Police presence could be increased

Substation may be placed closer to heart of campus for safety

> By John May Lantern wire editor

The Ohio State University community and the City of Columbus are working to establish a stronger police presence in the University District.

University leaders are collaborating with Columbus Division of Police to move the police substation, located on Medary Avenue between Maynard and Arcadia avenues, to a more central location in the university district.

"Placing the police substation in the heart of the University District would provide more visibility of police and more accessibility to police which will help deter university-area crime," said Bill Hall, vice president for Student Affairs.

Hall said a centralized location will allow University Police, Community Crime Patrol and Columbus Police to work closely with one other.

There has been discussion about the location of the police substation, but nothing has been finalized.

Steve Sterrett, spokesman for Campus Partners, said the university has discussed using the building that was formerly the Midwest University Consortium for International Activities for the new police substation. The building is located on 15th Avenue near High Street, and the university is leasing it from Pella Company. MUCIA

Meningitis cause for concern

Residence hall students susceptible to disease

Five years ago, Lynn Bozof was confronted with every mother's nightmare. Her son was in the hospital, and the prognosis was not good. She needed to come immediately.

Her son, Evan Bozof, was a junior in premedicine and the starting pitcher for the baseball team at Georgia Southwestern University. Because of a headache, he decided to skip his baseball game and had a friend take him to the emergency room.

Lynn Bozof said she was concerned because her son never skipped a game, but the hospital placed him on antibiotics and told her it was just a virus. The next morning, the grim truth began to emerge. He had meningococcal meningitis.

Meningococcal meningitis is a rare, but potentially fatal bacterial infection, which causes inflammation of the membranes around the brain and spinal cord.

According to the American College Health Association, this disease strikes about 2,500 Americans each year, with nearly 15 percent of the cases resulting in death. It is estimated that 100 to 125 cases occur annually on college campuses.

Evan Bozof experienced many of the symptoms, which include fever, severe

The North Market offers customers a variety of rare foods, drinks and collectibles that can't be found at the typical grocery store.

For 127 years the North Market has housed several small businesses such as local butchers, bakers, florists

"The North Market provides high quality, authentic and ethnic food of good value and reasonable price. We offer a variety of fresh fruits, vegetables, seafood, meats, flowers and more," said David Wible, executive director of the North Market.

Since its opening in 1876, the market has faced several setbacks.

After a fire in 1948, the city decided not to rebuild the market, but merchants pulled their funds together to buy a war surplus hut. Even though the merchants purchased the building, the city retained ownership.

The future of the market was unsure after World War II. The development of supermarkets and the building of the Ohio Center, which temporarily closed High Street, caused the market to depreciate.

In the 1980s, national recognition of public markets started to grow. Fear that the city would close the market to develop the Greater Columbus Convention Center, led to the creation of the North Market Development

KATZRIN, Golan Heights — Israel bombed a target inside Syria that it claimed was an Islamic Jihad training base, striking deep inside its neighbor's territory yesterday for the first time in three decades and widening its pursuit of Palestinian militants.

The airstrike — a retaliation for a suicide bombing Saturday that killed 19 Israelis — alarmed Kippur, the holiest day on the concerns that three years of Israeli-Palestinian violence could spread through the region.

Washington urged both Israel and Syria to show restraint, as the U.N. Security Council and the 22member Arab League called emergency sessions. Syria asked the council to consider measures to deter what it called Israeli 'aggression."

Dorms say no to alcohol decorations

New policy aims to educate, not penalize

Say goodbye to beer and liquor bottle collections. A new policy is in place in the residence halls prohibiting empty alcohol containers from being used as decorations.

'We were the first university in the land to offer paperless billing to our students, and last year, 50 percent of our students paid their bills online,"

The trustees were presented with a report on e-learning, another way the university is embracing technology. Elearning allows students to use technology in online classes or classes on campus supplemented with Internet use to advance educational possibilities.

In addition to the advances in technology, Holbrook mentioned OSU's focus on key issues from the Association of Governing Boards of Universities and Colleges, such as homeland security, affirmative action and the deteriorating status of Ohio's econo-

North Market Development Authority is a not-for-profit group that was set up to preserve and promote the traditional and cultural aspect of the historic North Market.

In 1992, Nationwide Insurance agreed to sell the former Advanced Thresher Warehouse, located at 59 Spruce St., to the organization and renovations to the market began in January 1995. In November of the same year, the North Market opened with 25 merchants.

Today there are 35 businesses located at the North Market. On Saturdays there are approximately 20 to 25 Ohio farmers who come to the North Market to sell their locally grown produce and flowers.

"I come for the variety of produce, specialty items and the ham loaves are second to none," said Randy Smith of Lancaster,

The North Market offers people a lot of choices under one roof. The vendors primarily sell stop there. A variety of other items including sugar-free chocolate and fresh cut flowers are offered as well.

AOL Espanol es muy bueno

By Amy Aldridge Lantern staff writer

America Online launched AOL Latino on Wednesday, a new online service entirely in Spanish.

AOL Latino is designed to offer the same features and benefits as the English version but is directed toward the Spanish-speaking population.

The cost is $23.90 a month for unlimited usage. This will allow the AOL member to use either the English or the Spanish version. The new AOL 9.0 Optimized Software is the English version that AOL Latino adds onto.

Wellisch, David president and general manager of AOL Latino, said in a statement Wednesday, "AOL Latino is an exciting and unique product for the U.S. Hispanic consumer. It brings the power of the Internet to the home and the choice to have it in Spanish or English or both, while guaranteeing a safe online experience for the entire family."

In June comScore Media Metrix found AOL to be the No. 1 Internet service provider for Hispanics in the United States. Wellisch said he wants this new service to expand on the connection AOL has with the Hispanic culture.

'We designed AOL Latino to offer compelling Spanish content in programming areas like news, sports, entertainment, music and lifestyle with an easy connection to the general English language service," Wellisch said.

'Today's launch signals our continuing effort to reach the exploding market of U.S. Hispanics online and reflects just phase one of a new effort to serve that community," he said.

Latin American newspapers, Hispanic athlete international sports coverage, People en Espanol, unreleased Latin music and homework help tutors are some of the special new offerings.

Nieves Pujalte, an international graduate student from Spain, who is teaching Spanish at Ohio State, said she would be excited to read the Latin American newspapers that she cannot normally find. "I don't read Spanish newspapers here, so when I return to Spain I feel lost," Pujalte said. "When I go there I don't know what is going on." Other new Spanish features for general online use include a welcome screen with audio in Spanish, Spanish installation, registration and procedures. There is also spell check for e-mails and instant messages written in Spanish, AOL mail and Toolbars and new Super Buddy icons that recognize Spanish words.

Pujalte said the service will be useful for many people. She estimated she would use it at least five days a week. The program would save her time as she would not have to format her computer to add accents each time she types.

"It is a very good idea, especially if someone is an instructor like me," Pujalte said. "I could use it to get resources for my students. Some of my students are really interested in learning Spanish, so this would be a good idea for them also."

Although she said it would be useful, Pujalte also said it would make it easier for Hispanics to avoid learning to speak English.

"The United States is bilingual. Go to Blockbuster and everything is in Spanish and English because the Hispanic population is getting bigger," Pujalte said.

For Pujalte, this service may be useful, but English-speaking students taking Spanish classes may not be inclined to use this

"I don't think I would use it because I can find all those resources in English, and I'm not a very fluent Spanish speaker," said Tiffany Goodin, a senior in Art who is taking Spanish 104. "I think this will attract more the native speakers and bilingual people.

No abortion ban

Bush wrong in pushing agenda

In a controversial decision Thursday, the House of Representatives voted to ban "partial birth" abortions. According to the bill, partial birth abortions refer to a procedure in which the doctor begins to deliver the fetus before the abortion is performed. The Senate is preparing to deal with the bill and President Bush has already said he would sign it into law.

With the 2004 presidential election looming and an approval rating below 50 percent — 49 percent according to a recent NBC News/Wall Street Journal poll, 44 percent according to CBS News/New York Times — it seems Bush has entered panic mode. After making a slight ripple in the middle of September, the bill caused a stir when it seemed to come out of nowhere and was passed last week. With a possible transfer of power from the Republicans to the Democrats next election, Bush is trying to get as much of his personal agenda through the legislation process while he still has the guaranteed votes.

This is hardly the first time such a bill has popped up in the legislature. After the Republicans gained control of the House in 1995, the issue has been debated almost every year, but it has been blocked by vetoes from then-President Clinton and problems in the Senate. Clinton vetoed the bill twice because the bill didn't have a provision for the health of the mother, a provision still missing in the current version. For the most part, the Democrats kept up Clinton's dislike of the bill, but the Republican-controlled House voted to pass the bill 281-142.

But pushing personal agendas through the government before a loss of power is hardly a Republican-exclusive issue. When the news of the recall solidified in California, Gov. Gray Davis prioritized a few issues on his own agenda — most notably, a employer-sponsered health care bill signed yesterday and a boost to stem cell research.

Because these three issues are going to be vitally important and even more controversial in the coming elections, the debate on them is sure to be fierce. But it is that debate the fuels the best bills. It's not hard to look at the swelling of controversy after these three decisions to see that not every American is happy with such bills.

It seems like these officials forget that their first job is to represent the wills of the people, not their own agendas. While an increase in debate may slow the legislative process, such controvery would only serve to make the bills that do go through that much stronger and make the citizens that much happier.

Essays step in right direction

Ohio State's undergraduate application is changing face to better comply with the U.S. Supreme Court's affirmative action case. When the court struck down the University of Michigan's point-based admissions policy, colleges assigning points for race — such as OSU — had to reconfigure what they asked potential students.

At last week's Board of Trustee's meeting, Virginia M. Trethewey, Ohio State general counsel, stated, "The Michigan rulings showed that a student's race can no longer be the decisive factor in college admissions."

As a result, the university designed four essay questions, demanding future students to do more than simply check a box when asked about their ethnic origin and write an optional essay. The new questions are: "Describe the expectations you have for your college academic experience;" "Describe a character in literature or film with whom you identify;" "Identify a living, public figure whose background, race, gender, sexual orientation, religion, or ideology makes the person substantially different from you and indicate what you've learned from your awareness of this person and his/her background, views, or experiences;" and "Looking ahead to the next 5 to 10 years, what personal, social, or political issue concerns you most and why?"

While OSU is still allowed to and should consider race, the essay questions delve deeper into future enrollee's personality. They look beyond the ethnicity of a person, attempting to address all characteristics that make up a student's identity. Academics are the foundation of all those applying to the university, and the point based system seemed to underwine that point-based system seemed to undermine that.

Now faceless students can reveal their human side, while showing their capability and desire to fit the Buckeye mold. The questions apply to everyone, intending to provide an equal opportunity for qualified students to get an education no matter background or socio-economic standing. Proficient writing skills and educated responses are a good indicator of a student's academic potential and may provide compensation for those who do not fair as well on standardized tests.

The downfall to using any kind of ethnic evaluation is that these essay questions may be an unstated non-point, point system. When asking any student to divulge background information, application evaluators are going to consider the inherent advantage or disadvantage of each applicant.

For example, one of the questions asks students to reveal the education level of their parents and grandparents, suggesting it a good indicator of wealth. There could be many instances where students come from a well-educated family, but are in an economically precarious situation, and vice versa.

Nevertheless, the essay based application is a definite improvement to the vague point-based system and keeps the university on track in its search for a diverse student body.

Safety issues ignored

There is no other area as important as biomedical research. It touches every one of us.

-- President Karen Holbrook, Oct.3

Then looking at the plans for the new $151 million biomedical research center and the other new buildings dotting campus, it is hard to argue with the immense positive impact they will have on the university and the Columbus community.

But as I read the story in The Lantern and then glanced up only a few inches to a report on the horrendous Weinland Park crime situation – the site of numerous crimes, including the murder of an OSU student in July – I began to wonder if the university's priorities are straight.

Honestly, I was at first angry at the administration's apparently skewed agenda – the creation of new building after new building, while the safety of the off-campus neighborhoods seems to remain largely a problem of Columbus police on patrol and OSU students living there.

True, city officials – not those at OSU – may be the only ones responsible for solving these problems. Ohio State is a university lacking funds and resources, an institution like many others under the pressures of immense size and a sagging economy; it is hard to insist that an administration spread thin help mend problems lying just outside official OSU borders.

But the university voluntarily extended its jurisdiction outside campus proper and into off-campus neighborhoods in the wake of the riots plaguing student residents during the past several years.

OSU altered the Code of Student Conduct to punish and/or expel students engaging in riotous behavior, implying, in so many words, that what happens off campus affects campus.

They are absolutely right, and the sense of community Ohio State seems intent on fostering requires an interest in the safety and maintenance of off-campus neighborhoods and in the recent initiatives Columbus police have created to curb crime there.

Off-campus safety, however, does not seem to be getting the attention it deserves, since OSU's role in campus safety is behind the scenes, almost invisible to a general public seeing large sums of money being spent elsewhere.

Ohio State has been invisible in the four-point Neighborhood Safety Plan, an initiative focusing on Weinland Park – an area close to campus and one of four residential areas in Columbus receiving special attention from city police because of unacceptable levels of crime. Funding for the plan has come from the city government and from the Franklin County Commissioner's Office.

OSU has given sums of money in other departments and wants to have a significant role in a proposed police substation to be built in the university district. Bill Hall, vice president of student affairs, has also worked with Columbus police to help stop crime off campus.

So Ohio State has acted, that much is true. But that their actions remain, to a great extent, hidden to the public may be one sign they are doing something, just not enough. Seeing construction overlap the agenda involving the safety of the thousands of students living off campus may indicate that OSU may be favoring one issue over another, that like new research centers, is one that touches every one of us.

Freedom of speech an issue at OSU

While attending a Freshman orientation session last month as a parent, a new student asked the student affairs speaker if Ohio State has reformed its attitude toward free speech since the 2002 commencement when OSU administrators threatened to arrest anyone protesting President Bush at the commencement.

The student affairs speaker downplayed the administration's threats and said OSU was not going arrest anyone but, as he recalled, only warned students that inappropriate behavior, such as "throwing cabbage," would have resulted in being escorted from the commencement ceremonies. He asserted OSU strongly supports freedom of speech.

However, it was the new student, not the student affairs flack, who had it exactly right. In the days leading up to and at the commencement when President Bush spoke, OSU administrators tried to intimidate legal, peaceful protest of the president. They threatened to arrest anyone who simply stood and turned their back on the president. The threat was hollow, of course.

Such protest is a basic First Amendment right and any arrest would have been illegal. But the intimidation itself was shameful. OSU administrators should seek to protect our fundamental American liberties rather than abuse them.

Students not first priority at OSU

Everyone knows that Ohio and most other states are having budget problems, making it necessary to cut funds to higher education and other areas. This hasn't stopped OSU from putting up more buildings this fall than a small country does in a year.

I posed the following question to a fellow student: "Just what does OSU spend on us?" My friend thought for a moment and said, "Well, they have to run the police department so we don't start fires or turn over cars."

That seemed to make sense at first. Then I got to thinking about all the parking tickets I've gotten over my years here, and I did some math.

I figured that by parking in the campus area, I've kept 2.5 officers suited up. Multiply that by 50,000 or so students, and OSU could hire a decent sized army. And that's ignoring football money.

I tried to be less sarcastic and think about all the teachers the university must support. But then I did some more math, factoring in the teaching assistant to professor ratio and average class size. Please understand, I don't mean to disparage the system. It taught me all the math I know. Still, I respectfully ask the powers that be: What percentage of OSU's budget is actually spent on the students?

Cell phones have grown from being used in emergencies to becoming a necessity for some people. We can't get enough of cell phones. We can take pictures with them, play games on them and before too long, they'll probably be able to help us eat and breathe.

Just last week Sprint released its new RPS-84 model, which is designed to be surgically placed inside a person's chest cavity. When you receive a call, your heart will beat to the baseline of "Welcome to Atlanta." Since cell phones are so cool and people can't live without them, they could at least learn some cell phone etiquette. So if you're one of those people who sleep with your cell phones on your pillow, have 200 numbers in your phone but only call three of them, or have ever had a bill over $400, here are a few guidelines to help you out.

Don't be the person who leaves his or her cell phone on during class. First of all, is it really necessary to have your phone in class? I doubt you're going to be on your phone telling your friends to get down there fast because they won't want to miss this lecture. If you do feel like a part of you will be missing if you don't have your phone with you in class, at least turn it off or put it on vibrate. Don't be the person whose phone rings seven times each class and then acts surprised about that call. No one cares; you're not cool.

Don't talk on your cell phone while you're driving. You might think you're multi-talented, but switching lanes while you're arguing with your boyfriend is unacceptable. And no, your cell phone will not inflate if you wreck your car.

You are definitely not cool when you interrupt a conversation with someone to answer your cell phone. This is when your friend just wants to punch someone in the face. You're telling a story about going to jail last night, and you use the 'ole, "I have to take this call, it's important." After waiting patiently for five minutes, the listener then begins awkward because he doesn't know whether to stay or wait longer. Take Aretha Franklin's advice.

Don't be one of the cheesy people who talk on their cell phones everywhere. These are the people who could be ordering dinner at a restaurant and talking at the same time. They're also the people you see trip and fall on the way to class, walk right into someone who is running and walk into oncoming traffic because they don't pay attention to the crossing signals.

Please, please, please, do not wear a cell phone headset. Not only do you look like you work for Ohio State Calling, but you also look stupid. The regular cell phone isn't good enough for you; you have to be "hands-free."

I watched someone in one of my classes carry on a 10 minute conversation with someone wearing a head set, only to find out the person was talking to someone else.

You don't have to yell for someone to hear you. If you only learn one thing from this column, learn this: If you're yelling to the person on the other line, they probably can't hear you anyway.

These were just a few guidelines to try and help out the less fortunate people who have cell phone problems. Going crazy when you can't use your cell phone isn't just a problem, it's a disease. It's called wireless withdrawal syndrome, and I'm writing this because I care about you.

Dubious call ends in Crew, United tie

By Mike Price Lantern sports writer

Columbus Crew defender Frankie Hejduk was aid out icing his right knee after a punishing 1-1 tie with Eastern Conference foe D.C. United Saturday night. He knew questions about his foul on midfielder Marco Etcheverry were coming, so he had his answer good and ready.

"He dove before I even hit him," an irritated Hejduk said.

The controversial foul, a trip as Hejduk was falling down, allowed Etcheverry to easily convert on a penalty kick in the 59th minute. The goal wiped out a five-save effort by goalkeeper Jon Busch and left the Crew in a real bind.

With three games left in the season, Columbus (8-11-8) is four points behind the New England Revolution (9-9-9, 36 points) for the fourth and final playoff spot in the conference after the Revolution defeated the Dallas Burn 4-1 Saturday night.

"We've got to keep our heads up and keep fighting," Crew coach Greg Andrulis said. "We've got three games left to get the mission accomplished, which is to get into the playoffs. Certainly, we're not making it easy on ourselves."

Andrulis is right. The words "easy" and "Crew" mix together as well as oil and water. For the third week in a row, Columbus played its opponent into overtime. One would think the Crew would have learned its lesson by trying not to play in overtime because of its atrocious 0-3-8 record. Columbus' last overtime win came in June 2002.

At least this week the Crew did not falter at the end. Unlike the past two games where it let up late goals in overtime, Columbus instead got one point even though it desperately needed three in a tight "We're not taking care of business," Busch said.

With cuts coming tomorrow, Blue Jackets center Dan Fritsche, at age Star of the game. This was his 18, is looking to make the final roster.

Center hopes Jackets fit like glove

By Craig Sweeney Lantern sports writer

When most people are 18 years old, they are dreaming about the college they want to attend or the job they want to have. For 18-yearold Dan Fritsche, his dream is becoming a reality.

Fritsche is a Parma, Ohio native and the first-ever Ohio born player drafted by the Columbus Blue Jackets. He is in training camp with the Blue Jackets and is on the verge of making the team with only a few cuts left before the roster is set tomorrow.

'I've been working to get here," Fritsche said. "Before I came here I set a goal in mind, and this is where I want to be."

Fritsche has enjoyed the time he has spent with the Blue Jackets this preseason.

Ît's remarkable," Fritsche said. "It's been a really fun road so far. I can't ask for anyting else."

In the Blue Jackets, second preseason game against the Nashville Predators, Fritsche scored a goal and was named First only goal of the preseason.

Fritsche, a center, is attempting to earn his spot on the roster while making adjustments to the NHL game. Fritsche said he believes he has what it takes to make it in the "Everyone's a lot stronger," Fritsche said. "The skill level is just that much better. I think one thing that's keeping me here is that I think I have the size and strength and speed to go along with these guys.

At 18, Fritsche is 6 feet 1 inch tall and weighes 198 pounds.

Fellow Blue Jackets are taking notice of the impact that Fritsche is making on the ice.

Forward Rick Nash has been impressed with how Fritsche has come together with the team.

"He's fitting in real well," Nash said. "He doesn't look like he's out of place by any means."

Nash was 18 years old coming into the league last year and went on to make the NHL All-Rookie team. He knows the experience Fritsche is going through trying to make it in the NHL. "It was tought at first," Nash said. "Once you get going you get more confidence and you feel more comfortable with the guys around the room, and I think that helps out a lot on the ice."

Left winger Jody Shelley is impressed with the toughness and skill the young Fritsche is

"He's not supposed to know he can do that stuff and make a good impression," Shelley said. The other night in New York he went up against Greg de Vries and stood up for himself. That turns a lot of heads."

Center Andrew Cassels is impressed with the poise Fritsche is showing in his game.

"He's confident out there with the puck," Cassels said. "That's hard to do when you're his age."

Off the ice, Fritsche has to adjust to a world where some of his teammates are much older than he is and at different stages of their lives.

"It's kind of different being that their whole life is planned out wife, kids," Fritsche said. "They're great guys. They like to act young and still have fun. I really thought it would be different but it really makes no difference."

Replays replace humans

Every day technology takes over for people somewhere in the world. Sports are not an exception to this phenomena.

Aside from being plastered all over the television and Internet, sports have taken technology to a level that is included as a part of the game.

The National Football league has used instant replay to replace referees for certain calls. College football is now talking of implementing the same system in seasons to come. The Big Ten is supposed to be the test conference.

Other systems have recently been added to professional athletics.

Tennis has been a haven for ESPN to test out the influence of the computer age on the game. Shot Spot is a system of cameras watching the ball's every move. It determines where the ball is placed on the court. Although it is not used as an official ruling method on line calls, it has the potential to move in that direction.

Even America's past-time has felt the pinges of the technology wave. A number of baseball parks have added Questec to monitor calls by the plate umpires. The cameras set a strike zone and adjust it to each batter. Umps can then compare their results with Questec.

While instant replay is the only system that directly affects play, the other systems raise questions to the validity of the referees, umpires and line judges. The fans berate these people when their calls don't agree with technology

What's funny, though, is that the calls seldom disagree. ESPN studied Shot Spot and found that the line judges and the cameras make the same call 95 percent of the time. In a typical five-set men's tennis match, the ball crosses the net at least 108 times. That number is true in a match where one player wins every single one of his own service points with aces and unreturnable serves and breaks his opponent's serve with a winner after each serve. The line judges could potentially call only 5.4 shots inaccurately.

It is those 5.4 calls that sets fans off. In baseball, the statistics are strikingly similar. ESPN took to the clipboards again designing a study for the game. It found that ballparks with Questec had close to the same percentage of strikes called as those without. Both came out to roughly 62 percent. Obviously, from these stats, machines and technology aren't needed in the sports

The NFL's instant replay boasted the lowest level of accuracy for the referees. Last season, teams took advantage of the replay booth 294 times. In less than a third of the cases -94 to be exact — the decision was overturned. Basically, out of 256 games, 94 could have had a different outcome without instant replay. But most of the games probably were not ultimately decided by the camera's call.

Last week Ohio State football coach Jim Tressel told media he did not necessarily agree with the idea of instant replay. His reasoning was that if all calls and penalties were not subject to the design, why should some of them be. The point is well taken. If we are going to question a touchdown catch that was called incomplete, shouldn't we question a 5-yard holding penalty? Doing that would disrupt the entire nature of the

If we take the concept of replay a little further, we could say that everything should be subject to replay and every one subject to scrutiny. Coaches and players should be able to have a second chance in every play they make. If a coach decides that he read a play wrong, he should be able to request a replay. I can't even imagine what that would
