Young scholars learn importance of college, goals

High school students from the Young Scholars Program received an inspirational speech encouraging them to work hard at education in order to succeed

Cedric Jennings, protagonist of the Ron Suskind book "A Hope in the Unseen: An American Odyssey from the Inner City to the Ivy League," talked with minority high school students as part of the Young Scholars Program Wednesday. Jennings chroniclied his journey from poverty to the Ivy League in a two-hour speech.

To open his talk Jennings had all the students loudly say the name of the city from which they

"Take pride in where you all come from," Jennings said to the students.

He said everybody can have an opportunity, even if they come from a broken home and an underprivileged environment.

"Education is your tool and your vehicle to stop that past," Jennings said. "You don't have to be like whoever your family is, whoever your neighbor-

He mentioned in his speech that he did not want to be like his neighbors, so he had a big goal: to go to

"I had a vision in my mind and in my heart ... You are (also) able to have your own vision," Jennings said. "I want to go to a university; I want to go to the top university.

Jennings said at Brown University he realized people come from all different parts of the country, as opposed to all black neighborhoods. He also noticed a number of the students were often encouraging to each other and always pushing for greatness — and that inspired him.

nnings said he did a triple major in math, computer science and education and worked in information technology after receiving his degree. He eventually went back to school to specialize in education and social work to pursue his true dream, he said.

Jennings cited many lessons he learned from his family, especially his mother.

He expressed how difficult it is for a single mom to raise young kids, and the appreciation, admiration and respect he had for her.

"My mom is a hero", he said. The book depicts Jennings as a hero, but he said feels she made his dreams a reality. "She is just a beautiful person," he said. "She showed me love. (I can't recall) how many times she said 'I love you." Jennings' speech was encouraging to the high school students who attended.

"I think he did a good job because lots of students asked him questions," said Gabriella Craft, a Mifflin High School student. "He had a lot of advice." 4-H MEETS FAR EAST

"Luckily it didn't enter his head," Taylor said.

He said the whole incident happened surprisingly fast.

Everything happened so quick: There were three quick bangs, and we were shot," he said. "Next thing I knew I was in a strecher.'

Taylor's aquaintences said he is not the kind of person who looks for trouble.

"He's a very social and outgo-ing individual," said Donna Dege-orgio, an OSU Librarian who works with Taylor. "(He's) very friendly to everyone. I think this could have happened to anybody."

She said Taylor is a hard worker who has a lot of friends, and he is an all-around good guy.

Taylor said he was just in the wrong place at the wrong time.

"It's bad news - me and a few buddies made a mistake going to Old School," he said.

Taylor did not blame OSU or anyone else besides the suspects for the violence.

"It's not the university's fault," he said. "Living in one of the largest cities in Ohio, you have to take the bad with the good. Taylor said he did not believe the "concealed carry law" played any role in his attacker carrying a gun. "These people were not fol-

One of the two suspects taken into custody has had trouble with weapons in the past.

Jonathan Bankston, 21, was charged with carrying a concealed weapon in January 2002 but plead guilty to the lesser crime of criminal mischief. He was charged with another concealed weapons charge in October 2002. The other suspect in the shooting is Taban Cruz, 23. Both are facing charges of aggravated assault with a firearm, according to Columbus police.

Taylor said he is not going to change his lifestyle too much as a result of the incident but will be more careful in the future.

Maybe it was a wakeup call. I'll be checking over my shoulder more though," he said. "It's not fun getting shot. I've had a lot better night's out."

Crime patrol acts as extra eyes, ears

By Jared Hayes Lantern staff writer

Decked out with bullet-proof vests, radios, flash lights and uniforms, the patrollers of Community Crime Patrol assist the police in keeping the residential off campus area safe.

The patrollers cannot make arrests but can call in crimes and code violations to an assigned police officer, who then responds. The patrollers travel in pairs and either walk or ride bikes every night (except Sunday) from 8 p.m. to 4 a.m. The patrollers act as extra pairs of eyes for the police and often provide valuable information and assistance.

Thursday night the organization played a pivotal role in the apprehension of Taban Cruz and Jonathan Bankston, the men who were charged with two counts of felonious assault after the shooting that took place outside of the bar Old School. The Columbus Division of Police initially do it just because they're conbelieved that the suspects were heading north after shooting the two men. The police notified CCP of the altercation and gave them a description of the men.

The suspects were actually southbound toward the CCP office on East 15th where patrol director Kevin Widmer spotted them and notified police.

"I was conducting training in the back of our office when the officer came on the radio saying the suspects were heading north bound," Widmer said. "I said if we see him we'll let you know, and about six minutes later he came walking through trying to walk casual, and I identified him."

The information was helpful in the apprehension of the sus-

"We look for crimes and general quality of life violations like burned out street lights, excessively tall grass or trees or bushes covering up street signs," said Kevin Petrey, the assistant director of the patrol.

The majority of CCP's 25 patrollers are OSU students who come from a variety of different majors. For most students CCP is a stepping stone before becoming a real police officer. Nationwide, 55 they're bothering others."

CCP alumni work as law enforcement officers, most in central Ohio.

'Not everybody goes on to be officers," Petrey said. "Some cerned about the safety of our community.'

CCP was formed in 1991 in the campus area and has expanded to Franklinton, Merion Village, Hilltop, German Village and the multi-purpose path between Spring Street and State Route 104 because of its success.

"(CCP) was formed in response to growing concern about crime," Petrey said. "It made sense to put students out on the streets to be extra ears and eyes for the police."

The police appreciate the work that the organization does.

They're a set of trained eyes and ears that get around quickly and are very beneficial to us," said Sgt. Brett Mull, Columbus police spokesman.

Most nights patrollers have nothing to report. They are the busiest during Autumn and Spring quarters when students are most active and when the majority of parties happen.

'We get some verbal harassment from students, because they think we're out to spoil their fun," Petrey said. "If we see drunk college kids walking home, we're not going to bother them unless

Clinton shines at convention; Kerry takes on Florida

By Darlene Superville Associated Press

BOSTON — With former President Bill Clinton getting a moment in the spotlight yesterday at the opening of the Democratic National Convention, John Kerry pressed his case in Florida on why voters should put him in the White House in place of President Bush.

We need to push the curve of discovery," Kerry said while meeting with workers at the Kennedy Space Center at Cape Canaveral. "We need a president who believes in science and who's prepared to invest America's efforts to cure Parkinson's and AIDS and diabetes and Alzheimer's, and do stem cell research."

He appealed to Republicans and independents to "stop and think" about who they will vote for in November. There is nothing conservative about 'piling debt on the shoulders of our children and driving the deficits up as far as the eye can see," he said.

In Boston, convention delegates witnessed an evening of speeches focused on Kerry's stated vision for America: a strong economy, a growing middle class, affordable health care and a beefed-up military.

OUR VIEWS

Freedom cage

Space violates protest rights

Security concerns are not to be trivialized considering the real threat of terrorism, but the protest area set up for activists attending the Democratic Convention in Boston was an affront to free speech. The ability to protest and express opinions, especially during political conventions, is important to maintaining a vibrant democracy. Putting protesters in a cordoned-off area where they will have little opportunity to be seen or heard by convention participants was an poor decision made by Boston organizers.

The 28,000-square-foot rectangular "Free Speech Zone," set aside for protesters under abandoned railroad tracks and far from convention traffic, was hardly appealing. The area is surrounded by concrete barriers, 8-foot-tall chain-link fencing topped with razor wire and mesh netting designed to stop the throwing of any objects. Members of the media and protesters jokingly referred to the cave-like containment area as the "Freedom Cage." Protesters were also denied permission to set up tables in the protest area to hand out information because they could be used as weapons.

After the American Civil Liberties Union and National Lawyers Guild filed suit over the zone, federal Judge Douglas Woodlock toured the site last week. The judge concluded the lawyers' claim that the zone was an "internment camp" was "an understatement."

"One cannot conceive of other elements put in place to create a space that's more of an affront to the idea of free expression than the designated demonstration zone," he said in a ruling Thursday. However, the judge said the protesters were stuck under the tracks because there was nowhere else to put them.

Most protesters have refused to use the "Free Speech Zone." Only one pro-Palestinian group utilized it yesterday, finding it to be the perfect backdrop for their protest. The group said the fenced-in area resembled the Israeli occupation of the West Bank, which they are protesting. The other groups made up mostly of anti-war activists chose to abandon the area, marching in circles from Boston Common to Beacon Hill around the Fleet Center instead.

Cordoning protesters away from the event they are protesting is becoming more common. When President Bush met with other world leaders at Sea island, Georgia, protesters were kept several miles away.

Requiring protesters to gather in out-of-the-way areas stifles their rights to free expression. This country should set an example in how to balance safety and liberty. Protest areas that look like "internment camps" do not appropriately convey the freedom and liberties of democracy to the rest of the world.

A number of other reasons exist regarding why organizers should work harder to allow picketers more acceptable protest areas. The dispersion of protesters and the anger created by the fencing could result in more aggressive or disruptive demonstrations. Putting numerous protesters together in a confined area can also be problematic because different groups have different ideologies.

While protecting our democracy from terrorists and other enemies, the government must also work hard to allow the American traditions of protest and dissent to continue unscathed.

MTV wants you

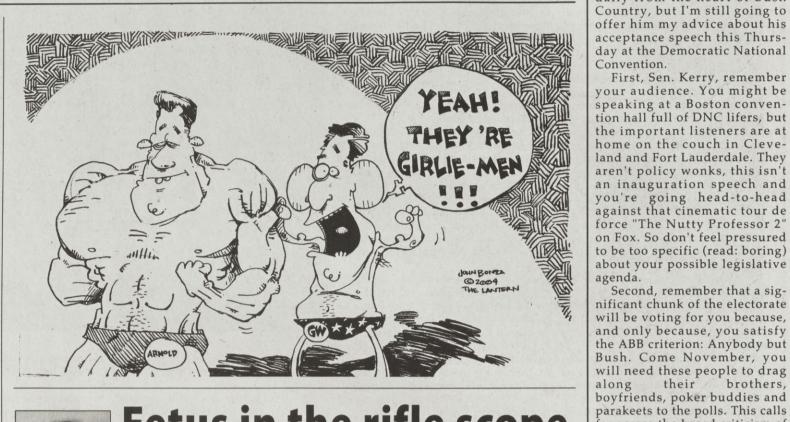

Programs inform college voters

As part of MTV's Choose or Lose campaign to spark young voters, MTV has been airing a series of "Choose or Lose" specials on various topics ranging from gay marriage to job outsourcing. These shows have examined problems in new and nonpartisan ways. For example, one installment documented the process of how one American's job as a call center worker was transferred to India, how they trained the new Indian workers for the job and how wide the gap is between how much an American and an Indian get paid for the same job. In another episode, the show's coverage of gay marriage discussed the various sides of the debate with fairness

MTV should be commended not only for setting an admirable goal of getting 20 million 18 to 30-year-olds to vote in the upcoming presidential election, but also for providing the tools necessary for voters to make an informed decision — something the music industryinspired voter registration group Rock the Vote has been lax in doing recently. Registering voters and showing advertisements does not get deep into issues, while voter information guides tend to be ignored. If anyone has the ability to take complex, potentially boring issues and make them interesting to younger voters, it is MTV.

Although other networks might not be able to present the issues with the flash and glamor MTV does, they should still be working on presenting issues to college students as well as other members of their audience. Comedy Central's "The Daily Show" emerged during the Iowa Caucuses as the top evening news source for 18 to 34-year-old males. The 2000 presidential election also saw "Saturday Night Live" emerge as a source of information on the presidential candidates.

"The Daily Show" and "SNL" can be valuable sources on politics occassionally, but much of their information should be taken with a grain of salt. The major networks have greater resources and credibility to present important issues to voters, especially college constituents. MTV, Comedy Central or "SNL" simply cannot bridge that gap and should not be expected to. It is up to these networks to make a greater effort to engage college voters as well as the rest of their audience with detailed, accurate reporting on the important issues in a presidential campaign. To do otherwise insults the intelligence of all voters.

Fetus in the rifle scope

Two men — brothers and hunting humanity of the baby. companions — spot a perfect clearing to stalk prey for the night's dinner. The older, more experienced woodsman catches the scent of a buck in the far brush while the other stays comsplits up in hopes to out do one

The kind morning sun is replaced with the merciless daytime heat, and nothing has been heard from the older brother. Suddenly laziness seems to pay off when movement is heard in the nearby bushes. Adrenaline surges as the younger brother prepares for his first solo shot.

An unmistakable flash of an orange vest is seen through the dense brush. No, he swears he saw antlers. His eye is to the scope when his finger hesitates to fire, uncertainty overwhelming him. He simply can not run the risk of shooting a live human, let alone his brother, his best friend.

Because uncertainty lingers as to when the moment of life begins, it is not wise to put a fetus in gun sights. Only a fool would ever take the risk of killing something that is alive, much less a child.

Return to the hunting scene. If technology stripped away doubt by allowing the rifleman to see through the bushes and realize it was a human and not a deer, would he be so quick to fire? Only a murderer would be inclined to pull the

Some say abortion is the mother's choice by arguing that humans have reproductive freedom. The law does not permit a man from having this same free will with his body in the case of rape. No one questions this ruling because our freedoms end when they clearly violate someone else's.

A different standard is held to abortions because agreement cannot be reached in determining if the fetus deserves the title of "someone." By walking a fine line of uncertainty, a mother runs the risk of violating her fetus, much like a man raping a helpless

Third, don't be afraid to talk about religion. Yes, it's true that some people vote Democratic largely because Democrats don't do this very often. Indeed, Gallup poll numbers consistently show these voters to be some of the most loyal in the Democratic base. And of course, they'd rather be governed by someone who doesn't ground his politics in what they might charitably construe as a 5,000year-old myth out of North

But these voters will not abandon you if you "God it up" a little on the hustings. After all, for an atheist or a non-Christian, what's the alternative? Fourth, go ahead and steal Sen. John Edwards' campaign theme of the "Two Americas" - one for corporate insiders and one for everyone else. (He's on your team now, so you're entitled.) For one thing, you've got the truth on your side see, for example, the Century Foundation report titled "Reality Check on 'The Two Americas'" at www.tcf.org. And just as importantly, Edwards' success in the primaries proved that this is a compelling message, one worthy of being the centerpiece of your acceptance speech. Finally, do not cede any ground to the Bush campaign on questions of national security. Howard Dean caught flak last winter for claiming that Saddam Hussein's capture had not made America any safer. Now, months later, most Americans appear to agree with that sentiment if we go by the dismal approval ratings for Bush's handling of the war in Iraq - 37 percent approval in the latest CBS News poll, compared to 58 percent disapproval.

It's time to capitalize on this disillusionment by asking the hard questions for which no one else has bothered to hold the Bush administration accountable. Where's the money we need to bolster airline and seaport security? Why are the 9/11 Commission's recommendations being shelved rather implemented? Why haven't we found Osama bin Laden?

That's a lot to expect in just one hour, Sen. Kerry. But come this Thursday, that's all you'll get to convince the nation that George Bush deserves a permanent holiday on his Crawford ranch.

This Saturday I'm taking a road trip to Boston to see a band called Dispatch. Never in my life have I heard Dispatch on the radio, and I don't think they have any videos; if they do, MTV never bothered to show them to

I first heard of Dispatch through Amazon.com, which recommended them to me while I was searching for O.A.R. Deciding to give the group a try, I downloaded some songs, liked what I heard and went out and bought an album. Follow that? My downloading led to me spending money. Maybe I'm weird. Maybe other people would download more songs and be content, but I don't

An article in April 29's "Rolling Stone" magazine reported on a case study done by economists at Harvard and the University of North Carolina. According to the study, music downloading is a lot like radio — people download one or two songs, and if they like what they hear they get the record. When downloads of a song increased, the study found that album sales didn't

Do you know why I love going to the Virgin Megastore? I can listen to CDs and decide if I like it before I'm done something I'm sure is familiar down 20 bucks. A lot of record companies have started selling new CDs at $9.99 for the first few weeks as an "introductory price." I've bought many CDs at this price — White Stripes, the Thrills, the Libertines, the Strokes, Los Lonely Boys, Kings of Leon, the Coral, Sondre Lerche, Robert Randolph, Toothpick and Ben Kweller. How many of those artists have you seen on MTV? Three? Four?

> Maybe part of the problem is that Music Television has stopped playing music. Oh, sure, they have TRL, but honestly, can we start a petition to make them change their name?
