "Sway."

Showmanship abounded as topless Pierce thrashed

Showmanship abounded as topless Pierce thrashed about and Kilburg donned crazed facial expressions in between heavy beats and grinding grooves, proving the notion that a rock show isn't just about the music.

Despite Pierce's past in cross country running, the gregarious singer still gets a good workout during the show.

"This is the most physically demanding thing I've done," he said.

The riff and rhythm section was also on cue with

Good and Weinkamer thumping out an array of punk, ska and metal sounds.

"We play like we love each other," Weinkamer said. From the look of the rowdy front row, it was obvious that fans weren't about to leave the group's effort to rock the house unanswered.

"The fan turnout can be shocking," Pierce said. "I know less and less of the people that show up."

Those that do show up are likely to find at least one aspect of the groups' musical style to enjoy. Fans of many musical genres will appreciate Gravity 44's knack for crossing all boundaries and making music that is unnecessary to classify.

Bassist and vocalist Weinkamer wants to set the public straight on the band's sound and influences.

"So many people compare us to 311 and we are into them, but we like so much other stuff such as the Deftones, Incubus, Primus, Sevendust and the Red Hot Chili Peppers," he said.

The quartet will soon get the chance to perform their musical meltdown to fans outside Columbus.

"Our next several shows will be around the state, including Bowling Green," said band manager Jared Rothkopf.

sentenced to die Feb. 19, claims innocence

By Andrew Welsh-Huggins Associated Press

COLUMBUS — Convicted killer John W. Byrd Jr., facing an execution date in little more than a month, repeated his claim of innocence on Friday but said he expects to die.

The Ohio Supreme Court set Feb. 19 as the new execution date for Byrd on Friday, convicted of killing a convenience store clerk during a robbery

His public defenders said they

"There's really not much they can do," Byrd told The Associated Press. "In all likelihood this murder's going to take place on the 19th. Byrd said he's mostly concerned about the suffering his death will cause his family members. Byrd was convicted of murder in the stabbing death of Monte Tewksbury, 40, during a convenience store robbery in suburban Cincinnati in Tewksbury's widow said she wasn't surprised by Byrd's comments.

"He is a man without remorse," Sharon Tewksbury said Friday. "Hewould go to any lengths to try to get away with it.'

In a 30-minute phone call from Death Row in Mansfield Correctional Institution, Byrd repeated that no evidence places him at the scene of the crime. He maintains he was passed out in a van outside the store during the robbery.

"At that time I wasn't aware of what happened," Byrd said. "Over the years, things I've found out, nati. "What I can tell you is my chilthe years, things I've found out, things I've read, evidence I've seen, convinces me I wasn't there.

The Supreme Court, without comment, granted Attorney General Betty Montgomery's request to proceed with Byrd's execution after a federal appeals court ruled last Monday there was no reason to stop it.

"I'm certainly not going to tell you that I'm happy to hear that John Byrd is going to die," said Tewksbury, 57, an administrative assistant at Ohio Public Defender David Bodiker, whose office represents Byrd, said a decision will be made next week where to appeal next. One option, he said, could be the U.S. Supreme Court.

Should the execution be carried out on Feb. 19, it would come three years to the day after Wilford Berry became the first inmate to be executed in Ohio since 1963.

Last Monday, the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals rejected Byrd's claim of "actual innocence." Byrd's lawyers claimed another man convicted in the robbery and slaying stabbed Tewksbury.

The Ohio Supreme Court in August refused to hear Byrd's claim. On Thursday, Bodiker asked the court to impose a life sentence

Hockey dad found guilty, faces prison

By Denise Lavoie Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. - The father of a young hockey player was convicted of involuntary manslaughter Friday for beating another man to death at their sons' practice as onlookers begged him to stop.

Thomas Junta, 44, bowed his head as the jury forewoman haltingly read the verdict. He said nothing and showed little reaction before he was led away as several of his brothers sobbed in the court-

The burly truck driver had been tried on the more serious charge of manslaughter, which includes excessive use of force in selfdefense. He faces up to 20 years in prison, but as a first-time offender will probably be sentenced to a much shorter term — perhaps three to five years — on Jan. 25.

After the verdict, jury forewoman Delores Feeney read a brief statement that concluded: "We feel we reached a very difficult but proper decision."

The closely watched case had become a symbol of what some say is a growing wave of parental violence at youth sporting events. The trial was carried on national cable networks and the case has dominated talk radio shows.

Junta said he killed Michael Costin, 40, in self-defense after they argued over rough play during the practice on July 5, 2000.

He said he tried to avoid coming to blows with Costin, but fought back after the smaller man threw "sucker punch," jumped on him and continued to hit and kick him. after the two men fell to the floor.

Junta said he landed just "three off-balance" punches, a claim backed up by witnesses that included his 12-year-old son, Quin-

Costin never regained consciousness and died a day later. After the verdict, Costin's sister, Mary Barbuzzi, said she hoped no other family would have to endure such "senseless pain."

"Michael Costin was a loving brother, a caring son but most of all he was a dedicated father," she said, standing next to Costin's four children. "Michael Costin succeeded in the hardest job there is - he was a good father. Our family will never be complete again."

Added District Attorney Martha Coakley: "Our hope tonight is that if there is any good that comes out of this it will be that we will not see another parent on an autopsy table as a result of parental rage over children's sports."

Medical experts for both sides said Costin died of a ruptured artery in his neck. They differed sharply on how much force - in this case, how many blows - was needed to cause the injury.

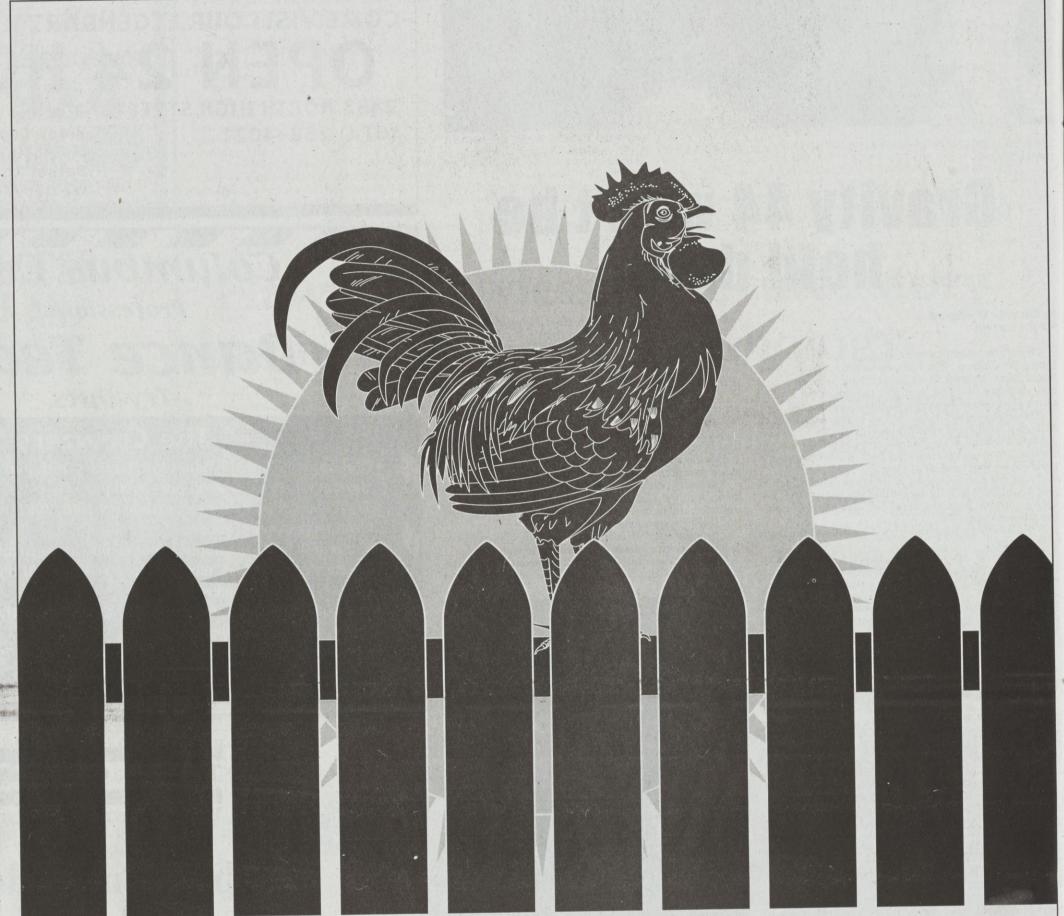

The fatal confrontation began after Junta became angry about slashing and checking at what was supposed to be a non-contact scrimmage that Costin was supervising. Junta said he saw a player elbow his son in the face.

Witnesses said Junta yelled at Costin for not controlling the play, and Costin replied: "That's hock-The two men later got into a scuffle near the locker rooms that was quickly broken up by bystanders.

Buckeyes keep winning streak alive

Lantern sports writer

The Ohio State men's basketball team can be classified as a team of streaks.

While one of those streaks ended Saturday night, the most important one continued as the Buckeyes won their sixth consecutive game in a 55-48 victory over Northwestern in Welsh-Ryan Arena.

OSU has also won its first three conference games for only the second time in 11 years. The 1998-99 Final Four team was the last squad to start the conference sea-

"We'll take this one," coach Jim O'Brien said. "These games always play out the same way; it's always a low scoring game when we come here, and it's hard to play because they always control the tempo.

There was a streak that ended Saturday night — for the first time in 295 games, the Buckeyes went the entire game without hitting at least one three-pointer, a streak dating back to 1992. OSU went 0-for-12 from behind the arc against the Wildcats.

Northwestern didn't find three-point land much more appealing, as they hit only five-of-20 from downtown.

"We knew we kind of had to pick our poison against them (Northwestern)," O'Brien said. "We wanted to take away their backcuts and knew we would just have to take our chances with them shooting the three."

Senior Tim Martin got his first career start in place of sophomore Zach Williams. Williams, who was benched for undisclosed disciplinary reasons, had started the first 44 games of his career.

After the game, O'Brien also said-Williams would no longer be co-captain, an honor he shared with senior Brian Brown. "It's just a team issue," O'Brien said. Sometimes you just have to clear some things up with your team. While he didn't start, Williams came up big in the end. The sophomore sparked OSU off the bench with 12 points and a game-high seven rebounds.

"I'm sure he wasn't thrilled (about being benched)," O'Brien said. "But much to his credit, he was upbeat and positive; he deserves a lot of credit."

Williams' contributions helped the Bucks overcome a horrendous shooting night. OSU shot just 41 percent (21-of-51) from the field. Also, the 55 points was the lowest output by the Bucks this season.

"Our problem was our offense," O'Brien said. "We did a very good job on the defensive end for the most part. They only scored 48 points, but it was just our inability to score on offense that made this game a little closer."

Williams fueled a run midway through the second half, giving the Bucks some breathing room. He made a foul-line jumper after Northwestern cut the OSU lead to two points with over nine minutes remaining. Williams then put back a missed free-throw attempt later, increasing OSU's lead to 44-35. After that, the Wildcats never got closer than five.

Williams, along with Brown (13 points), were the only Buckeyes to score in double figures. Northwestern was led by Tavaras Hardy's game-high 21 points.

"We have to be thrilled with where we are," O'Brien said. "A lot of teams have already lost in the league. The next couple of weeks are going to be very important for

The Ohio State men's ice hockey team (13-7-2, 9-5-2 CCHA) ran its unbeaten streak to five games (4-0-1), earning three points this weekend against the Lake Superior State Lakers (6-15-1, 3-12-1

With the three points over the weekend, the No. 14 Buckeyes jump into sole possession of third place in the CCHA with 20 points. Michigan State University and the University of Michigan are tied for first in the conference with 23 points. Lake Superior is last in the 12-team league with seven points.

Men's volleyball player, Pieter Olree (12), strikes the ball against St. Francis Saturday night. Ohio State defeated St. Francis in three games (30-18, 30-19, 30-20).

One of the positives the Buckeyes were captain Tom Trantow. "Sometimes in years able to take from the game, besides playing past, we've got into trouble when the pressure was on, but we were gelling together and were playing with team unity. No one got down on each other. We made mistakes down the stretch, but we stuck together."

Penn State coach Mark Pavlik was both pleased with the win and impressed by OSU.

"Anytime you can win in this arena, I'll take it. I don't care if we have to grovel or look bad doing it," he said. "For only four days of practice, I thought there was some pretty good volleyball and some stretches of bad volleyball. But this is a young Ohio State team and I think they are just going to get better and better."

Hanson recognized that while the Buckeyes were able to do some positive things, there are many points that need to be

"We have to do a better job with our transition offense," he said. "When we dig a ball we have to get organized, make a good set and take a good swing. We had a lot of times where people were crashing into each other and we weren't getting a good swing at the ball. You can't give a good team free opportunities when we have a chance to score.

"It's going to take some time, especially since we have young kids on the court. It'll get worked out, but it's going to be a process."

The Buckeyes battled PSU close in the first two games, falling just short in each, but they showed character in the third game as they were never really threatened and eventually cut the match to 2-1 with a 30-25 win

But in the fourth and final set of the game, the Buckeyes were not able to hold on to a 15-11 lead at the break and lost the fourth game by a score of 30-26.

In Saturday's match, the Buckeyes rebounded to defeat St. Francis for their first win of the season

Olree led the Buckeyes (1-1) with 20 kills and six aces, and he became the eighth Buckeye in history to amass 1,000 kills

OSU was never challenged as they won in three games 30-18, 30-19 and 30-20.

Blue Jackets finally defeat Blackhawks

By Jonathan D. Chu Lantern sports writer

In their brief existence, the Columbus Blue Jackets have yet to win a game in regulation against Central Division foe Chicago Blackhawks. Chicago has earned at least a point in its eight previous games against the Blue Jackets, with a combined record of 5-0-2-1 prior to Saturday's encounter.

History was changed with a 5-4 Columbus victory over Chicago in front of the 37th consecutive sellout at Nationwide Arena.

"I thought it was a good win for us tonight," said coach Dave King on his team's fourth straight home victory. "They seem to really bring out the best game out of us, but I was really disappointed in the team's effort in the first period."

That effort was exemplified by Chicago outshooting Columbus 16-3 and holding the puck in the Jacket's end for a majority of the first period. Yet despite being seemingly overmatched against one of the National Hockey League's best offenses, Columbus was able to walk away tied after one period.

Goalie Ron Tugnutt said captain Lyle Odelein pleaded to his team between periods for an increased effort. "When Lyle talks, you listen," Tugnutt said.

That plea seemed to have paid

Columbus defenseman Deron Quint scored a power-play goal about two minutes into the second period with a shot that seemed to carom off a Chicago player into the Blackhawks' net.

The turning point in the game was the five-on-three goal by Columbus forward Grant Marshall midway through the third period.

Columbus Blue Jackets goalie Ron Tugnutt (31) makes a save on Chicago Blackhawks' Syeve Dubinsky (16) in the third period last Thursday in Chicago. The two teams played again this weekend in Columbus.

Setup by a well-executed twoman advantage, Columbus forward Espen Knutsen found an open Marshall in front of the net, who was then able to maneuver the puck past Blackhawk goalkeeper Jocelyn Thibault for what turned out to be the winning goal.

Also finding the net for Columbus were defenseman Rostislav Klesla and forward Mike Sillinger, who tallied two in the winning Chicago goals were scored by Kyle Calder, Tony Amonte, Jaroslav Spacek and Eric Daze.

A statistic unrelated to the final outcome of the game was the scuffle in the second period between Columbus enforcer Jody Shelley and Chicago forward Bob Probert. The two had fought three times in the game played on Thursday, when Chicago won 2-1. Round four went to Shelley who took down Probert after landing a barrage of punches to the back of Probert's head.

Tonight, Columbus (12-25-6-1) travels to Madison Square Garden for the first time in franchise history for a home-and-home series against the New York Rangers, with a return game at Nationwide on Wednesday.

"We need some more wins, and we need to somehow get some wins on the road," King said.

It's surprising this has been the first death from a Little League parent confrontation. These type of events and actions by the adult role models have a trickle down effect. Some refer to the NFL as the "no fun league," but the way some parents and coaches act these days, that reference should be saved for a 12-year-old soccer league.

If it isn't fun, who wants to play?

Not many in my sister's senior high school class, where it seems playing a sport has become as stimulating as a Greyhound bus trip to Winnipeg.

There are some troubling figures surrounding youth sports these days. For example, in youth baseball, the Sporting Goods Manufactures Association claims the number of youth baseball players has declined 23 percent in the past decade, from 15.5 million participants in 1990 to 12.1 million participants in 1999.

A report to the President from the Secretary of Health and Human Services stated that nearly half (45 percent) of adolescents do not participate in any type of team sport. In addition, participation in rigorous physical activity drops from 73 percent of ninth grade students to 61 percent of high school seniors. Apparently, the senior class in "Dazed and video game systems, like PlayStation 2. But after watching one of my roommates become enraged with each loss of video game football, it appears video sports are not immune to the Little League dad phenomenon either.

Sports are entertainment; they are supposed to be fun.

I can't remember the last time that a middle-aged man yelling obscenities from temporary bleachers or two coaches getting into a brew-ha-ha made for a good time.

I hope the tragedy that the Juntas and Costins now have to live with will help the rest of our Little League parents and coaches keep their grip on reality, which for a few costly moments was lost in a Massachusetts ice rink.

As for Betz owning the single-season shutout record, he gave credit to his the rest of his team. "I think back on a lot of the shutouts, and I have to give so much credit to my teammates," he said. "A shutout is just another gauge of your team's play. Goals against is a big sign of team play."

Umberger praised the Buckeye netminder saying, "He's our horse right now. He keeps us in every game and I can't say more about him. He's playing OSU returns to home ice Friday against Yale at 7:35 p.m. The teams conclude the non-conference series Sunday at 12:35 p.m.

"It's an opportunity to get som other players in there," Markell said. Yale is a very good hockey team. They're going to play a good, clean
