FDA response quicker in AIDS drug approval, says faculty member

OSU professor continues immune system research

By Debbie Bernard

The Food and Drug Administration is speeding up the process by which it approves AIDS drugs, said an OSU researcher.

Dr. Michael Para, an associate professor of internal medicine who is doing research on several drugs to treat AIDS, gave the drug Ganciclovir as an example. The drug was approved June 26 by the FDA and will be available by prescription August 1. It is used to fight off a virus called CMV, which is present in nearly 80 percent of the population.

The virus does not cause a problem unless the immune system is not functioning properly, Para

Para said the immune system of AIDS patients has virtually stopped working, making them susceptible to the CMV virus, which results in a progressive eye infection that destroys the retina.

The drug has been used experimentally on transplant patients who also have a lower immunity, but it has not been approved for that use

PARA, WHO does research on several other drugs, said the Department of Internal Medicine receives about $1 million a year for AIDS research from the National Institute of Health. He said he has seen an improvement in the way the FDA handles AIDS

"The FDA is definitely trying to respond more quickly," Para said. "More people are enrolled in studies, but it's still not good enough for the people

Ruth Weisheit, consumer affairs officer for the Ohio FDA said, "Considering AIDS has only been recently recognized, we've done marvelous from that point of view by setting up special units to identify and respond specifically to AIDS." Weisheit said. Weisheit said possible ramifications of rushing the process might impair the quality of life by causing severe side effects.

Michael Dittmer, office manager of Stonewall

Union, an activist group for gay rights, agrees there has been an improvement, but is surprised that it took so long.

"OF COURSE we have a personal interest in this issue, it's our friends who are dying," Dittmer said. "I'm surprised that some shortcuts for approval weren't used sooner.'

The process the FDA uses to approve drugs consists of several steps. First, the drug must be used in animal studies to establish a possible effectiveness, said Weisheit. The specific uses of the drug, how the testing will be done, who the sponsors are and the physician doing the research must then be submitted to the FDA, she said.

The second step includes testing a small number of healthy patients to measure human toxicity, or, if the drug is poisonous, Weisheit said.

The last step involves testing a larger population who have the condition the drug is designed to help, Weisheit said.

We make judgements case by case," Weisheit said. "If there's any hope that a drug will save an AIDS patient we will allow it to be used."

PARA IS currently working with two other drugs he hopes will replace AZT, a drug that is helpful in slowing down the AIDS virus, but cannot kill it.

The alternative drugs work in the same way as AZT, but do not produce the side effects of anemia or a low white blood cell count, Para said.

The drugs, ddC and ddI are in the experimental stage now. Para said the controversy surrounding ddC, ddI and AZT is whether they should be given to people who are infected with the AIDS virus but show no symptoms, or if the drugs will cause a resistance in patients later.

Para said a discovery made in April showed the AIDS virus mutates, making it more difficult to

"The virus has the ability to mutate and it becomes resistant to drugs that may have helped at first," Para said

Lyme disease not a major threat for Ohioans

By Monica Ch'ng

Lyme disease does not pose a serious threat to Ohio residents, said an associate professor of entomology at Ohio State.

"There is no cause for alarm because Ohio is not one of the serious tick-infected areas," said Glen Needham. "About 40 to 50 cases were reported in Ohio last year. Most of these people con-tacted the disease while vacation-ing in areas where the disease is predominant."

The disease was first identified in Lyme, Connecticut, in 1975, by rheumatologist Dr. Allen Steere.

The disease is focused regionally in eastern coastal states such as Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Virginia. Needham also said some western and southern states in-cluding Minnesota and Wisconsin

"I have seen only one case during the last 12 months," said Dr. Dennis Doody, a physician from the Student Health Center.

"The patient got the disease while out of state. Most of the time it is hard to detect this Lyme disease. Many physicians." disease. Many physicians must rely on their suspicion and study the history of the patient's physical examination."

Doody said a blood test can be conducted to detect the antibodies produced by the body's immune system. He added that the blood test is not conclusive evidence because most of the time the body does not produce enough antibo-dies for positive detection.

In the early stages, Lyme disease can be a mild illness with symptoms like the flu. It can include a stiff neck, chills, fever, sore throat, headaches, fatigue and joint pain.

and white in the middle. If left untreated, Lyme disease can cause problems with the nervous system, heart, and produce a disabling type of arthritis in the joints. These problems can take months or years to develop. The disease is not fatal but on rare occasions it can cause miscarriages in pregnant women.

Adults with the disease can be treated with antibiotics such as tetracycline or doxycycline. Penicillin is used for children and pregnant women.
Ellen D. Peterson, an epidemiology investigator for the Ohio Department of Health, said the tick that causes the disease, Ixodes dammini, in unfed condition is about the size of a flat-pinhead and dark brown in calon. common species in Ohio, and is common species in Onio, and is responsible for the transmission of Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever, Peterson said. It lives in overgrown vacant lots, waste farm fields, weedy roadsides and edges of paths and hiking trails.

Ticks can be controlled by mowing grass, eliminating weeds and removing brush, Peterson said. This action raises the ground temperature and lowers the humidity so the tick will dry up and

A spokesman for U.S. Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, said Glenn would prefer to see legislation in the form of a statute instead of a constitutional amendment.

"If there is no legislative language that the people can understand or the court will accept, then he would support the consti-tutional amendment," the spokesman said.

Heidi Findley, press secretary for Gov. Richard F. Celeste, said the governor views the proposed amendment as a radical move by the Bush administration.

Celeste is opposed to a constitu-tional amendment because he feels it would compromise the right of freedom of speech, Findley said.

David Yost, press secretary for Columbus Mayor Dana G. Rinehart, said, "flag-burning is not a speech issue but a conduct issue. The flag is a unique symbol. If it takes a constitutional amendment to protect the flag, then that's what we need to do."

The executive assistant of the Ohio American Civil Liberties Union, Myra Nelson, said the decision to keep free speech available to those who dissent is one of our basic rights.

"IN THIS country we still have the freedom of speech to express our opinion even though it's unpopular by the majority," said Nelson.

Injury from fireworks, sparklers plagues 4th of July celebrations

By Lisa Lombard

During the Fourth of July celebrations last year, fireworks caused many fires and more than 10,200 injuries which required hospitalization throughout the United States, according to a spokesman for the Ohio Department of Commerce.
Fred Alverson said forty-five percent of the injuries were eye injuries to children between the ages of 5 and 14.

In 1988, 207 fires in Ohio were related to fireworks, said Lt. Bob Dunning of the Columbus Fire Prevention Bureau.

Of those, 43 were caused by illegal fireworks, 46 were caused by legal novelty fireworks and 118 were caused by unidentified fire-

Alverson said the only legal forms of fireworks in Ohio are novelty items, such as sparklers, snappers, snakes, smoke bombs and stink bombs.

PRETORIA, South Africa (AP) — In a new election platform, the ruling National Party is advocating giving blacks a direct vote in national affairs within five years and possibly a voice in writing a new constitution.

The plan was met with skepticism by both anti-apartheid activists and conservatives as the National Party prepared today to "Whatever its vote-winning merits for the NP, as a plan to resolve the South African crisis it is much too tentative," said an editorial in the anti-apartheid Cape Times of Cape Town.

Bush dodges issues

Soon after the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that burning the American flag was a form of free speech, politicans across the country started crying foul. President Bush has spearheaded a drive to add an amendment to the Constitution that would make it illegal to desecrate the flag.

The politicans have done a great job of making an issue out of the ruling. Instead of tackling tough issues, they have sought out an easy one that will only end up limiting a certain form of freedom.

As President Bush hides behind the flag, oil is rapidly creeping along the coast of Alaska. Homeless Americans face the trauma of finding food and work. And as crack infiltrates into the nation's youth, crime is making life in the inner city unbearable. Instead of wasting American taxpayer's money producing legislation that take away freedoms, laws should support freedom, both here and

The environment, the homeless, civil rights, abortion and education are only a few of the many issues needing attention, yet are being ignored as politicians jump on the bandwagon to wave flags to look good for the next election.

If you do limit people from expressing their views by outlawing the burning of the flag, who is to say when and where it stops?

Critics of the Supreme Court ruling say in a sense, burning the flag destroys our freedom. But it doesn't. The flag is only a symbol of our

If the flag does represent real freedoms, as Bush would lead the American people to believe, then what is next? The outlawing of political parties like communism that do not support our style of government?

The real freedom refers back to the original thought behind the words of the constitution the right to criticize.

LOGO:

Fund scholarships

Ohio State is about to receive a bundle of money generated by royalties from a logo celebrating the 100th year of OSU football.

Normally, royalty money is used for scholarships. Last year, $1.5 million from OSU logo royalties funded 135 scholarships.

But since it is strictly an athletic endeavor, the university has decided to channel the football logo royalties to the athletic department so the department can disburse the money as they see fit.

The athletic department has the choice of using the money for athletic scholarships or their department budget, which is $23 million.

Neither choice is the right one. Royalties from the football logo should should go to the University Annual Fund, where it can be used for general scholarships. Why should the athletic department, which already receives more than it's share of private contributions receive even more money that may or may not be used by students?

OSU President Edward H. Jennings said if the money is used for something other than scholarships, it would create a change in policy. Normally any change in policy is a long drawn out affair, yet when football and athletics are brought into the scene, the event shapes the policy instead of the policy shaping the event.

While some departments have to get by with minimal funding, the athletic department has the money to build and upgrade some of the largest structures on campus, many of which cannot be used by average students.

Just because the logo concerns the football team does not mean the revenues belong to athletics. The university needs to play by the rules it already has and not make new ones because it is convenient.

Flag amendment limits speech

While students in China are being slaughtered and executed for trying to exercise free expression, President George Bush is proposing a fundamen-tal change that would limit Americans' rights to free expression – an amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

If it were to be enacted, the amendment would be the 27th since the Bill of Rights was ratified in 1791. And it would be the first one specifically designed to rescind a freedom that was guaranteed by the Bill of Rights and upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Constitutional amendment to allow laws against burning the American flag would be, at best, a reactionary change conceived in emotion against an unpopular, but well-founded, decision by the Supreme Court.

At worst, the amendment itself would be a figurative desecration of the flag: wrapping it around a political ploy designed to make Democrats and free-expression purists look unpatriotic at the expense of some of the very freedoms the flag represents.

What makes America special is the right to express unpopular views.

CARRYING A Nazi banner in this ountry is a distasteful expression that, nonetheless, ought to be protected by the First Amendment. Burning the American flag is equally reprehensible, yet ought to receive equal protection.

Gregory Lee Johnson is the man behind the flag controversy. He burned an American flag at the 1984 Repubican National Convention in Dallas while his equally naive and childish colleagues chanted about spitting on the red, white and blue.

We should all disagree with what Johnson did, but we should defend to the death his right to do it.

China, for example - Johnson might have been executed for what he did, It is a mark of America's greatness that Johnson was allowed to live, and to go free, and to have his actions protected by the nation's highest court.

THE UNITED States is big enough to take that from a man as small as

The United States is like a muscular, strapping young man; Gregory Johnson is like a gnat. The United States has no reason to fear a gnat. Yet the over-reaction to a gnat like Johnson — a proposed Constitutional amendment to prevent the insignificant buzzing — shows a great insecurity on the part of those who are trying to legislate loyalty to a symbol of freedom.

Forcing such allegiance, and trying to eliminate expressions that may be considered abhorent, is the sort of crackdown that one would more readily associate with an authoritarian country like China or the Soviet

The colors of the flag would fade if the Republic for which it stands is made less free. Placing specific limits on Americans' freedom of expression, no matter how distasteful or unpopular the expression, does, in fact, make the Republic considerably less free.

IT SEEMS that many Americans who are ignorant of the Constitution would sooner exalt the flag — which would be little more than patches of fabric stitched together if not for the freedoms, ideals and the document it stands for - than the Constitution.

The American flag has stood tall. Its colors are brilliant not because they're pretty, or because chest-thumping politicians like to figuratively wrap themselves in it or even simply because of the millions of Americans who have died beneath it.

The flag is brilliant because of what it stands for.

It stands for the United States of America. It stands for the Constitution and freedom — the same Constitution that President Bush would deface in the name of removing a fundamental freedom just because it is distasteful

IN TRYING to remove freedoms that were guaranteed by the Constitution perhaps the greatest document ever written by man - Bush is, in effect, undermining the very Constitution he swore in January to uphold.

This attempt to deify the flag, to place it above the unpopular freedoms it represents, is a politically divisive proposition.

The complex issue of reconciling an unpopular act with the freedom of expression is reduced to black-andwhite sloganeering: Are you in favor of burning the flag, or are you against

When faced with what is posed as a simple yes-or-no question, politicians will look guilty and unpatriotic if they so much as pause or qualify their

THE APPROPRIATE answer would be to oppose burning the flag, but to favor the rights of people who choose

But in these days of sound-bites short attention spans and simplistic solutions, its easier for senators and congressmen to face their flag-waving voters if they simply support the emotional amendment to ban flag desecration.

Fortunately, the Constitution, a living document that has grown with the country, still has safeguards against rash changes. That's why there have been only 26 amendments in the 201 years since the Constitu-tion became official.

Any amendment must pass by a two-thirds majority in both the House and the Senate, and then must be ratified by the legislatures of at least

THAT WILL give the nation time to think about the political grandstanding, about the bandwagon that senators and congressmen have been jumping on, and to consider the proposed amendment rationally, rather than react to it in sudden emotion.

There is time to think about the great ironies in the flag debate.

Johnson, the man who foolishly spoke and acted so strongly against the flag and what it stands for, owes his exoneration to the system that the flag represents.

And Bush, in his zeal to preserve the symbol and prevent desecration of the flag, would diminish — desecrate, if you will - the Constitution for which it stands.

ON THIS anniversary of Independence Day, let us not put the flag above the ideals it represents. Let us wave our American flags, but let's also read and understand and wave the Constitution.

Video rentals cause demise of student

Many students do poorly in school because of a lack of studying. Other students fail to reach their academic potential by going out to the bars too much. My demise has come from an addiction to movie rentals.

My friends and I constantly watch movie rentals. We visit the video store so much that we pick up our mail there. Classes, or as we refer to them, intermissions, give us a chance to rest our eyes and decide what to rent next.

We spend all our money at the store. We are overweight from just laying around and watching movies.

If you have been spending too much time at the movie rental store, like myself, you'll recognize these next

"I've seen it, fantastic!" "I've seen it, terrible!

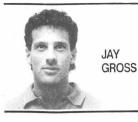

SOUND FAMILIAR? These are the most popular lines of a video liar. Sure, you know them. Video liars, people who never saw the movie and still have no desire to, will say anything to get out of seeing the

"Oh yeah, I remember that one. I saw it in the theater. I walked out. Twice!"

Don't be fooled by their actions outside the store. The most honorable people in your community, lawyers, doctors, even priests, can be turned into manipulative liars the moment stay in the car. Other people to leave out of the

that they set foot in the video store. Make a rule for yourself. Video liars selection process are the employees of the video store. Just because they work in the store doesn't mean they know the first thing about movies.

Asking them about your choice is not a good idea. On the chance they admit to seeing the movie, they will say something that carries absolutely no weight at all in your decision. "Well, I liked it."

Remember, your selection process is only as good as the people you include in the decision.

BEWARE, VIDEO-WATCHING and snacking go together like Ohio State and parking tickets.

Check your waistline. Have you gone from a pair of 30 inch Levis to a pair of pants by Goodyear? Do you have a few extra bumps that shouldn't be there? If so, chances are that you have been doing some late night movie rental munching.

Movie renters tend to watch their movies at night. Most people accompany their favorite flick with some sort of junk food. My favorite snack during videos is La Restorante nachos and salsa. I usually finish a bag per

The nighttime may be the right time for Michelob, but not for chips and dip. Unfortunately, movie rental munching goes right to those easy-tofind places on your body.

Obviously, Roger Ebert has been taking some work home.

The best part about watching a movie on a VCR is having all the comforts of home. An absolute must is enough space for everyone to lie dowm. Most people are very uncomfortable at the movie theater. They miss the luxury of being able to lounge during their movie.

Another advantage to watching a movie at home is the fact that you can yell and make gestures at the screen without worrying about any public repercussions.

MY FRIENDS and I like to play a game called rate the kill. When someone gets killed in a movie, we give it a thumbs up or down depending on the degree of violence. We take into consideration such aspects as creativity, originality and intensity of like us inside. If the crowd watching the movie rental is predominantly male, you'll want to make sure the room has proper ventilation. They settle in for a movie by dropping down on the couch, kicking off their Nikes and throwing at least one article of their clothing on the floor. (Guys like to think that they invented the art of lying down).

Society benefits from keeping guys

Several odors accumulate which tend to be offensive or even dangerous to any innocent person who has the unfortunate luck to enter the room after a couple of hours of watching. Watching at home definitely has its advantages!

The beauty of home video watching is the pause button. It allows a person the opportunity to get up and get some more food. A devoted movie fan would never leave the theater to get something to eat, unless of course he has a girlfriend who kicks.

GETTING THE movie is difficult, watching it takes certain necessary comforts. But taking it back is the most agonizing chore on earth.

When it finally has been decided who is going to take the tape back, the unlucky person has to debate whether to rush and return it or start figuring out late fees.

Return your tape promptly. The employees at the video store do not accept homework excuses. The store computer is never wrong. The amount displayed by the computer is what you have to pay. Even if you did save those helpless school children from drowning.

Once you have returned your movie leave the store immediately. Don't fall into the trap of getting another movie.

WAIT, THE clerk is bringing out some new selections. Hey, look, they have "Coming to America."

I told you that I was an addict.

'Weekend at Bernie's' deserves proper burial

"Weekend at Bernie's" is like a drunk telling a supposedly funny story at a party: he or she thinks it's very funny, but goes on so long no one else does.

The movie centers around one gag and drags it out for two nownst to them, Lomax and some hours. In this case, the gag could unsavory characters have been have been funny for one or two scenes, but no longer.

Larry (Andrew McCarthy) and Richard (Jonathan Solverman) are two rising young executives at Trans Allied Insurance in New York City. Although Larry is more laid back than the driven Richard, both want to impress their boss, Bernie Lomax (Terry Kiser).

While hard at work one weekend, Richard discovers a $2 million error in the accounts. The figures show that someone is trying to rip off Trans Allied Insurance.

Gleefully, Richard and Larry present their evidence to Lomax, certain he will give them a raise and/or a promotion. Lomax thanks them for the information and invites them to spend Labor Day weekend at his house on South Hampton Beach.

Richard and Larry are sure their climb up the ladder of Success is now guaranteed. Unbek-during which no one realizes acting as Lomax's corpse. His

When Richard and Larry arrive at the beach home, they discover Lomax dead of the drug overdose. In an unbelievable plot twist, they decide not to report the murder to the police because they spot a young woman on the beach whom Richard would like to get to know

From here, the movie begins to draw out the gag of Lomax's death and Richard and Larry hiding that fact from the trendy beach neighbors.

Lomax is dead. Other ludicrous scenes follow, such as Richard and Larry driving the corpse around in a Porsche golf cart and a PEOPLE WAVE at the corpse. the corpse almost gets washed out to sea and the plot even sinks into necrophilia at one point. This humor is not only boring, it's sick stuff.

Andrew McCarthy clearly is better than this material. He tries to breathe life into the two-dimensional Larry, but the staid directing style and lifeless script get the better of him.

Jonathan Silverman bumbles through his role as Richard, stuttering when he talks to women as though he were a nervous thirteen-year-old. He alternates between mooning over women, looking like a sick cow and exhibiting a set look of horror whenever he's near the corpse.

Catherine Mary Stewart plays Gwen, the college co-ed who Richard follows around on the beach. Sugary sweet and cloying, she presents a flat and annoying characterization.

Moyers' latest refreshing look at America

"A World of Ideas: Conversa-tions with thoughtful men and women about American life today and the ideas shaping our future," by Bill D. Moyers, 513 Pages,

To most, this may not seem like a book for summer leisure read-

To some, this book opens readers to a world of completely refreshing and challenging views voiced by intellectuals from different fields which include poets, physicists, historians, novelists, doctors and philosophers.

Bill D. Moyers' fifth book, "A World of Ideas Converservations with thoughtful men and women about American life today and the ideas shaping our future" is a compilation of 42 interviews Moyers conducted with men and women. These people were willing to share their ideas with the American public about the new facets of life in which we are

One witnesses some politicians engaging in unethical dealings, and sees them as merely actors on the political scene where politics is just another form of entertain-ment on our silver screens. Still the most severe critics of the American political scenario still demonstrate a sense of hope and optimism in our system.

Sequelitis has struck again; this time in a bad way. The Karate Kid has pulled his last punch in "The Karate Kid Part III" The Karate Kid Part III.

The hot-shot karate champ Daniel LaRusso (Ralph Macchio) and the ever-wise Mr. Miyagi (Noriyuki "Pat" Morita) have teamed up again for what will hopefully be the last episode of "The Karate Kid."

The reigning juvenile king of karate and his gifted instructor have returned from Okinawa to live peacefully among the bonsai trees. Their happiness is soon disrupted as Daniel is faced with yet another challenger hoping to strip him of his title. Faced with a difficult decision, Daniel opts not to fight the considerably more talented challenger Mike Barnes (Sean Kanan), but is eventually blackmailed into doing so.

Daniel's long-time friend and mentor, Mr. Miyagi, refuses to train the champ because "when it is used to defend a plastic and metal trophy, karate means no-thing." Daniel must then rely on himself to win the tournament champ? It is pretty hard not to give the ending to this movie away because it is practically a carbon copy of the first two. How many times does this kid have to prove that he is good at karate?

Morita, whose performance in Morita, whose performance in 'The Karate Kid' earned him an Academy Award, seems to be the only one in this movie who has had any serious acting experience. He gives a performance worthy of some kind of award even if his dialogue does seem to be overly saturated with ancient oriental philosophies.

"The Karate Kid Part III" is by far the mushiest of the three movies and seems to be somewhat lacking in excitement. I would even consider changing the name of the movie to "The Bonsai Kid" as Daniel seems to be more into the little trees than his sport. Most of the karate action comes from the bonehead villans who are constantly harassing Daniel and his friends.

There are no new twists in the sequel except that Daniel has a different girlfriend and looks about an inch taller. Despite a gallant effort, "The Karate Kid Part III" douses the blockbuster fire that the first movie sparked. This overly sentimental sequel that it is difficult to stay in-trigued with the movie. There are a few climactic scenes, but nothing like in the first movie that kept the audience on the edges of their seats biting their nails. At times it even seemed as though the audience was getting bored.

"The Karate Kid Part III" has unfortunately fallen into the fluff category; the place where movies with no real purpose go. It is unfortunate because the first Karate Kid movie was such an enormous success and the idea just kind of got beaten to the ground in the next two movies. You want to cheer because Daniel is so good at karate, but in a way you almost want to see him lose just to liven the story up a bit.

If nothing else, the message this movie tries to convey should be obvious. Trust your instincts and everything will work out. It al-most sounds like what Ben Ke-nobi told Luke Skywalker before going off the fight Darth Vader. There aren't any light sabers in "The Karate Kid Part III," but maybe there should be.

"The Karate Kid Part III" is a disappointment for even the most ardent Ralph Macchio fan. It's time to put this karate thing to bed before it completely beats itself to death. You may not get emotionally aroused by this film, but you will learn how to properly care for a bonsai tree.

Organizers and featured artists of the Songwriters Showcase, Donna Mogavero and Sally Fing-erett, agree Columbus lacks places to perform. They said they want to help musicians in the Columbus area because they need a place where they can break into the music business.

"I believe people need to help other people when the need is there and in this town there is a great need for this kind of help," Mogavero said. "The music business is the biggest Catch-22 LORI LOBINGER

Fingerett said, "There is nowhere for a sensitive acoustic artist to perform in Columbus."

Together they are trying to build an active musical community where musicians can help one another. Mogavero does not see the need to travel to Nashville or Los Angeles to make it in the music industry.

"There is so much good music right here in Columbus, that we want to make it so we can stay here and make our own Midwest sound," Mogavero said. This week's Songwriters Showcase featured Mogavero, Fingerett, John Mullins, Craig Goodwin and Jack Wilce.

Mogavero is a familiar face in the Columbus area. She is from Columbus and started playing the guitar her junior year in high school. She began doing live in college at Ohio University.

Mogavero has played in bands, duos and trios. She is presently a solo artist. "I continue to play solo because I like the idea that I'm independent and I can play with or without anybody," Mogavero said. The music she plays is very easy to listen to and creates a mood for the audience. She says she doesn't know how to define her style — she plays how she feels, be it country, jazz or just whatever she feels like that day. Mogavero's "The Streets Where I Live" is a documentary of the Short North area of Columbus. Mogavero feels there is room for everybody in the music business and there is no reason to be competitive. She said she wants to "make it" in the music industry. She has a large following, has just released her first extended play album and feels positive about her career.

Mogavero thrills her audiences throughout the Columbus area and will perform Thursday and Friday night on the patio of the Funny Bone Comedy Club, located in the Continent.

NCAA long jump champion Joe Greene and basketball All-American Nikita Lowry each earned one of Ohio State's highest athletic honors last week. They were named OSU's male and founds at highest of the Year. female Athletes of the Year.

This honor makes Greene, a junior from Dayton, and Lowry, a senior from Detroit, eligible for the Big Ten Athlete of the Year, to be announced later this month.

One of the nation's top seniorsto-be last year, Lowry's career hung in the balance after she injured her knee during the Jones Cup competition in Taipei, Taiwan, last summer.

Lowry tore the interior cartilage in her knee and returned home to have it examined. Her doctor thought she would have to sit out her senior year.

"I didn't want to be redshirted," Lowry said, "so I decided to get a second opinion." Athletes are red-shirted when, because of injury or inexperience, they are unable to play for a season. Redshirting allows athletes to retain their eligibility for a full four years.

Lowry saw Dr. Robert Murphy, an OSU team physician, for a second opinion. Murphy gave Lo-wry the green light for rehabilita-

"DR. MURPHY said the knee didn't look as bad as first indicated," said Lowry. He told her that with a lot of hard work and dedication she could "regain her old form," she said.

And hard work is exactly what Lowry did.

After arthroscopic knee surgery Lowry started her rehabilitation, which lasted nearly five months.

"It was a very trying experience," Lowry said. "You really are blessed when you don't have any injuries. I had to stay dedicated, but it was the hardest thing I ever went through."

What made things even harder for Lowry was the slow 2-3 start the Buckeyes had with Lowry on the bench.

"IT WAS very frustrating to just sit and watch," Lowry said. "I felt helpless. It got to the point where I didn't even want to go to the games. In the end, though, it made me work that much harder."

"Nikki's absence really hurt us," assistant coach Toni Rash said. "We missed her leadership and experience. Other players looked up to her."

Lowry left the bench in mid-December. With her return to play, the Lady Bucks posted a 22-3 mark, advancing to the NCAA tournament with a 24-6 record overall.

Lowry went on to lead the Big Ten in scoring for the second year in a row, averaging 18 points per game en route to unanimous first game en route to unanimous inst team all-league recognition. Lowry also claimed Kodak All-American honors, as well as the Silver Basketball Award (league Most Valuable Player) for women, chosen by the Chicago Tribune. Of all of the awards, Lowry said the OSU female Athlete of the Year award was one of her biggest accomplishments in athletics.

"I CHERISH this the most,"

Lowry said. "It is a great honor to represent all the women athletes here at Ohio State. There are so many great ones, and it means a great deal to me."

This August, Lowry will participate in her third straight interna-tional competition, representing the United States at the World University Games in Buffalo, N.Y.

Greene, OSU's male Athlete of the Year, is in Europe competing in track and field meets. Included in Greene's long list of accomplishments for 1988-89 are three individual Big Ten championships (indoor long jump, outdoor triple jump and outdoor long jump), the NCAA title in the long jump, three All-American designations (indoor triple and long jumps, outdoor triple jump), and four school records.

One of Greene's more impressive achievements was breaking the legendary Jesse Owens' 54-year-old school and Big Ten outdoor championship long jump record of 26 feet 8 1/4 inches. At the Big Ten championships in March, Greene bettered Owens' mark with a leap of 27 feet 7 1/4 inches.

More recently, Greene placed third and became the top collegian in the triple jump at the Mobil Outdoor Track and Field Championships June 16 in Houston. This earned him a spot on the World University Games team which will travel to West Germany this August. His leap of 55 feet 4 inches broke his own school record of 54 feet 3 1/4 inches.

RUSS ROGERS, the head track coach, and Roger Bowen, the assistant coach, were not available to comment on Greene's award. Both were out of the country for

As OSU Athletes of the Year, Lowry and Greene join ranks with such OSU legends as Chris Spiel-man (1988 football), Tracy Hall (1987 basketball), Art Schlichter 1981 football) and Bridgette Tate (1988 track).

Lukens wards off jail by posting bond

Must attend sex offenders program, submit to testing for sexual diseases

By Jose Marques Lantern staff writer

U.S. Rep. Donald E. "Buz"
Lukens will not report to jail
Wednesday morning to serve his 30-day sentence for having sex with a teen-ager last November.
Lukens, R-Middletown, paid the required 10 percent of the required 10 percent of the $100,000 surety bond shortly after he was sentenced Friday so he can stay out of jail while his lawyer appeals the conviction.

The 58-year-old congressman was sentenced by Judge Ronald Solove to the maximum of 180 days in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Solove, of Franklin County
Domestic Relations Court, reduced
Lukens' sentence to 30 days in jail, a $500 fine and placed him on probation for one year.

Lukens will have to participate in a program for sex offenders and submit to testing for sexually transmitted diseases.

Lukens' attorney, Thomas Tyack, filed a motion to have the guilty verdict dropped.

DURING SENTENCING, Solove

agreed to drop the part of the verdict that Lukens was guilty of contributing to the delinquency of a minor. He refused to drop the part of the verdict that found Lukens guilty of contributing to the unruliness of a minor.

Another motion by the defense for a new trial was denied Friday

Lukens was charged February with contributing to the deliquency of a minor. He has denied the accusations.

Solove reprimanded Lukens for not showing remorse for his acts. This court is particularly struck by the unwillingness of the defendant to recognize that he was not the victim in this offense." Solove said.

THE ASSOCIATED Press reported THE ASSOCIATED Press reported that William Jarrell, Lukens' spokesman, said it was a mistake said she was pleased with the for the judge to claim Lukens was not apologetic because "it's absurd for someone to expect to show remorse for something they're innocent of trial, a jury convicted Lukens of contributing to the deliquency and unruliness of a minor for having sex with a 16-year-old girl.

During the trial, the teen-ager testified that Lukens gave her $40 and birthday gifts after they had sex at his apartment.

Rita Mangini, assistant prosecutor, said Lukens engaged the teen-ager in prostitution by giving her money and gifts.

The sentencing was delayed for a month while a pre-sentence investigation was conducted.

TYACK SAID he will appeal the conviction. The appeal will be based mainly on the court's refusal to admit as evidence the teen-ager's juvenile and school records, he said. Tyack said those records were crucial to prove Lukens' innocence.

Mangini said Lukens had the nerve to say in the pre-sentence investigation that he was em-sentencing.

Mangini said she admired the judge for treating this case just like any other case and for having unocent of." the courage to sentence a con-On May 26, after a five-day gressman to 30 days in jail.

The teen-ager said she thought the sentencing was fair, according to an Associated Press report. She said she hopes Lukens gets counseling because he needs it. The teen-ager said she will get counseling.

ON JUNE 1, Ohio Republican Party Chairman Robert Bennett called for Lukens' resignation from Congress and from the Ohio Republican State Committee. Lukens said he will remain in office. Bennett also vowed that Lukens' name will not appear on the party ballot in 1990.

After the verdict was reached, House Minority Leader Robert H. Michel, R-Ill., asked the House ethics committee to investigate whether Lukens violated House

Lukens is not likely to be removed from office because he was not convicted of a felony, Rep. Chalmers P. Wylie, R-Ohio,

The complaint against Lukens was brought by the teen-ager's mother, Anna Coffman, who was in the courtroom during the sentencing. Coffman is currently in jail for violating probation from a 1983 drunken driving convic-
