But the magic that worked in Nebraska was missing in his first national campaign. Kerrey admitted as much at a wistful and sometimes emotional news conference as he abandoned the race.

"A campaign depends upon the candidate's capacity to communicate and to establish trust," Kerrey said, "and I did not begin to do that until very late in the campaign."

Kerrey won a big victory Feb. 25 in South Dakota, but never translated his assets into widespread appeal outside his own region. He consistently finished at or near the bottom of the pack.

Kerrey, whose campaign is about $1 million in debt, said money problems contributed to his decision. "We ran out of gas," he

On the campaign trail, Kerrey insisted that Clinton was unelectable because of questions about the Arkansas governor's use of a draft deferment to avoid serving in Vietnam. But Thursday Kerrey called his attacks "political hyperbole" and said he would campaign "feverishly" for Clinton if he is the nominee

For weeks in New Hampshire, site of the critical first primary, Tsongas was perceived as a regional candidate and Clinton was beset by allegations about his personal life. But Kerrey was unable to attract voters searching for an alternative.

The first-term senator was an uneven campaigner who alternately impressed and bored audiences. He seemed to move weekly from one theme to another — trade, health, shaking up government, patriotism, electability. He was blunt about his prospects and his plans, to the point of saying he would raise taxes to pay for health-care reforms and infrastructure investment.

"If I intend to spend some money, I'm going to tell you where I'm going to get it," he told a group of New Hampshire teachers last month. "That's my nature."

The tone of Kerrey's campaign for "fundamental change" was more abrasive than the man. He was tense and combative in many of the televised candidate debates, and even fans said he came across as too belligerent on TV.
Friends and political analysts

House will vote to disclose names of bad check writers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House ethics committee Thursday proposed publicly disclosing the names of 24 lawmakers who repeatedly wrote bad checks on the proposed 24-person list represents those who is the proposed pr their House bank accounts.

The committee will ask the full House to approve the proposal.

The disclosure would include 19 current and five for-

to identify the account holders.

The committee proposal would name only repeated and routine abusers. Some House members already have called for disclosure of all members who wrote bad House sources have said about 300 members may have written at least one overdraft at the bank, which have written at least one overdraft at the bank, which was closed late last year because of the check scandal. Student loan defaults increase years to 25 years, giving them time to pay in smaller amounts, she said. Others are returning to school after a look at bleak job prospects. "Many students are choosing to go to graduate school to put off payment on their student loans—and trying to ride out the recession," Getman said. About 25 percent of the OSU graduates polled applied to graduate school upon graduation; of those, 11.1 percent will enter graduate school during the next year.

Defaults on student loans in Ohio nearly doubled in the 1991-92 school year, according to James Biddle, executive director of the Ohio Student Loan Commission. Biddle attributes that increase to a poor job market for college

But those numbers are expected to be low compared to the national average. National numbers for 1990, the newest statistics on default, will be released in July.

National statistics from 1983 to 1989 showed a 26 percent increase in student loan defaults.

"The national average will be dealing with much larger numbers than we are seeing here in Ohio,' Biddle said.

"We are experiencing an increase in default for traditionally low default schools," Biddle said. "Schools that have had 3 to 4 percent default rates are now pushing 7 to 8 percent."

Abortion has been a hot topic for years. However, with the rise of PC debate in the nation, new abortion issues arise daily.

The newest abortion issue is if abortion is a PC issue at all, said Jeff Grabmeier, associate editor in the Office of Communications, Abortion existed as an issue long before PC became common discussion, he said. One school of thought is that abortion is a PC issue because it is so closely tied to gender, one of the primary facets being discussed with the new topic of PC.

The bigger issue with PC is that it is a humanitarian issue that abortion falls under, said Stef Goldberg, of the Association of Women Students

"PC can be just as oppressive as a non-political issue," Goldberg said. Lisa Huelskamp, president and co-founder of Students for Life, said she thinks abortion is a PC issue. She also said people who think abortion should be legal are not PC. "With the current rights, you have the politically correct choices of choice - you don't have one."

"I've never heard abortion in context with PC, but it is definitely tied to gender," said Judy Hauser, director of the Northwest Women's Center. "I've always found it interesting that those against abortion are, for the majority, men, and those for the choice of abortion are usually women."

Students for Life is currently facing a PC issue in conflict with the Women Student Services, Huelskamp said.

"They don't want us on the Women Student Services calendar because we don't meet their feminist guidelines," Huelskamp said.

"We are facing discrimination even though we don't feel that we are the minority," Huelskamp said. If a national poll was taken, the clear-cut majority would be anti-abortion, she

"They (anti-abortionists) believe in fetal rights; They don't believe in women's rights," Goldberg said. The terminology used in abortion topics, like all PC issues, is currently under revision by most media departments.

The Columbus Dispatch, for example, is currently changing wordchoice usage in abortion stories to incorporate Associated Press style with local issue orientations, said Gary Kiefer, assistant managing editor of The Columbus Dispatch.

When local style questions arise, the publication refers to the groups as they prefer, Kiefer said.

The change has been brought about by types of language that did not match well with media consultants of the groups involved, said Joe Frolik, national reporter for The Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Akron Beacon-Journal does not use pro-life or pro-choice because this dictates one-upmanship, said Stuart Warner, deputy managing editor.

The Journal tries to keep the issue clear and use the body copy to explain if they have to use pro-choice, pro-life or pro-abortion, he said.

Pro-choice, for example, did not flow well with anti-abortion supporters so they are now called abortion rights supporters, Frolik

"The main thing is to be fair and show that both views are adequately explained because we are dealing with touchy issues and paragraph counters (people who count the number of paragraphs one side receives in a published article vs. the number of paragraphs the opposing side receives)," Frolik said.

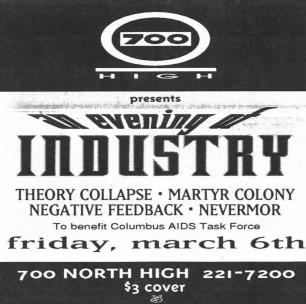

The new terms take away some of the confusion in the public eye, Hauser said. Pro-choice was getting confused with pro-life, but now it is clear who is making each statement, she said.

The Lantern policy is to use the terms pro-choice or anti-abortion.

The trial was moved to Simi Valley in Ventura County because of pretrial publicity in Los Angeles.

University striving to cut down on illegally parked bicycles

By Kevin Corvo

Knowing that the cancellation of Scarlet and Gray bus services coupled with the arrival of warmer weather will bring additional bikes traffic to bring additional blkes traffic to campus, Ohio State officials are striving to cut down on the number of illegally parked bikes that impede the travel of disabled students.

Dick Maxwell, assistant director for Disability Services, stressed a need for more awareness.

"People need to realize what a hazard it can be for our students when handlebars or front wheels are over in clear walking space on ramps or sidewalks," Maxwell said. "Students have been tripped and students in wheelchairs have been denied access or sustained injuries to their hands or damage to their wheelchairs.

Consumer Corner

With all the talk these days about concern for the environment, many people want to do their part to help, but aren't sure how. One easy way is to be environmentally conscious while shopping.

When you are standing in a grocery store aisle and looking at a half million different brands of the same item, it can be difficult to make a decision for the most environmentally sound product Better labeling however is real. uct. Better labeling, however, is making deciding easier.

A key rule of thumb is to buy products that use less packaging. This will reduce the use of raw materials, and will also save landfill space.

will also save landfill space.

One area, producing the greatest amount of packaging waste, is the health and beauty section of the grocery store. Many products come in bottles or tubes, which are then unnecessarily packed into boxes—for example, toothpaste. More and more products are coming out that use less wasteful packaging, such as the new toothpaste pumps, which are sold as standpumps, which are sold as stand-

For those consumers intent on being For those consumers intent on being "environmentally correct," there are also now "green" versions of many products. A company called Greenmark makes a whole line of products from garbage bags to paper products, such as napkins and facial tissue.

One common muth is that "green"

One common myth is that "green" products are more expensive. This isn't always true. For instance, the campus area Big Bear sold boxes of Greenmark kitchen garbage bags, 15 count, for $1.09, compared to $3.05 for a box of 15 similar Glad bags. The a box of 15 similar Giau Dags. The Greenmark bags use a thinner, stronger type of Polyethylene, which uses less landfill space, and the carton is made from recycled paper.

Another company, Renew, takes its product one step further - the bags themselves are recycled. A box of 30 harmonic $1.50 themselves are recycled. A box of 30 bagscosts $1.59.

Approach environmental claims warily. The Mobil Corporation, which owns Hefty, formerly claimed that its bags were biodegradable. The bags were biodegradable but only if they were left in the sun for long periods of time. Sunlight as you might imagine, is rare in landfills. The company no longer claims the are biodegradable.

When buying Greenmark or any other environmentally safe brand.

other environmentally safe brand, don't just look for the percentage of recycled material used but the amount of "post consumer recycled material." This information isn't on too many packages yet, but should become more common.

Post consumer waste is material that has actually been used and then recycled. Most other recycled waste is merely left over from a factory's manufacturing process. Using this waste cuts down on consumption of raw materials, but not by much. In fact, it demonstrates how much waste is produced, and how inefficient the manufacturing processes are.

Another idea is to buy products in quantities. This also reduces packaging waste. It also is usually cheaper. If it will be consumed at home anyway, why buy a pack of fruit juice boxes when a large can of juice can be pur-chased instead? A controversy erupted last year hecause dolphins were getting caught in the large driftnets used to catch tuna. Instead of eating the "chicken of the sea," consumers were often eating Flipper.

Most brands now say "Dolphin Safe" or have some sort of dolphin symbol on them. Unfortunately, there is no standard design or placement, so a close look at the can might be need. The dolphin seal doesn't guarantee that dol-phin is not mixed in withthe tuna, only that there is a lower probability. The new nets are safer, but still catch some

An environmentally conscious decision also needs to be made at the chack-out counter-whether to use paper or plastic bags.

Recent government studies of the total "life cycles" of paper vs. plastic bags indicates that plastic bags might actually be less harmful to the environment than paper. The plastic bags come from petroleum byproducts, while the paper bags are usually a combination of wood paper and some sort of fiber, such as cotton.

When the harmful pesticides and herbicides used to grow the raw materials for paper sacks are figured in, along with the fuel and energy used in the production process, plastic comes out ahead.

Plastic sacks also consume less landfill space (paper doesn't decompose any faster than plastic in a landfill). The only real solution is to buy those cloth bags some stores now sell, and use them over again.

By purchasing products that use less packaging, buying "green" products, buying larger quantities and being aware of what is in a product, you can be "environmentally correct," which, unlike being "politically correct" does something useful.

Family cocktail hour focus of comedic play

"The Cocktail Hour," a comedy about an upper-middle class family's struggle to come together and understand each other, is being performed at Players Theatre through March 24.

In the play, John, the oldest son, played by Warren Keith, comes home to ask his family for permission to write a play about them called, "The Cocktail Hour."

Because John wrote the play about how he sees his family, they refuse to let him run the play and say it is an attack on them.

John says he has always been left out of the family, and he does not feel loved. He especially has never gotten along with his father Bradley, played by Allen Leatherman.

The family was never particularly close one. As John talks about his play and tells the family members how he portrays each of them, his sister Nina, played by Charlotte Maier, and his mother Ann, played by Betty Jinnette, tell him the truth about their lives. It becomes clear that John does not see the others the way they see themselves.

hour before dinner. Throughout the performance, the family members argue about each others' lives and about John's play. As the drinks get stronger, the topics of discussion hit closer to home.

As they talk, they find out many things about each other and their pasts. The play ends with a feeling that they now possess a closeness and respect for each other.

Although the play deals with many touchy subjects, it is still a comedy, and it keeps the audience members laughing.

It is easy to find comparisons in everyday family life. Many of the arguments that they have are typical family arguments.

The acting is wonderful; the actors make the characters easy to sympathize with and help the audience members feel involved in the play. It is as if the audience is The performance takes place during the family's sacred cocktail the living room with them part of the family, sitting right in

But since they have no root, they last only a short time. When trouble or persecution comes because of the word, they quickly fall away. Still others, like seed sown among thorns, hear the word; but the worries of this life, the deceitfulness of wealth and the desires for other things come in and choke the word, making it unfruitful. Others, like seed sown on good soil, hear the word, accept it, and produce a crop--thirty, sixty or even a hundred times what was sown. (NIV)

Ice Cube, star of the hit movie "Boyz in the 'Hood," and rapper whose new album, Death Certificate, has been a dominate force on Billboard's black album charts for the past 16 weeks, will give a lecture today at the Ohio Union's South Terrace at 3:30.

Death Certificate has generated as much controversy as it has sales. The controversy stems from two tracks on the album, "Black Korea" and "No Vaseline," which are said to have anti-Asian and anti-Semitic references in them.

CLEVELAND (AP) — Staff morale remains good and acquisitions are unaffected by money problems and other setbacks in the proposed Rock and Roll Hall of Fame and Museum, the rock music shrine's curator said Thursday.

To be PC

Is PC a convenient scapegoat to those wishing to avoid issues?

Increasingly, over the past few years, we have heard about the ravages of "political correctness." It was, supposedly, running rampant on college campuses and getting in the way of the pursuit of knowledge. But, what is politically correct?

Is it just a means by which to leash all of the elements of our culture that are deemed to be practicing unacceptable modes of thought?

Or is it the only way to insure that everyone is treated with a modicum of dignity, even if it is out of line with traditional ways of treating the differences between individuals?

Or maybe just maybe, it is a convenient way to label people so that you don't have to deal with what they are trying to say or do, at all.

Because, no matter how you look at it, being politically correct is — regardless of good or bad — at worst benign. It asks only that each person think about how they relate to others and treat them with a modicum of decency and respect.

Even when it brings up terms as far fetched "vertically challenged," there is no mandate to do anything that we haven't already agree upon: assimilating the diversity of people and ideas in this country.

The problem, then, cannot be in any way involved with political correctness itself. The problem lies in our dedication — or lack thereof — to appreciating cultural diversity.

Political correctness and its numerous foibles have become a convenient scapegoat for the resistance to change. By dubbing the offensive or the unwanted "politically correct" and, thereby connecting it to the various connotations that have been attached to it, then we don't have to deal with the offensive or the unwanted.

Not only does slow down the appreciation of different cultures, but the time and energy the "politically correct" person has to spend arguing about — or trying to shed — the title takes away from his or her ability to bring about change

The term politically correct, whatever it originally meant, is now little more than a nice, handy, little box to put all of society's troublemakers.

Computer virus

Computer prankster's joke not funny on second thought

Of late, the great Italian Renaissance artists' name has come to mean quite a bit more to computer owner's.

Michelangelo, the computer virus, will strike IBMcompatible computers on March 6, the artist's birthday. The virus can erase existing data and programs on the computer's hard disk.

It can be detected and eliminated before doing any damage. The Ohio State Customer Services, 508 Baker Systems, will be giving out the software to people who wish to take precautions in exchange floppy disk.

But, while everyone is scrambling around to protect their computers from, essentially, annihilation, a little thought must go toward who started this virus and why.

It is clearly possible that the virus was created by someone as a prank simply because they had the knowledge to accomplish it. And, we puny, imperfect humans must admit, it is slightly humorous when we see that the computer isn't that perfect, after all.

But what does that say about this person, if he or she is ever caught? And, more importantly, how many more times will we have to deal with this kind of "prank?

In a world where we are becoming increasingly dependent upon computers, it is not a comforting thought to know that your entire life savings could be wiped out solely because somebody wanted to test their programming abilities - is not a comforting thought at

We constantly marvel at the things computers do and could do - for us. And, due to anti-virus programs, the damage from this virus will probably be minimal. But that's this time, and, if we cannot be assured of their safety, what good are they?

Society's tough talk goes a long way ... down root for the underdogs, but back home, we'd just as soon rip their whining throats out and hang their stinking, crybaby hides out to dry.

In the fantasy world of cinema,

Americans love to cheer for the underdog. The image of the lone person from humble beginnings besting the mighty, corrupt system in its own yard can get a crowd of movie-goers hooping it up every time. It's so touching, it can make you cry.

In the fantasy world of the evening news, things are a bit different. In this manufactured reality, most people scorn the lone rebel. They worship the powerful system and wealthy corporate ruling class, ignoring corruption's stench. Most people never question how wealth and power were attained, they just sink to their knees, longing for a chance to grovel at the feet of the tremendous.

In our real false world, regular people hate commoners; they despise their neighbors, peers and other mortals, and revere those who have inherited the right to be

Think about star athletes. While people make moaning noises about what a scum so-or-so is for making five million a season, nobody stands up and asks, "Hey, wait a second. If that chuck is pulling down five mil, how much is the owner making?" Nobody thinks about that because we are programmed not question the rich establishment. The athlete is different, though, because the athlete is just one of us, a regular person. The owner doesn't have much of a chance of getting permanently injured, either. Unless he drops a really heavy Rolex on his foot or something.

People's attitudes towards welfare also reveal this hyprocrisy. A single woman sharing a shack in a war zone with a couple of kids can be despised, undeserving of compassion, because she draws a taxpayers, but the public shells out can bet, but who are we to question welfare to the rich without giving a the sacred Brotherhood of the welfare to the rich without giving a well-digger's darn. Politicians with ivy-league law degrees and assorted members of the industrial nobility can suck thousands of dollars, in the form of misappropriated freebies and subsidies, out of taxpayers' pockets and only a few weak whining sounds can be detected. The taxpayers don't mind signing over checks to pay mortgages on mansions, but shell out a few cents to feed the hungry? Tough noogies, bub.

A similar disdain is found in attitudes about affirmative action. Nobody wants to support a system of opportunities based on favoritism, do they?. Well, not if that preference is based on somebody's status as a member of a disadvantaged group. If that favortism was based, instead, on one's status as a member of a priveleged, elite group, well, that's a different meatball.

How many jobs are denied to qualified people because somebody on the board's son, daughter-in-law, lousy $500 a month from the sister needs the job? Plenty, you Brother-in-law?

Nobody questions these established traditions. We would gladly give our blood to people who enjoy a higher standard of living than we will ever even see on television, but begrudge our brothers and sisters, our equals, the tiniest crumb.

With all the lip-service we give to equality, most regular people know rich people are better than they are. They know they are not worthy to criticize the American aristocracy, despite the hallowed teachings of their sacred, censored, high school history books. So it is written in American history books, there is no aristocracy in the United States. So it shall be. That must mean everybody has an equal chance of making it big. That must mean titles and power aren't handed down through elite families. That must mean inheritance plays no part in success. Pull the other one.

And what's going on at the Oval?
I can't wait for one of those kamikaze ten-speed bikers to rocket past me on the Oval this year.
What the hell are they doing on the Oval, anyway? Painted on the sidewalk, at every entrance, is a huge sign on the ground that says "No Bikes." It seems these little bikers can't read. No matter.
The first time I see a biker

The first time I see a biker coming, I'm going to hide behind a tree, with a six-iron golf club. Oh, no. I'm not going to hit him with it. That would be too easy. I'm going to wait until he is right next to me and drive the club between his Yeah, that's pretty cool. Nothing like mounting up on the old CHiP's spokes.

I may even pack a sandwich. I can think of nothing more funny to watch than a clueless biker launch over his handle bars and smack into a tree, testing his helmet. What good do those things do if you never use them for what they are designed for?

Even if I get him after dark, it will be alright because he will probably have one of those flashing reflectors that fool me into thinking a train is coming.

And let's not forget the fairweather joggers. The ones who wear the brand new Nikes that cost them about a million dollars. I think it's fun to sit on the porch at the Tomato with a mug and watch the Tomato with a mug and watch them buckle with pain upon the onset of a heat cramp.

New Nikes don't do so well when you are grasping your gut, rolling around like a wounded bug and I really like it when joggers wear headsets. If you are lucky enough, you might catch one jogging by one of those medieval-spiked tree guards lining High Street. It is really funny when a headset wire catches on to one of those spikes and yanks the jogger back like a lassoed steer. I also welcome back all the birds who like to drop on everyones' heads. Those birds are really great. It would be a lot of fun smearing telephone wires with crazy glue and sunflower seeds and seeing them try to fly away.

I think we should all enjoy the

I'm sure we will have one more millions of dollars worth of flowers at Ameriflora will be killed, but I

PC has gone too far in pursuit of ideals

Political correctness

.. Sports

Two words have never formed a greater paradox than these two together.

If "political" and "correctness" were ever meant to go together, then something like "A kinder, gentler fascism" should also be acceptable

I don't have much against what the "PC" movement stands for. The issues these people stand for (or against, depending) range from warmongering and censorship to civil and animal rights. When the issues are mentioned, it is hard to disagree with a PC person. Who in their right mind would think, all things aside, that war is better than peace, or that everyone shouldn't have equal rights based on one's race, religion, sexual orientation, physical disability, etc.,

There is one area these "politically correct" people are trying to change. They are trying to change the way we use the English language, substituting compound words and phrases to replace what we now say in one or two syllables. These PCers want us to use softer words to describe certain types of people, conditions and issues to cut down on stereotypes. Their theory is that stereotypes can be erased if they are taken out of the language.

This is just one school of thought.

These PCers have conveniently failed to realize that there is also a school that believes the exact opposite theory — that personal attitudes, not language, produce stereotypes.

What it comes done to is a plain and simple argument over semantics.

A good example of a phrase that PCers would like everyone to use is "differently sized," which would replace overweight or undersized. Since when has it become a crime to describe a short person as short, or a large person as large? These words, by themselves, have no negative connotations.

If you were to describe Roseanne

Arnold as a "big lady," would anyone disagree?

However, if you were to refer to her as "a fat pig," there would obviously be a negative obviously be connotation.

The problem with PC people is that they have not realized which words can be offensive. "Big," by itself, is not negative in this case; "fat pig" is the offensive description.

Who are these people who have come up with this new list of terms that we are all suggested to use? Did anyone ever ask for their input? Why, then, have they decided to speak for the rest of us, deciding what we ought to say?

would prefer to be called "differently sized?" The answers, to the best of my knowledge, are both no.

These people who claim to be PC are simply close-minded hypocrites who are trying to force their own personal agendas into the everyday life of our society.

In the book Are You PC?, a somewhat tongue-in-cheek 101-question test that determines your level of political correctness, question 100 asks "Do you consider yourself PC?" According to the point total that goes with each answer, the best, most politically correct response is "No. I reject labels and suspect this term is being used as a tool of oppression." By their own definition, if a label is a tool of oppression, then why are they taking old labels and trying to replace them with new ones?

Open up to views

The Students for Life wish to have their activities posted on a university calendar. Why should this cause such anguish in the Office of Women Student Services? Universities should be places of openness and discernment. We are not talking about publicizing the ravings of some anti-Semite from out of state. We are talking about a state. We are taking about a legitimate, alternative point-of-view. In an open university, both views deserve to be heard. Allow openness and let others discern for themselves. How can one argue otherwise?

Misrepresentation

Along with many others on campus, I appreciate very much trhe efforts of those who organized the events of "Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Awareness Week." I strongly question, however, the choice of activity for the kick-off Wednesday evening. (The film "Flaming Creatures" by Jack Smith; I won't even touch the other one.) This is not a prude's complaint about nudity; its a woman's outrage at a prolonged showing of GANG RAPE and validating it by calling it art. The Wexner Center's announcement said that this film has caused riots, but that is of course headly as but that is, of course, hardly a reason for a film connoissuer to stay home, especially when this was described as "avant-garde" work that is "studiedly artistic." Granted Smith's film did have Granted Smith's film did have artistic moments, but art does not make it acceptable to laugh at GANG RAPE. (There was actually applause after the film!) The most offensive scene cannot be anything but GANG RAPE. The terrifying screams of two women — faces full of fear, trying to fight off at least eight men who were holding them down — cannot express anything but excruciating pain. The attack was fatal, in spite of a but excruciating pain. The attack was fatal, in spite of a transvestite's attempt to revive the victim with his vampire kisses. Enough of the gory details.

My intention here is neither to relate what happened in the film nor to critique it. Instead, I want to draw attention to the issue of rape, and how easily it can be brushed off draw attention to the issue of rape, and how easily it can be brushed off — even in an enlightened community. Perhaps there is a problem when anything goes, including GANG RAPE, as long as it carries the tag "art." Before someone shouts "First Amendment," let me just ask if YOU would feel okay about being raped — as long as it were artfully done? The information sheet handed out at Wexner mentioned an orgy, but it said nothing of RAPE — long, painful, fatal RAPE. Instead it quotes a critic who says, "It seems unfair that so light and playful a movie would bear so heavy a burdern of notorietry." I, as a woman, find nothing light and playful about RAPE of any kind.

The events of this (awareness week) are intended to "promote awareness in the straight community," according to Sussman in the Lantern. She argues rightly that participation of the heterosexual community in these events "will help give them a more accurate picture of the gay, lesbian and bisexual community, and help diminish prejudice brought on by ignorance." Yes, that is a worthy and how easily it can be brushed off genitalia, animal intercourse orgies, violence and RAPE do not instead re-enforce the false stereotype of gay men and women as nothing but sexual perverts.

Unfair suppression

Why does the university administration allow Cynthia Harris to set herself up as a judge and jury over which campus organizations/events are publicized through her office, funded by the general fund, and which ones are not? Can Harris explain why a group (Students for Life) that promotes respect and protection for all women (and men), including those little women (and men) waiting to be born, is considered unworthy of recognition by "her" office? Can she explain why she suppresses information about pregnancy distress centers, which offer love, care and support for women in need? Could it be that Harris is herself a part of the multi-million dollar abortion industry that profits from exploiting women by robbing them of their progeny, their dignity and, frequently, their physical and emotional health? Or is she merely a misguided feminist who does not understand that real women don't kill their children? A choice to kill another is not a legitimate choice, intelligent people must admit.

This flagrant abuse of Ohioans parents' and students' dollars by a calculated plot to impose a hideously distorted image of feminism, while silencing a true expression of it, must end! Harris and her ilk who practice gross discrimination in their official duties must be purged from this institution! All parents and students should demand it!

As a parent of two current OSU students, and an Ohio Taxpayer, I am outraged at this disgusting abuse of my money!

Get to the point

I am really tired of reading whiny, poorly-constructed, anti-choice letters containing references to "killing babies.
I really wish that people who believe that a human fetus is a human person would have the decency to explain their reasons for this belief instead of using childish, ad misericordum shock tactics like ad misericordum shock tactics like the repetitive bleating of "baby... baby... baby." If you really want to convince people that a tiny shred of flesh about the size of a peanut is actually a human person, endowed from conception with whatever constitutes a person in your opinion, have the sense to recognize that a statement (for example "it's that a statement (for example, "it's a child") is not an argument. In other words, merely calling a fetus a baby, without providing any evidence to the effect that it actually is one, is insufficient, even if you say "baby" a million times. If you honestly believe that your position is correct, surely you can come up with some kind of logic to support your position. Expressing yourself in terms designed to frighten or disgust your readers into agreeing with you doesn't cut it. There are classes at this university that explain the difference between a statement and an argument, as well as the difference between a competently constructed argument and an argument in which an appeal to pity is substituted for evidence towards the proof of an assertion.

The Pregnancy Distress Center is not listed in the calendar because it is a deceptive anti-choice facility where women are frightened into carrying pregnancies to term. Information about alternatives to abortion should be available to all women. But the PDC, by billing their facility as one where "abortion services" are being offered, tricks women into suffering with unwanted anti-choice information. If they indeed "offer a service no other organization provides" (Ludicrous, Feb. 10) it's only because other organizations wouldn't stoop that low.

Christina Pappas French and Italian

Pure hogwash

Michael Stasko and Csaba Szabo said in your March 2 "Letters" that publicly funded doctors should not be prevented from "advising pregnant women of all their choices, including abortion. Hogwash. Since time immemorial physicians have taken the sacred Oath of Hippocrates, which pledges they will not help a woman get an abortion. And now the American Medical Association stands strangely silent as doctors make billions killing millions of innocent unborn children.

Losing patience

I am sick and tired of being called dangerous and immoral by so-called "straight people." What the hell is this so-called "morality" anyway? If it means surpressing, harrassing and physicallly assaulting those of us who are different, well that doesn't sound very moral to me. I was born queer. am a product of whatever higher being's creation. If you don't like me, you don't like what this being has created. Think about it. I am sick of straight people who don't take the time to understand me. I am sick of you all who assume we have some special privilege in society. We don't! We need all the help and support we can give ourselves because all of society is against us. We can be fired from our jobs, denied health care, are not allowed to get married — all the while being told we are wrong for being who we are. What do you have to complain about Mr. Straight Boy? All of society is your support group. You have it good, so why don't you leave me alone? I am queer! I am proud! I am losing my patience with straight people!

Word on comics

It seems as though the level of professionalism in the comic strips is deteriorating to an all-time low. As a Big Ten school with a mission of excellence in academic education, it should also be the mission of the Lantern and its writers to contribute worthwhile information to the students and faculty.

Anyone can think lewd and vulgar thoughts and scribble them down on a paper accompanied by a crude drawing. On the other hand, it takes intellect, wit and humor to write and draw slices of life we can, in a humorous way, relate to. Ohio State has the largest collection of comic strips in the nation., Being a comic strip writer for the Lantern is a privilege few are offered.

We would like to see a contest encouraging everyone who writes comic strip stories to enter, then print them and let the staff of the Lantern, the students and faculty vote on the four or five most outstanding comic strip writers. Those are the people we want writing in the Lantern. If we as Ohio State students and faculty expect the best in terms of academic excellence why shouldn't we expect the same of our comic strips? Readers?

Bucks to meet Hawks in championships

By Todd Harrell

The best kept secret on the Ohio State campus, the OSU wrestling team, will no longer go unnoticed. That is, if they deny the Iowa Hawkeyes their 19th consecutive conference title when the two squads shoot for the crown this weekend at the 1992 Big Ten wrestling championships in Madison, Wis.

OSU wrestling has made tremendous strides in joining the most powerful teams in the nation most powerful teams in the nation under the tutelage of sixth year Head Coach Russ Hellickson. However, he admits the Buckeyes' (20-4 overall, 7-0 in the Big Ten) chances of denying the Hawkeyes, the defending National Champion (16-0, 6-0), this year's Big Ten title are at best, remote.

"I think if our expectation is to go to the Big Ten (Championships) to beat Iowa, we would be losing our focus," Hellickson said. "They have the best wrestling team that any college team has ever had, any college team has ever had, there would virtually have to be four or five of our guys wrestling way beyond what they are capable (of wrestling)."

Hellickson said the Buckeyes, who finished third in the Big Ten and fourth in the NCAA a year ago, could win four weight classes, with 177-pounder Kevin Randleman leading the way.

But Iowa, led by the the Brands brothers, Terry at 126 and Tom at 134, should sween the other six 134, should sweep the other six weight classes, Hellickson said. "Upsets have happened, although this would be a gargantuan upset. Iowa should set a scoring record in the Big Ten."

Hellickson said if the Buckeye grapplers worry about themselves and not the Hawkeyes, they should finish no less than second in the tournament. "National rankings have us fifth, Wisconsin sixth and Michigan seventh, ...if we are too worried about Iowa, those teams could then place ahead of us," Hellickson said. "We should finish second."

Along with Randleman, other top contenders for a Big Ten title with the Buckeyes are senior Ken Ramsey (150) and juniors Rex Holman (190) and Ray Mendoza (heavymeight)

Holman (190) and Ray Mendoza (heavyweight).

All have dealt with having to cut weight and wrestle at other classes throughout this year, and most will be cutting weight up until the championships begin, Hellickson eaid said.

"Weight cutting is not going to be a factor for our team. We're ready for that and we are at the ready for that and we are at the weight classes that are best for our team." Hellickson said.

The weight cutting has not affected Randleman, who was an All-American and Big Ten champion at 167 last year and, who has now moved up to 177 and compiled a 31-0-3 record.

"I am ready and the team's

"I am ready, and the team's ready. The only thing that is going to stop some of the guys on our team is ourselves," Randleman

Randleman, considered by many as a sure-lock to capture his second Big Ten title, is looking for his first National title after finishing as a runnerup (at 167) last year.
Randleman says he's confident and ready for this weekend.
"I am at my zenith. I don't think

Randleman will probably face Iowa's Bert Chelesvig, who is 103-33 in his career, but who has lost to Randleman twice before.

Meanwhile, at the 150-pound weight class, Ramsey has quietly become the number-one seeded wrestler in the country. Ramsey has amassed an impressive 39-2-1 record and has a large task in front of him. He will likely meet defending NCAA and Big Ten Champion, Matt Demaray of Wisconsin.

Wisconsin.

The matchup should be interesting with Demaray wrestling on his own campus in the Wisconsin Fieldhouse and facing Ramsey, who he defeated 8-3 to win the Big Ten title last year.

The other expected Buckeye wins should be at the two top weight classes, Holman at 190 and Mendoza at heavyweight. Holman is ranked number three in the nation and has a 31-2 mark, while

Other Buckeyes who may finish strong in their divisions are, Dan Lopez (134), Aaron Schetter (142), Mike Schyck (158) and Jim Scavuzzo (167).

Hellicken is honing as many as guys qualify and that's a success, but you can't predict what's going to happen because the conference is so tough...you just can't presume that you're going to go in there and everything will just go according to plan," Hellickson said. "It's a game of curricum".

Buckeyes won't let Cats catch them napping

The team from Evanston, Ill., is invading Columbus this weekend.
And the boys in Columbus are ready.

The Northwestern Wildcats travel to St. John Arena Saturday for a 3 p.m. tip-off catching the Ohio State Buckeyes while they are playin what some consider to be their best basketball.

"I think we're getting closer and closer to what we think is 40 minutes of basketball," OSU swing-man Jim Jackson said. "We're in a groove right now, especially on the defensive end. You can feel it on the floor."

For the Wildcats this season, their troubles have been many and their accomplishments few.

The Wildcat's 1-12 record in Big Ten play has once again put them in 10th place in the league. They have gathered last place honors in seven of the last eight seasons. Northwestern's 1992 Big Ten

The Wildcats road record is even worse, having lost 23 of their last 26 contests.

Heading into Saturday's game, the Wildcats are coming off six straight losses, including a drubbing at the hands of Illinois last Wednesday, 92-65.

The Buckeyes, on the other hand, head into Saturday's game coming off three straight wins, two on the road, and a 77-66 victory over the Michigan Wolverines at home Tuesday. In the first meeting at Welsh-Ryan Arena on Jan. 11, the Wildcats gave the Buckeyes a small scare as they scored the first nine points of the game and were in charge the entire first half. The Wildcats went to the locker room at the break with a 32-25 lead.

"You'll see us with a smaller line-up to maintain a little bít more quickness on the court, Ayers said.

The perimeter shooting of Northwestern guards Pat Baldwin and Todd Leslie is a major concern for the Buckeyes. Baldwin is averaging 11.1 points per game while Leslie averages 10.1 points

"They can shoot well," Ayers said. "We have to keep them off the free-throw line."

The Cats are shooting 76 percent from the line and 45 percent from the field.

I am writing to you about an issue that I haven't seen addressed in your column yet. My problem doesn't involve some guy I met in a bar, stress over finals, or a roommate conflict. Instead, the problem that has been keeping me up night.

mate conflict. Instead, the problem that has been keeping me up nights involves one of my professors.

He's young, brilliant, and very attractive. Although he's married, and I'm seeing someone else, every time I look at him, I forget about all the complications. I just can't stop thinking about him.

My class performance is also starting to be detrimentally affected by my infatuation because when he

by my infatuation because when he speaks, I don't hear a word he says. Instead, I dream about us being together some place exotic and far removed from OSU.

The worst part of the problem is that I think he's kind of attracted to me, too. In class he avoids making eve contact with me, but when our eyes contact with me, but when our eyes happen to meet he gets flustered. When I go to his office hours we get involved in deep discussions, and then he seems to catch himself and tells me that he has another appointment.

I really don't know what to do. My roommate is leaving for the week-end and I'm a heartbeat away from leaving my key in his mailbox. Please tell me what to do—

Signed me, Pining for my Prof

Dear Pining,

Please leave your key on your key chain until you hear me out! What you are contemplating can have serious consequences.

I'm discouraging you to stay away from him not so much because he's your professor, but more because of the fact that he's married. You admit that it's an infatuation, and you must not take it any further.If you care about your professor, you must respect his attempts to avoid any escalation. This means ceasing the office visits. You're not even sure if he reciprocates your feelings, so don't take the chance of creating an embarrassing situation. Besides, if he would leave his wife for you, who's to say it wouldn't happen again?

Dear Jill...

Look at it this way. There is one week of classes left. Force yourself to stick it out, and concentrate on your studies only. I have a feeling that your infatuation will fade as you're not able to see him every day. So please bestepen! please, be strong!

Dear Jill.

Even though I'm in college now, my parents still control my life. I live at home so they always know what I'm doing and tell me if I'm permitted to or not. I'm not allowed to go to bars and I have to be in by 12:30 on weekends. They think I should be home, studying to be a doctor (which they want more than I do). I really don't want to sneak around any longer, because they've threatened to quit paying my tuition if they catch me. I can't move out because I can't afford both rent and tuition. What should I do? Prisoner in my own

Dear Prisoner,

The time has come for you to stick up for yourself. Tell your parents that you understand that they're only looking out for your best interests, but that you want them to start trusting you.

Propose this idea to them: You will move out for a while on a trial basis. The agreement will be that if your grades drop at all, they will no longer have to pay your tuition or you will return home. If they aggree to this, prove that you can do it—and study even harder. If they refuse to compromise at all, start looking for a compromise at all, start looking for a good night time job so you can save enough money to move out on your

Dear Jill,

This may seem like a very trivial roblem but it's very embarrassing to me. I am going to Florida for Spring Break and I cannot wear a bikini. It's not that I'm overweight, but rather it's my belly button. It's an outie.

Every other girl will have a two piece on, and I will have to wear a one piece, which obstructs getting a proportionate tan. Should I take the chance of being ridiculed and wear a

Odd one at the Beach

Dear Odd one,

Having an outtee belly button is nothing to be ashamed of. If you think about it, the difference between an "outie" and an "innie" is due only to how one's umbilical cord shrank after being detached at birth. Also because outies are more rare than innies, you can brag of your uniqueness.

However if you still find that you're unable to accept your belly button, there are some new one piece styles out that are more than flattering and expose enough skin for a good tan.

College has new neurology chair

A neurologist known for extensive research in muscular dystrophy has been named chairman of the Depart-ment of Neurology in OSU's College of Medicine.

Dr. Jerry R. Mendell was approved as chairman of the department by the University Board of Trustees at its February meeting.
Mendell succeeds Dr. George Paulson, professor of neurology, who recently retired but remains active as a full-time member of the department, said Dr. Manuel Tzagournis, vice president for health services at Ohio State and dean of the College of Medicine.

"Dr. Mendell is one of the leading researchers in the country in this area,"Tzagournis said.

A researcher at Ohio State for the past 20 years, Mendell knows the situations of the department and can carry on the role of chairman more quickly than an outsider could, Tzagournis

Over 50 percent of the people appointed to chairman of a department come from within the same department, said David H. Boyne, associate provost of Academic Affairs.

"As an inside person, you know the strengths and weaknesses of the faculty in the department, and you know how to get around in the system," Mendell said.

Mendell graduated from the University of Texas Southwestern Medical School in Dallas. He served an internship at the Columbia-Presbyte-rian Hospital in New York and a residency at the Neurological Institute of the Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Before coming to Ohio State in 1972, Mendell said he spent four years at the Medical Neurology Branch of the National Institutes of Health, where he decided to make a career out of muscle research.

He said he liked the research opportunities of the national institute, but he thought he would have better opportunities in a university setting.

After an extensive search, he found that Ohio State didn't have any pro-grams in his area of research, so he set up a neuromuscular research pro-gram, which has grown to have one of the largest neuromuscular clinic pop-ulations in the country.

Mendell said his research focuses primarily on neurological disorders like Duchenne muscular dystrophy, which is a fatal disease of newborn males. It is marked by relentless, progressive destruction of the muscle.

He said children with this hereditary disease develop severe weaknesses that force them to wear braces by the time they are eight years old, be confined to a wheelchair by the time they are 12 years old and begin to have respiratory problems after the age of 12. ew survive beyond their early 20s.

He said there is a lot known about Duchenne muscular dystrophy that was not known five years ago.

"The gene for the disease has been cloned; we understand the genetic basis for the disease. We understand what is missing from the muscle, and a

He said he began treating Duchenne muscular dystrophy three months ago with a procedure called myoblast transfer, which involves extracting normal immature muscle cells from a father or brother of the patient authorize the process. patient, culturing them in a laboratory and injecting them into the muscle of and injecting them into the muscle of the patient.

He said this procedure is one of only a few performed in North America, and researchers hope it will slow the progression of the disease.

Mendell plans to stimulate more research in the entire department and start recruiting additional faculty for the department, Tzagournis said.

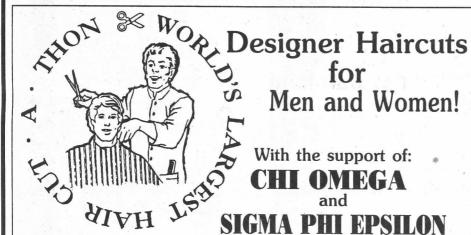

He said his ultimate goal is to see growth in every division of the department.

Even though Mendell has only been chairman for a couple of weeks, he has already began implementing some changes in the department, he said. Mendell said he has set up an execu-tive council to reorganize the operation of the department.

"People who see change right away tend to get more excited and get more involved," Mendell said.
