THE STUDENT VOICE OF OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY

Activities board gets more cash for events

A 4,000 percent pay increase would be music to anyone's ears, especially if one loves big-name bands as much as Ohio State students say they do.

Thanks to the newly implemented student activity fee — which charges Ohio State students $15 every quarter — the Ohio Union Activities Board has a total of $1,242,600 for the 2003-2004 school year.

Its plans for that money reflect student evaluations that show most students want to not only see what their money can do, but hear it as well.

Based on those evaluations, which were administered by the Undergraduate Student Government, students voiced their favor for concerts, comedians, movie previews and keynote speakers, said Leanne Horst, president of OUAB.

In the past, OUAB operated on a $30,000 budget. It is now equipped with $1.2 million, as well as its first full-time adviser and an array of ideas about how to spend such a hefty sum of money. The line-up of upcoming free events include a number of famous names.

"We looked at our budget and evaluations that were administered to the student body to see what students wanted," Horst said. "We're planning a lot of exciting things."

Fall events included the Big Free Concert featuring 311 and Alien Ant Farm, The Ataris, a James Earl Jones lecture, Mo Rocca from "The Daily Show," three cast members from "Who's Line Is It Anyway?," more film series and more.

"It should be a great and exciting year for both OUAB and the OSU community," said Sam Osborne, vice president of OUAB.

The purpose and goal of the newly imposed student activity fee is to develop campus-wide programming, giving students opportunities to enjoy themselves without necessarily having to leave campus, said Kerry Hodak of the Council on Student Affairs.

"Students aren't involved on campus," Hodak said. "This will hopefully reach out to a broad range of students. Ninety-nine percent of every decision regarding the allocation of OUAB's money is student directed."

Deceased suspect was OSU student

Lantern staff report

The bank robbery suspect who was killed in a high-speed police chase from Pataskala has been identified as an Ohio State student.

Daryl Williams II, 20, of South Euclid, died Tuesday when the sport-utility vehicle he and the rest of the robbery suspects were in crashed into a pickup truck on East Broad Street on Columbus' Far East Side, federal officials said. Williams was killed when he was partially ejected from the vehicle. According to the affidavit, about $6,000 in cash, a bank brochure, a walkie-talkie and two handguns were recovered from the demolished SUV.

Williams began taking classes at OSU this fall as a sophomore after transferring from Cleveland State University. According to OSU officials, Williams was a Baker Hall resident majoring in sports and leisure science.

Jabrown Parks, 23, of Columbus; Lavelle Parks, 21, of Cleveland; and Chaz Frier, 22, of Maple Heights, were charged Thursday with the robbery of the First Federal Savings and Loan Association in complaints filed in the U.S. District Court in Columbus. Jabrown and Lavelle Parks are brothers.

The three suspects remain in Columbus hospitals with injuries suffered in the crash.

Pataskala Police Chief Chris Forshey told local media that FBI officials believe the men committed other robberies in the area. According to an FBI affidavit, Frier confessed to the First Federal robbery and implicated the other three men.

First Federal Savings, 182 W. Broad St., was robbed at 11:38 a.m. Tuesday by three masked men who forced employees to the floor and then shot the cash drawers, authorities said.

Pataskala Police Lt. Michael Boals spotted the suspects' vehicle after driving to the bank in response to the robbery alarm. He chased the vehicle west on Broad Street into Franklin County when a Reynoldsburg officer joined the pursuit.

The SUV, traveling in excess of 80 miles per hour, collided head-on with a pickup truck driven by Tammi Sahr, 31, of Blacklick, just east of Reynoldsburg-New Albany Road, police said. Sahr remained hospitalized Thursday at Grant Medical Center.

After last year's double-overtime thriller for the national championship against Miami, Ohio State will make a return trip to the Fiesta Bowl. This time, the Buckeyes will battle Big 12 Conference champion Kansas State on Jan. 2.

Back to the desert

By Nick Houser
Lantern sports writer

The bedlam which hit the end of the college football regular season trickled down yesterday to the announcement of the participants of the BCS bowl games. Ohio State was selected as an at-large bid but were sent back to the deserts of Arizona to face the chemical which created all of the chaos — Kansas State — on Jan. 2 in the Fiesta Bowl.

Since the loss to Michigan two weeks ago, it appeared the Buckeyes would be headed to the Orange Bowl for a rematch of last year's title game with Miami. Kansas State's demolition of Oklahoma in the Big 12 Conference title game, which meant the only option for OSU to play in a BCS contest was to head back to Tempe.

"Our only access to the BCS through the period was the Fiesta Bowl," OSU Director of Athletics Andy Geiger said. "If Oklahoma would have won (last night), the Fiesta Bowl would have had the first and third picks, which gave them the at-large picks."

With LSU making it to the title game, none of the designated conference alignments were broken within the BCS. With Oklahoma qualifying for the Sugar Bowl as well, the only game with a vacancy sign was out in Arizona.

Geiger said the rematch of Miami versus on Florida State was reviewed throughout the afternoon. He added the BCS does not have any rules barring the match-up, just guidelines.

All of the controversy aside, Ohio State coach Jim Tressel said his program is excited about playing the explosive Wildcats.

"Oh it's exciting; they're good, everyone in the world knows that," he said. "If you'd ask anyone who's impressed you lately (the answer would be) Kansas State."

Going back to the desert is not a big concern for the Buckeyes; they are happy being in one of the showcase games of the post-season rather than playing in the Capital One or Outback bowls.

"It's a great challenge, we always say to be the best, you've got to beat the best. Everyone said Oklahoma was the best and Kansas State went out and handled them," Ohio State quarterback Craig Krenzel said. "They didn't just beat them they took it to them and won 35-7."

This will be the first meeting with the Wildcats, and OSU is catching them when they are red hot. Kansas State has rebounded from injuries and a three game losing skid in September to make it this far.

Just like the last time out against Michigan, the Buckeyes will be forced to stop a troublesome running back in Darren Sproles, who rushed

Clarett seeks eligibility

By Matt Duval
Lantern editor
9.24.03

After weeks of speculation, suspended Ohio State tailback Maurice Clarett officially sued the National Football League on Sept. 23, asking a judge to throw out the league's eligibility rule.

Under the NFL's current policy, Clarett would not be eligible for the rookie draft until 2005. He ran for an OSU freshman record of 1,237 yards last season despite suffering a shoulder injury for the last half of the season. Players cannot enter the draft until they have been out of high school for three years.

"The NFL is the only major professional sport, unlike baseball, basketball or hockey, which prohibits the drafting of players who have not completed three college seasons or who are not three years removed from high school graduation," the lawsuit states. Clarett's attorney, Alan C. Milstein, filed the suit in Manhattan federal court.

The suit further claims the NFL's policy violates anti-trust laws. It later claims Clarett would have brought a contract worth millions of dollars. The suit asks U.S. District Judge Shira Scheindlin to throw out the rule and declare Clarett eligible for the in April 2004 draft or require the league to hold a supplemental draft in the mean time.

"We do not believe this lawsuit serves in the best interests of Maurice Clarett or any college football player," NFL spokesman Greg Aiello said. "We will fight this and

Conference ends with no trouble

A national conference to promote a free Palestine drew both supporters and protesters from around the country to the Ohio State campus during the weekend of Nov. 7-9.

The Third Annual Conference of the Palestine Solidarity Movement offered workshops, conferences and rallies at the Ohio Union. All events were aimed toward the goal of ending Israeli occupation in Palestine.

The University of Rutgers was originally scheduled to host the conference until the movement decided in August to move it to Ohio State.

Nahla Saleh, a spokeswoman for the conference and a graduate student in education at OSU, said the New Jersey coalition of the Palestine Solidarity Movement did not take into consideration other groups' ideas concerning the conference, so it was moved to OSU instead.

Bridge re-opening lightens traffic

By Adam L. Cahill
Lantern staff writer
11.14.03

On Nov. 14 the wait for the re-opening of the Lane Ave. Bridge finally ended.

"We are all excited to have the opening of the bridge, especially five months ahead of schedule," said Gregory Payne, spokesman for the Franklin County Engineer's office.

The early opening was because of a change in construction plans. Originally, the bridge was to be constructed as pre-poured pieces, brought to the construction site, and then pieced together. The new plans called for the bridge to be poured on location, which resulted in construction being completed ahead of schedule.

"By pouring the bridge on-site, we were able to save a lot of time and money," said Scott Roe, assistant bridge engineer and project manager.

"By changing the plans, we had complete control over the speed at which the bridge went up and we were able to set a much sooner date of completion," he said.

The total cost of the project, $15.6 million, ended up being the same for the new plan as compared to the estimated total cost with the old plan. The difference, however, was how the extra money was used for other parts of the construction.

Payne said the money saved by the on-site pouring was put back into the bridge by paying for additional construction hours, which moved the project along faster.

The 370-by-112 foot bridge has six 12-foot-wide lanes and two 12-foot-wide sidewalks.

While the bridge officially re-opened on Nov. 14, traffic was not permitted to drive across it until Nov. 17. Roes said that smaller detail jobs still needed to be finished before cars could drive across.

"All that is really left of the project is to clean up the areas around the bridge and place some fabricated pieces of steel between each set of pillars for additional support," Roes said.

"The temporary walking bridge and steel support beams under the Lane Avenue bridge will also be taken down and removed," he said.

Now that the area is cleaned up and the temporary bridges have been removed, all that remains stationary in the river is the two support pillars for the bridge.

"The old bridge had three support pillars which sometimes caused problems with debris build-up, while this bridge only has two support pillars which will hopefully allow for better flow of the river," Payne said.

A bike path that will run under the east end of the bridge, connecting the path behind Riverwatch Tower to the path that follows along the river toward King Avenue, is also being constructed.

A grand re-opening ceremony was held on Nov. 14 to celebrate the bridge completion. The ceremony included speeches from Dean Ringle, Franklin County engineer, Gov. Bob Taft, Franklin County Commissioner Dewvy Stokes and Ohio State President, Karen A. Holbrook.

Also participating in the festivities were the Tri-Service ROTC Color Guard, the OSU Cheerleaders and Pep Band and the Holiday Inn on Lane Avenue.

Police could move to campus area

By John May
Lantern wire editor
10.06.03

The Ohio State community and the City of Columbus are working to establish a stronger police presence in the University District.

University leaders are collaborating with Columbus Division of Police to move the police substation, located on Medary Avenue between Maynard and Arcadia avenues, to a more central location in the university district.

"Placing the police substation in the heart of the University District would provide more visibility of police and more accessibility to police which will help deter university-area crime," said Bill Hall, vice president for Student Affairs.

Hall said a centralized location will allow University Police, Community Crime Patrol and Columbus Police to work closely with one another.

There has been discussion about the location of the police substation, but nothing has been finalized.

Steve Sterrett, spokesman for Campus Partners, said the university has discussed using the building that was formerly the Midwest University Consortium for International Activities for the new police substation. The building is located on 15th Avenue near High Street, and the university is leasing it from Pella Company. MUCIA has relocated, and there is no activity in the building.

Bob Deis, a member of the University Area Safety Commission, does not want to see the police substation moved to 15th Avenue.

"A site on 15th would be too congested for a sufficient police substation," Deis said. "There is not much parking available at that location, and it is an area that will be hard for police to get in and out of."

Deis said John Zettler of Zettler Hardware has agreed to sell property in the area between Chittenden and 12th avenues. There will be a lot more parking available at this location and it will be less congested with easy access to streets in the area, Deis said.

"We are waiting on OSU. It is only a proposal. At this point, we are trying to find a suitable location for both parties," said Sgt. Brent Mull of the Columbus Police. Mull said if the police department is not given a workable proposal, it will keep the substation at the current location.

"We are happy to be having discussions with the city about a partnership to continue developing more public safety in the area east of High Street," said Vernon Baisden, assistant vice president of university public safety.

Baisden said the university is looking at all proposals and the talks about a new location are ongoing at this point. Baisden aims to promote more police visibility in the off-campus area by moving the police substation to the middle of the University District.

"The university is trying to help out with campus area crime, but I am afraid they will be too tight with their pocketbook and make a bad decision," Deis said.

John Payne, director of policy for USG, played an active roll in composing, administering and accessing the student evaluations concerning the use of the activity fee. Payne said the 11,084 responses USG received were used to compile a general student opinion about support and the allocation of the total student activity fee.

The evaluations, which were administered via e-mail during the beginning of this year, asked students for their opinions concerning free concerts, mentioning names such as U2, Jay-Z, Garth Brooks and John Mayer as examples. A majority of students who replied also favored free events featuring performers such as Chris Rock. Other ideas on the questionnaire included political speakers, on-campus festivals and student organizations.

"There was a high amount of support for fun events, but not necessarily student organizations or political speakers," Payne said.

The results of the student evaluations explain why OUAB received 57 percent of the money from the student activity fee.

"OUAB used to have to spend all year raising money for its Big Free Concert, which was kind of a medium range of talent," said Matt Couch, assistant director of the Ohio Union. "Now they can focus on bringing in big names and doing quality shows."

Rather than one annual main event, OUAB is stretching its event-planning itinerary to include three large concerts each year, in addition to 60 other local concerts, three keynote lecture speakers, 12 smaller lectures, 12 comedian acts and 30 second-run films, which will be shown on a movie projector purchased with student activity fee money.

"Thankfully the university recognized our right to hold the conference and our right to free speech," Saleh said. She said both OSU President Karen Holbrook and Ohio Gov. Bob Taft raised no objections to holding the event at Ohio State.

The movement, made up of pro-Palestinian activist groups from the United States and Canada, was met with both Jewish and Christian protesters upon arriving at OSU.

"I am for rights for Palestine, but these people want to talk about terrorism and that is never the solution," said Rabbi Shmuel Herfeld, who traveled from the Bronx, N.Y. to protest the event.

About 100 fellow protesters joined him over the course of three days. Herfeld attended last year's conference at the University of Michigan and said this year's conference drew fewer supporters.

"(The solidarity movement supporters) have lost a lot of their steam," he said. Herfeld also said he believes the conference promotes anti-Semitism.

Saleh said both of those statements are untrue. She said 500 people registered to attend the conference this year, just slightly less than the number of people who attended the two previous conferences. Saleh also said none of the participants advocate discrimination against Jews.

Bioresarch facility receives criticism for location choice

By Benjamin Hickey
Lantern staff writer
11.03.03

The new bioresarch facility, scheduled for construction in Fred Beekman Park, has come under scrutiny before groundbreaking activities have taken place.

Some residents of Upper Arlington and university employees have joined together to form the Coalition for Environmental and Biohazard Safety in order to voice their objections to the Level 3 bioresarch facility.

The lab, which will be constructed adjacent to Pressey Hall, has been a matter of concern for the group for over a year.

"We have contacted the board of trustees and the president," said Jan Grosso, a resident of Upper Arlington and member of the coalition. "We have written letters to different papers."

The Center for Disease Control established the rating system for labs based on four tiered hazard levels. A Level 3 rating indicates the lab will be capable of housing airborne agents that can be potentially lethal if inhaled.

"I have personally tried contacting the zoning board to find out how this facility got zoned on a residential area," Grosso said.

CDC protocol states that "BSL-3 laboratories should be located away from high traffic areas." To this point, Grosso has not received any response to her inquiries.

Cecil Smith, of the Office of Environmental Health and Safety, explained that "high traffic" does not necessarily refer to pedestrian traffic.

When the CDC discusses high traffic, it is talking about limiting access within the facility's parameters, he said.

A meeting was held in early

August to quell some of the concerns surrounding the facility. Most of the fears voiced involved the potential harm that could occur should any of the agents escape.

"We are not opposed to the research. We are opposed to it being in a metro area. We are also opposed to them not being allowed to tell us if there has been a leak. What if Ohio Stadium has 104,000 fans and the wind blows that way?" Grosso said.

The building's construction is also a concern.

Since it is a modular building, "What would happen if the building were struck by a tornado and could possibly harm residents in the area?" said an Upper Arlington resident. "I know there are labs buried on main campus, and that being the case, these facilities are very protected, but this building seems to be very vulnerable."

Sick students no longer get free aid

By Melanie McIntyre
Lantern staff writer
9.26.03

Beginning Sept. 24, office visit fees at Wilce Student Health Center could no longer be waived for enrolled students.

"The Student Health Center receives payment from two primary sources to cover costs, the first being students. Students pay for lab tests, x-rays, prescriptions and physical therapy. The second source is general fees that all students pay to the university that is redistributed back to the Health Center," said Diane Plumly, associate director of Student Health Services.

The Ohio State Board of Trustees approved all fees within the 2003-2004 budget, which was approved on July 11, said Ruth Gerstner, a spokeswoman for the Office of Student Affairs.

"In the past 10 to 20 years, general funds have not been enough to offset the cost of providing physician-based services," Plumly said.

Budget cuts resulting from a lack of funding from the state have not helped matters said Bill Hall, vice president of Student Affairs.

A number of universities charge the entire student body a health care fee each school year. Student Health Services administrators said the majority of students think those who make use of the service should be the ones to pay.

Student Health Services does not expect to see a decrease in total visits to Wilce, Plumly said. Students who are covered under the insurance plan available through OSU "will see very little difference because the insurance covers the office fee in full," she said.

Students with other insurance plans will be responsible for co-pays, co-insurance and deductibles. Office visit fees vary between $35 and $165 depending on whether the patient is new or established and the complexity of the exam, said John Ford, assistant director of Student Health Services.

Those who don't have student health insurance have two options, Ford said.

Riot law could face change

By Amy Aldridge
Lantern staff writer
11.19.03

According to Ohio law, those charged with failing to disperse from a riot or other emergency situations face no jail time and a maximum fine of $150 under the minor misdemeanor classification.

"Failure to disperse" is remaining at a scene after law enforcement has ordered a crowd to disband.

A freshly introduced piece of legislation is looking to elevate the penalty for "failure to disperse" to a minor misdemeanor. Under the revision, violators would face up to 30 days in jail and a maximum fine of $250.

"In a riot situation it's incredibly impractical to try and write tickets to everyone involved," said Michael Weinman, legislative liaison for the Columbus Division of Police. "This creates a problem for clearing the streets and the area. This bill would give us the authority to decisively give one, maybe two warnings, then start arresting people who don't disperse."

Legislation for "failure to disperse" was not passed before the Ohio House of Representatives ended their final session of 2003.

"Right now, failure to disperse is a minor misdemeanor," said Chris Ingram, legislative assistant to Sen. Jeff Jacobson who sponsored the bill. "The Senate wanted to limit the scope of the increased penalty to be sure it would be a fourth degree misdemeanor in the case of a fire, accident, disaster, riot or emergency of any kind."

Arresting everyone at such scenes may be impossible, but Ingram said he feels this law will still serve a good purpose.

"This is not so police officers can arrest everyone on the scene. It is so they can get at those who are inciting the riots, arrest them and remove them from the scene," Ingram said. "They don't necessarily even have to take them to jail, but naturally, then the crowd would disperse."

Columbus police Lt. Jeff Puls said he hopes everyone will see the seriousness of this issue.

"Riots and other types of civil disorder need to be arrestable offenses," Puls said. "We have the most up-to-date tactics, strategies and equipment, but the laws are lacking and not keeping up."

Puls testified as a proponent of this law before the Ohio House of Representatives criminal justice committee on Nov. 18.

This bill has already been passed by the Senate.

Weinman said he hopes this bill, if passed, will work to diffuse situations of civil unrest effectively.

"The power of being able to arrest for failure to disperse would allow us to work in conjunction with the sheriff's office," Weinman said. "If there is a riot somewhere, we can get some buses there and start grabbing and handcuffing people rather than just standing there and getting pelted with beer bottles and such."

Milstein told The Associated Press he believes the suit, which requests a jury trial, could be resolved in as little as three months.

"This is the kind of case usually decided on a summary judgment," he said. He said the judge would most likely decide the case because there are no facts in dispute.

"The rule is a restraint of amateur athletes who were strangers to the collective bargaining process," the suit says.

The Sept. 23 lawsuit came a day after Milstein, Claret's mother and NFL officials met in Washington.

"The purpose of the meeting was we expect Maurice to be one of their employees in the very near future," Milstein told the AP. "We wanted them to know what we were going to do and why we need to do it."

While the lawsuit did not come as a total shock, Aiello said he was surprised at the timing.

"We thought we were going to have an opportunity to respond after the meeting," he said. "We're just disappointed that we were not allowed to do so."

Ohio State Director of Athletics Andy Geiger was not surprised by the filing, saying only the timing was news to him.

Earlier this month, NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue was asked if the league could win a lawsuit like Claret's; he said the NFL had a strong case and would win it.

Columbus stalked by sculptures

By Katy Lyn Poth
Lantern staff writer
10.01.03

There was a new crop popping up all over Columbus this fall, and things got a little corny. Six-foot-tall, 80 pound fiberglass ears of corn have took root all over the city, including on campus.

The project titled "Street Corners" is a way to showcase Ohio's bicentennial and agriculture as the state's leading industry, said Terri Albanese, co-chair of the Street Corners project.

"My family was coming back from New Orleans where they had a similar exhibit with fish, and we had all seen the cow exhibit in Chicago. We wanted to bring something to Columbus, and it made sense to use an ear of corn because it's native to Ohio and represents the No. 1 industry in the state," Albanese said.

Albanese created the idea and gained the endorsement of the Ohio Arts Council, the Ohio Bicentennial Commission and the Ohio Department of Agriculture.

In May, Albanese sent out a call to the Ohio Arts Council to have artists create designs for the corn sculptures and a portfolio of potential designs was formed. Sponsoring organizations could either choose one of the existing designs or work with an artist to create a new image.

"We already have 55 ears sponsored, and we are still open for more. Our goal is to have 100," Albanese said.

All of the artists are from Ohio, and students can submit designs for consideration.

"I hope students are able to see that this project really symbolizes the impact of agriculture in Ohio, but in a fun, whimsical, creative way," Albanese said.

The area south of the French Field House is the home to two sculptures, both by artist Judy Anderson from Cincinnati. One sculpture is sponsored by DSW and titled "Shoepeg Corn," and the other is sponsored by Value City stores and named "Van Gogh's Missing Ear."

Other sculptures are located in places like the Arena District and Easton Town Center.

The sculptures were installed throughout October.

Mike Wagner, executive director of the Ohio Corn Marketing Program, said this is a win-win situation for Ohio.

"This program benefits the arts, it benefits the state and it benefits agriculture," Wagner said.

Wagner said companies are eager to sponsor because they can help choose the design.

"For example, a funeral home named their sculpture 'A-maizing Grace.' The Ohio Corn Growers sponsored one that looks like a gas pump to promote the use of ethanol," Wagner said.

There are three levels of sponsorship. Sponsors can begin at the popcorn level which is a $3,900 contribution. The second level is the silverqueen level at $4,500, and the highest level is the golden kernel sponsorship which is $5,900, Albanese said.

After the sculptures are removed, the buyer can either keep the sculpture or place it in an auction for charity. The auction gala will take place in January, and half of the auction's proceeds will go to the bidder's charity of choice. The other half will go to the charity of choice of the sculpture's sponsor.

Heath Eisele, a senior in human dimensions and natural resources, said having these sculptures on campus will help raise awareness about agriculture.

"It's great because it brings a little bit of agriculture to the city, and hopefully will spark students' interest to question about agriculture," Eisele said.

Eisele, who comes from an agricultural background, said he hopes these sculptures will appeal to everyone visiting campus.

"Recently went to the University of Pittsburgh, and they had a dinosaur sculpture exhibit on campus," Eisele said. "I remembered it after I left, so maybe these corn sculptures will help leave a lasting impression on those who visit campus or Columbus."

Military honor given to researcher

By Jeff Polesovsky
Lantern staff writer
10.31.03

It is an honor that very few military personal ever receive, but an Ohio State researcher is one of the few.

The Bronze Star presented to Lt. Col. Mike DuPerier means more than just a heroic achievement — it's the reward for truly enjoying what he does.

DuPerier received the Bronze Star Medal on Oct. 30 at a formal ceremony for his role in guiding AC-130H Spectre Gunships into battle while deployed in Afghanistan.

The medal was presented by Col. Sheila Brocki, who was witnessing her first Bronze Medal ceremony in more than 26 years of service with the Air Force.

"It is very rare to receive one. Only a small percentage of people that fly and fight can win decorations and awards in combat," Cadet Maj. Jason Stutzman said.

The Bronze Medal is awarded to individuals who display heroic or meritorious achievement, or service in connection with military operations.

Crew members that fly missions through threat areas and get shot at are the ones receiving these awards, Stutzman said.

DuPerier, who was director of operations for a gunship squadron, assumed a leadership role while sending the fleet of three AC-130H gunships into battle.

After the ceremony, DuPerier explained his role in Operation Anaconda to a group of OSU ROTC students and praised the crews he led while stationed in Karshi Khanabad, Uzbekistan.

"Those guys are amazing (for) what they put up with and never complain. They are great professional aviators," DuPerier said.

Thirteen crew members guide the aircraft that can project a tremendous amount of force and provide air support for U.S. troops. Missions were flown under the cover of darkness to protect the large and slow aircraft from surface-to-air fire, DuPerier said.

But the gunship, which identifies targets at speeds nearing 200 mph, is able to loiter above a position for four hours to protect and give constant on-call support while periodically preparing for air refueling.

"It is a great, challenging aircraft to fly," DuPerier said, explaining that concentration is hard to keep while listening to five radios and the entire crew talking at the same time. "There is a lot to coordinate and a lot of balls to juggle."

The heavily armed jet is able to find targets through the use of infrared detectors and lasers that are capable of shining down on the ground to illuminate a target image that appears on a screen. The weapons onboard the aircraft point to where the sensors are looking-enabling the gunners to continue to load the guns and keep them maintained at a fast pace.

The weapons are on a hydraulic mount and computer-driven to position the gun to shoot accurately.

"I just have to maneuver the airplane and the computer will adjust everything and fire the round," DuPerier said, adding that the gun has the capability to hit a 55-gallon barrel from a distance of two miles.

OSU one of few universities to have nuclear lab

By Chris Paul
Lantern staff writer
11.03.03

A sample of ink, a package of chicken and electronic components for a satellite. All of these things seem unrelated, but for Andrew Kauffman, associate director of the nuclear reactor laboratory at Ohio State, the connection is simple.

All of those items have been irradiated at the nuclear reactor lab, located off Kinnear Road on West Campus.

The nuclear reactor lab tests a variety of items for various reasons.

Radiation is much higher in space than on Earth and the electronic components for satellites need to be tested to see the effect the higher radiation will have on them, Kauffman said.

The nuclear reactor can be used to determine the composition of certain samples. Geologists have taken soil and rock samples and used the nuclear reactor for just such a purpose.

The process called Neutron Activation Analysis consists of first irradiating a sample with neutrons in a nuclear reactor to produce specific radionuclides. The radionuclides begin to decay and give off a specific gamma radiation signature indicative of the radionuclide.

These signatures can be studied to determine the concentrations of various elements in a sample.

Such a process was used in determining the composition of an ink, Kauffman said.

"We had a company that produces ink come to us because they suspected that a competitor had stolen their formula," he said. "We used the neutron activation analysis to determine the formula used by the competitor to make the ink. The company then compared the results to their own formula."

Besides the nuclear reactor, researchers use a gamma irradiator at the lab.

"This device uses cobalt-60 to emit gamma radiation," Kauffman said. "Researchers sometimes want to irradiate items with only gamma radiation, and not the neutrons emitted by the nuclear reactor."

An example is food irradiated in experiments by OSU's Food Science and Technology. The experiments are used to extend the shelf life of the food, Kauffman said.

"The gamma radiation kills bacteria which shortens the shelf life of the food," he said.

But Kauffman said the gamma irradiator is very safe. The items irradiated in the gamma irradiator can be removed and handled right after the experiment because they don't give off radiation like things that have been irradiated in the nuclear reactor.

The nuclear reactor lab was built in 1960. OSU's lab is one of about 25 or 30 labs operated by universities, Kauffman said. "There aren't many nuclear reactor labs at universities. OSU is one of the few that has one."

The nuclear reactor is very small. In comparison to a commercial nuclear reactor which has a rating of 500 to 1,000 megawatts, OSU's nuclear reactor only generates up to one-half a megawatt.

The nuclear reactor uses uranium-235 as its fuel for reactions.

"The uranium is actually on loan from the Department of Energy," Kauffman said. "The uranium is theirs. We are actually just borrowing it."

DAMIEN PETRANEK/THE LANTERN

The OSU nuclear reactor sits under water and is used mainly for neutron activation analysis and lab classes for nuclear engineer majors.

University lacks a true diverse experience

By Alexis Maddox
 Lantern staff writer
 10.29.03

As lunch hour approaches, students zip through the Ohio Union. Some grab a sandwich, others inhale a slice of pizza. Many are there to meet up with friends or try to catch their daily dosage of food and soaps.

But among all the hustle and bustle it may look as though boundaries have been set with a bold, bright marker. Ohio State students tend to gather and grub with others of the same race and taste.

Self-segregation — or the clustering of college students according to race or ethnicity — is common campus-wide and may be a result of the increasing diversity of OSU, said Tanisha Briley, coordinator of undergraduate recruitment for the Office of Minority Affairs.

Socializing according to racial similarities is considered to be natural and beneficial, but an excessive amount may prevent personal and academic growth, Briley said.

OSU is the second-largest university in the nation with more than 50,000 graduate and undergraduate students. The university has been working to create an increasingly diverse environment, she said. Over the past 10 years, the university has steadily increased its minority enrollment, and more than 13,000 minority and international students make up the student population for autumn quarter.

José Rivera, a sophomore in pre-medicine focusing on biology, said when he was initially looking at colleges, the quality of education was an important factor in his decision-making process. As a native of the Bronx, N.Y., he said OSU's diversity also was an attractive aspect.

"At OSU I found that I was going to get a good education along with meeting people that I can share common interests with because they are like me," Rivera said. "(There are) so many people of different races where I'm from. Here on campus there are also a lot of minorities, which reminds me a lot of home."

While OSU is statistically diverse, self-segregation prevents students of different races from interacting, Rivera said. Individual groups are commonly made up of only one race, he said.

At the University of California, Los Angeles, whose diverse student population is similar to OSU, students said they felt self-segregation was a noticeable occurrence among their community, according to a study conducted by Anthony Lising Antonio, assistant professor of education at Stanford University.

Ninety percent of UCLA students who participated in the survey said students predominantly cluster by race and ethnicity on campus, and a small majority said students rarely socialize across racial lines.

Most OSU students said they felt the campus is extremely diverse, though 80 percent said self-segregation is common among all racial groups, according to a non-scientific study conducted in an OSU journalism and communications course in February.

Social events held by Greek organizations tend to have a homogeneous environment. Historically black fraternities and sororities sponsor several parties, such as the icebreakers held at the beginning of each quarter — though they mainly draw black students, Rivera said.

"Occasionally you will see a Caucasian person at these kind of events, but there may only be one or two — really just not many at all — and (it's) not that often," he said.

Rivera said several centers on campus tend to be occupied by certain racial groups. He cited the example of the Frank Hale Cultural Center, which is dedicated mainly to African-American culture but open to students of all races. He said not many Caucasian students visit the center because they don't feel connected and have the misconception that it is reserved only for black students.

"Some white students are used to being around other Caucasians because of their past, so they feel, 'Why should I go into places like the Hale Cultural Center if I don't have business there,'" Rivera said.

Most students entering college come from high schools that are predominantly one racial group causing them to create friendships that resemble their former relationships, Briley said.

The segregation can be both intentional and unintentional, said Priya Krishna, a senior in criminology and a diversity senator of the Undergraduate Student Government.

Krishna said a language barrier often exists, and students seek the security of others who are from their native country.

Mac A. Stewart, vice provost of the Office of Minority Affairs, said that no specific group is responsible for this racial segregation.

"When you think of self-segregation, you think of those in the minority, but actually self-segregation is quite prevalent amongst those in the majority as well," Stewart said.

Because of self-segregation, interracial relationships are not given the opportunity to form, Briley said. As an undergraduate student at OSU, she was a part of many different organizations that were affiliated with the black community, but she was also a resident adviser on north campus, allowing her to interact with non-black students.

A limited amount of self-segregation is beneficial because a person's comfort level greatly impacts his or her academic performance, Briley said.

"I think I would have missed out on a lot of skills, but I forced myself to be more open to things that may have been out of my immediate comfort zone," Briley said.

Meeting and interacting with a diverse group of people is beneficial — not only in college but also in the "real world" because it helps students network, Rivera said.

"You cannot stick to just one group. You have to branch out," Rivera said. "If you don't, you won't experience what OSU has to offer."

Krishna recommended students get involved in campus organizations and clubs to meet others who may be different. She said it is beneficial to interact more in classes as well.

Journalism more than news writing

The column by Erik Johns (Dec. 30), "Journalism needs new home", articulates the point of view that the study of the academic field of journalism is reducible to news writing. This is one point of view about the field, but it is one with which I must respectfully disagree.

Journalism provides a means for citizens to be informed about the important issues of the day. The best journalists work hard to provide a comprehensive picture of reality on which citizens can act. The great scientific, medical, economic and other advances of our time become known to adults who no longer attend school primarily through the news media.

Writing skillfully is one aspect of journalism. Providing perspective on events and issues requires tremendous skill and in-depth knowledge about not just journalism, but the political, social, economic and other systems that affect everyday life. In other words, one has to know a lot to be a truly great journalist.

One of the things that would be useful to know about is social science. This is a comprehensive system for understanding the world in a systematic way. At our university, and at a number of other — but not all — great universities where journalism is taught, journalism is approached as an applied social science subject. Journalists should have basic competencies in data analysis, survey research and many other techniques in order to do their work effectively, understand their audiences' interests and needs and make decisions regarding future business opportunities. Some of the most important career opportunities available to young journalists involve these particular competencies.

Journalists in today's world also need to know about media organizations and how they function. It is important to know about how media audiences use the news and what people learn as a result of their use. How media contribute to our collective notions of community and help build social capital is another important issue. These topics and more are what mass communication research is all about. It is highly relevant to the study and practice of journalism.

The journalism program is correctly positioned in the school and in the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences. The current plan for changing the name of the school will not change these facts. The job of the journalist is not just about writing.

Simpsons an ode to American life

This Sunday marks the day I have been looking forward to since last May. This glorious day would have come even sooner if it were not for the ridiculously long baseball season and its month-long postseason.

Alas, after months of waiting, the season premiere of "The Simpsons" is upon us. The 14th season kicks off Nov. 2 with the annual Treehouse of Horror episode.

Nothing in our 227-year history better captures the essence of our nation than "The Simpsons." It is the greatest symbol of American culture.

Hilarity and high jinks have been packed into every season. There is great debate among the loyal fans over the best episode.

While it is hard to make a decision, I happen to think the best episode ever is the "Beer Baron" (#4F15), with the episode where Homer thought Bart was gay (#4F11) a close second. I encourage all readers to e-mail me with their thoughts on favorite episodes.

For those of us in our early to mid 20s, "The Simpsons" is so much more than a hilarious ode to American life. It is our life; it grew up and matured right alongside us.

The show started when I was in third grade. Like so many of us at the time, it was immature. Every episode was a conduit for Bart to spit out his silly catch phrases ("Don't have a cow," "Eat my shorts," "Aye caramba!" etc.). The show was funny but only on a primitive level. Had it stayed the same, it likely would not have endured.

It was necessary to stop exploiting the Bart fad and create a complete cast. Thus, Homer and the hundreds of legendary side characters became the driving force.

The show changed forever when Conan O'Brien joined as a writer. "Marge vs. the Monorail" (#9F10), written by O'Brien, was the turning point of the show. It aired in early 1993, the time that was also the turning point in most of our lives. The little boys and girls who watched the show were blossoming into men and women. As we grew and became more intelligent, the show did the same.

As we went through high school and began to learn about Shakespeare, Dante, the Greek classics and other great literature and film, the show became packed with more allusions and references to these great works, while still maintaining its sense of humor.

The show's intellectual and comedic development occurred as we were becoming more enlightened and still continues to this day.

While it has become a smart, scathing satire of Americana, it still works on many levels. I can watch it with my cousins who are 10 years younger than I, yet they enjoy it just as much as I.

Vast amounts of academic work has been done on "The Simpsons" and its impact on society. There is nothing wrong with that material; in fact, much of it is quite interesting. But the reason we all continue to watch the show is simple: it is the funniest thing on television ... ever.

No matter your background, education, race or religion, everyone loves "The Simpsons." It continues to poke fun at all of us. Ridiculing everyone, but in the right way. We love it because the characters say and do everything we have become afraid to in our increasingly pop culture society.

Those who originally chastised the show as being a bad influence on children have come around to realize the only thing it poses a threat to is people who are too humorless and stubborn to appreciate the subtleties of its humor. I grew up with "The Simpsons." This Sunday is a day of celebration, but the good times will not last forever. It will be a sad day when the show's run comes too an end. In a way, a little bit of me will die with it. Screw Flanders.

The NCAA champion is back, and he has company.

Adam Crompton led the Ohio State fencing team to a No. 4 finish at nationals one year ago, finishing first as an individual in the sabre competition. This year, Crompton is joined by a few recruits from the international circuit, as well as a solid core returning from last year's squad. The Buckeyes look to achieve what they felt was in their grasp a year ago: a first place finish at nationals.

"Coach says you always have to have heart when you step on the strip," Crompton said. "This season I'm really looking forward to winning NCAAAs, because last year we had the ability to do it, but we just didn't do it last year. I feel as though we are the best."

Boaz Ellis is one of the newcomers to the OSU team. Hailing from Zaphora, Israel, Ellis said he hopes to continue to improve his skills and raise his level of competition. He has had experience in international competition and comes to OSU knowing that coach Vladimir Nazlymov has high expectations for his squad, expectations that Nazlymov said he feels are well within the team's grasp.

"They are bringing a lot to the team," Crompton said. "Boaz is one of the foils men. He's very good. It's a big addition to our team. Dennis (Tolkachev) was on the junior national team last year. I saw him when I went to the Worlds."

Tolkachev, another newcomer from St. Petersburg, Russia, said he is looking forward to his career at OSU. He said he hopes to help the team achieve its goals, as he betters himself for his shot at a possible Olympic spot on Russia's 2004 team. Tolkachev's father had been coached by Nazlymov in Russia, so he had an idea of what to expect.

Also returning this year and hoping to continue their success are Loise Bond-Williams and Hanna Thompson. Bond-Williams and Thompson will head the women's team and both believe that Nazlymov's expectations of being the best in the country are very reasonable.

"It's important to this team," Nazlymov said. "We want to be the first team at NCAAAs and it's very possible."

This off-season found Crompton ton, Thompson, Bond-Williams, Tolkachev, Ellis and Jason Rogers representing their countries at the Pan-American International Games. Rogers said he believes that adding Tolkachev and Ellis will benefit the team greatly.

"Personally, it's fantastic to be practicing with guys from other countries," Rogers said. "If you raise the level of practice, you have to raise your level of fencing and that forces you to get better. As a team, they bring a whole new dynamic. They're very funny, and it's just a great team environment."

OSU tennis player best in nation

By Melanie Watkins
Lantern sports editor
11.14.03

When the preseason rankings came out, Ohio State men's tennis player Jeremy Wurtzman was given the No. 20 slot. When those rankings came out, Wurtzman had not won any titles in his collegiate career and no one could predict what he would do in the months of fall competition.

With fall tennis play winding down Wurtzman's college career is in full speed. After winning the Midwest Regional title Oct. 28, he continued moving his way to the top and claimed the ITA National Indoors crown last Sunday.

"I had never won a tournament in college so it was definitely a plus," Wurtzman said. "I think the regionals helped me believe I could come through with the wins at nationals."

Victories over the No. 2, 5 and 6 players in the country at the national tournament were enough to put Wurtzman on top of the competition. After talking with the governing body of college tennis OSU coach Ty Tucker was informed that Wurtzman will probably be No. 1 when the rankings are redone in January.

Wurtzman is the first Buckeye to win a national or regional title in men's tennis history.

"These are the kind of accomplishments that help get you into the Ohio State Athletic Hall of Fame," Tucker said. "(Wurtzman) will live forever because who knows if anyone else in OSU history will win a national title."

As a senior, Wurtzman is 14-1 in tournament play this season and was able to leap over the century-mark in career single match wins en route to the titles.

"I've worked really hard this fall, and I am playing the way I need to play, and I am in the shape I need to be in to be successful at this level of college," Wurtzman said.

Heading into the National Indoors, Wurtzman was seeded No. 5. To seize the crown he defeated No. 2 Georgia's Bo Hodge in the finals. The win was his 11th straight as it took him six matches to win the regionals and five to win the nationals.

Wurtzman bounced back from being behind 5-1 in the first set to take six of the next seven games and force the tiebreaker with Hodge. After winning the breaker 11-9, Wurtzman took the second set 6-2 and the match.

"I knew I could beat everyone there, I just had to find a way to do it," Wurtzman said. "I made it to the semifinals last year, and I knew I wanted to at least match that. I put a little bit of pressure on myself to at least make it to the semis."

While Wurtzman was the only Buckeye in the national tournament, it didn't stop others from going to Ann Arbor, Mich., for the competition. Tucker went up to watch a few matches but had to leave when his grandmother passed away. Two OSU players went to watch in person, while others hovered around computers to get Internet updates.

"We all felt so good for him because we knew he could do it," teammate Dennis Mertens said. "It was amazing."

Tucker said he thinks Wurtzman's accomplishments also act as a confidence booster for his OSU teammates.

"These guys practice with him all of the time and some of them play him close and every once in a while guys take sets and beat him," Tucker said. "It makes them realize that if you work hard and keep doing what you are supposed to be doing and you reach that next fitness level that (Wurtzman) has reached, anything is possible."

Success a Hawk family tradition

By Laura Borchers
Lantern staff writer
11.18.03

No one knew the little boy from Centerville, Ohio, who always wore Florida State hats and got roughed up by his older brothers would become one of the most valued Ohio State linebackers.

"I always could tell watching A.J. play that he was a great athlete," said A.J. Hawk's older brother Ryan Hawk. "Seeing him play his freshman year was when I think it became without a doubt obvious that A.J. would be a great athlete beyond high school football."

A.J. and Ryan Hawk grew up to set records together at Centerville High School — the same high school OSU place kicker Mike Nugent and former quarterback Kirk Herbstreit emerged from. The two star brothers split ways when Ryan Hawk graduated and left to play for Ohio University.

A.J. Hawk, a sophomore, played at Centerville for two more years under coach Ron Ullery before joining the Buckeye football team.

"Growing up so close to Columbus, you watch them play, and when you get the opportunity to play for a team like that, it is impossible to turn down, especially knowing talented guys like Herbstreit and Nugent went there," A.J. Hawk said. "I knew I wanted to go there if they would have me."

Hawk chose the OSU football program over Penn State's program, then made his first career start against the Nittany Lions when linebacker Cie Grant was injured last year.

When Hawk first stepped into Ohio Stadium, some critics commented on his 40-yard dash times, which did not quite match up to Grant's times. It did not take long for A.J. Hawk to prove those critics wrong.

"I did not realize I was slow until I got here," Hawk said. "I just played as hard as I could and did not worry about numbers."

Hawk tallied up 96 tackles, four sacks and two interceptions this season with the Buckeyes.

"I am biased as A.J.'s brother, but I try to look at him objectively, too," Ryan Hawk said. "It is undeniable that he is one of the best linebackers in the country. He has a strong, determined work ethic but keeps his mouth shut. He is too humble to tell you, but he is one of the best and only improves each time out."

Hawk is quick to credit his accomplishments to the support of his family. His older brothers, Matt and Ryan taught him the basics of sports and the value of competition in everything from pingpong to tennis. His dad also coached his little league games.

"My parents are the reasons for us being who we are," Hawk said. "They do not miss a game and developed a strict work ethic in us."

Ryan Hawk agreed.

"It makes doing what we do easier knowing they are always behind us," he said.

Judy and Keith Hawk take turns going to OSU games because while one parent cheers for A.J. Hawk and the Buckeyes, the other watches Ryan Hawk play quarterback at OU.

Hawk also values the coaches he has played for throughout his football career. He said the respect his high school coach Bob Gregg commanded was one reason he chose to concentrate on football rather than continuing as the starting point guard for Centerville.

Now at OSU, Hawk is under the direction of coach Jim Tressel and works closely with defensive coordinator Mark Dantonio.

"Dantonio always tells us 'stay tight and play together well,'" Hawk said.

Results are proving this attitude to be the core of a successful team. The OSU defensive team is acclaimed as one of the best in the nation, and many players agree that the secret to success is unity.

"We are sitting in the driver's seat right now, and we have accomplished that as a team," defensive tackle Tim Anderson said.

Hawk is quick to acknowledge his teammates. His answer to every question of how he makes amazing plays is a nod to his defensive teammates.

"The guys in front of me do a great job," Hawk said. "You have guys like Tim Anderson grabbing two guys at a time, and it frees me up to go after the ball."

Boyages makes a return to Buckeyes

By Dallas Scrip
Lantern staff writer

TERRY WHITT/THE LANTERN
Rick Boyages, associate coach of the men's basketball team, watches as the Buckeyes play Georgia Tech.

A former member of the Ohio State men's basketball coaching staff returned to the court for his second tour of duty with the Buckeyes this season.

Assistant coach Rick Boyages in his fourth season with the Buckeyes, was on the OSU staff from 1998-2000 before leaving to take the head coach position at William & Mary.

Boyages was born in Wakefield, Mass. and graduated from Bowdoin College in 1985. At Bowdoin College, Boyages was an All-New England basketball honoree. Boyages described himself as "a little pest who was quick but small." He always had a passion for basketball and that's why he continued a career in the field.

Boyages was named the head basketball coach at Bates College when he was 24 years old. At that time, he was the youngest collegiate head coach.

"It was a fabulous experience, a great training ground," Boyages said.

At Bates, Boyages had to do everything basketball related and some things not. He coached the team, recruited, scouted, drove the van, washed the uniforms and taught academic classes. He was an assistant soccer coach and coach of women's tennis and men's golf teams for a year.

"It was a small school environment where you have to wear many hats," Boyages said.

In 1991 OSU coach Jim O'Brien hired Boyages as an assistant coach at Boston College. At Boston College, Boyages helped to turn the Eagles program around.

In 1998, Boyages followed O'Brien to OSU as an assistant coach. He was part of an amazing turn around. The Buckeyes went from eight wins to 27 wins and a trip to the NCAA Final Four in 1998.

At OSU, Boyages has done exceptional work with charities. As a staff the Buckeyes try to extend themselves to help out in the community.

"You find a couple charities that hit you, and you spend more time with them," Boyages said.

Boyages sits on the board of his favorite charity "Advantages for Wish Kids." He said he decided to donate his time to this charity because it touched him as a person.

Boyages coaching talents have also taken him around the world. He was honored for successfully bringing together members of the Hutu and Tutsi tribes while coaching the Burundi national team.

In 1998, Boyages coached a NCAA all-star team in the Greek Basketball Federation. Boyages was able to hand-pick his squad.

"The experience was a lot of fun with Michael (Redd) and Scoonie (Penn) on the team," Boyages said.

In June of 2000, Boyages left OSU to take over the coaching job at William & Mary.

"I left Columbus to be a head coach," Boyages said. "I had been a head coach at a young age and wanted to give it another try."

Boyages said it was a very difficult job. William & Mary had some of the highest academic entrance requirements for student-athletes. It had the toughest requirements in the Colonial Conference.

"Recruiting was the biggest challenge; only 10 percent of the recruits nationally would qualify," Boyages said.

Boyages decided to return to OSU after a conversation with O'Brien. O'Brien said he felt that Boyages could be of some help. Boyages said it was nice to hear, and he wanted to come back and have an impact.

Boyages said he is very optimistic about this year's team. The Buckeyes have the talent, depth and versatility to be a very good team.

"The real goal of the season is to reach and exceed our potential as a team," Boyages said.

During the first two weeks, O'Brien was absent because of illness, and Boyages stepped in and ran practices.

"From day one, coach Boyages was like the head coach getting the team going," sophomore forward Matt Sylvester said.

Sylvester said Boyages is an up tempo, hands-on coach that knows a lot about basketball.

"I like (Boyages) a lot. He is very smart and works with us one-on-one to help improve our moves," junior Tony Stockman said.

Boyages has a wife and three daughters, each under the age of 10. He refers to his wife as a saint. He said she has a very difficult job being a coach's wife. His daughters are still young, but Boyages said it will be interesting in the next five-to-eight years when his daughters grow up.

He cherishes the time he gets to spend with his wife and kids. In the coaching profession there isn't a lot of free time during the season.

"I am thankful that the university allows us to travel with our families during holiday tournaments," Boyages said.

Trinidad native braves new country to play field hockey

By Craig Sweeney
Lantern sports writer
11.20.03

When comes time for a first-year student to leave for college, each individual's experience is different.

Some students commute to a local school. Others travel a great distance to attend college.

In some instances, the journey can take a young scholar thousands of miles away from home and into a new culture.

Thus was the case for Ohio State field hockey player Curlyne Wynn, who hails from Trincity, Trinidad and Tobago.

Wynn, a freshman midfielder on the team this season, came to OSU in March to attend spring quarter classes and was concerned with how she would be accepted by others at the university.

“I wondered if I was going to fit in,” Wynn said. “When I came here my roommates were like, ‘Do you have electricity?’ Yes, we do have all of those things,” she said.

Trinidad and Tobago are two islands, located in the Caribbean, off the coast of Venezuela. Trinidad is business-oriented, while Tobago is more tourist-based, Wynn said.

Wynn has been able to adjust to her new surroundings and become accustomed to the culture of the United States. She said that life in Trinidad and Tobago is similar to that in the United States.

“My country is so Americanized,” Wynn said. “We want to follow everything Americans do. If the latest style is in America, bet your bottom dollar it's in Trinidad.”

Her aunt, Carol Wynn-Whiteman, who lives in Trinidad and Tobago, recalls a quiet girl who grew up on the island of Trinidad.

“Growing up, Curlyne was a quiet, reserved child who loved animals,” Wynn-Whiteman said. “The family owns a large farm, and she always used to be playing with dogs and other animals.”

The family farm and its animals are memories that Wynn talks about with excitement. They have given her ideas of majoring in pre-veterinary studies.

TERRY WHITT/THE LANTERN

For OSU field hockey player Curlyne Wynn, the cold weather is just one of the adjustments she has had to make since moving to Columbus.

“I love animals,” Wynn said. “Now I don't have a dog and it's driving me crazy.”

Wynn's first trip to America came two summers ago when she visited her aunt, Marlene Nurse who lives in New York.

“New York is crazy,” Wynn said. “I like it a lot, but I couldn't live there for more than a few months. If you can survive in New York you can survive anywhere.”

Once in Ohio for school, Wynn had to acclimate herself to the new surroundings. One of the adjustments Wynn had to make was being away from her friends and family. She has her aunt in New York and another family member in the country, but no one in Ohio. Her father, Cagney Wynn, is back home, and she has not spoken with him since she has been at OSU.

“That's rough,” Wynn said. “I could never do anything wrong in my dad's eyes.”

She keeps in contact with Wynn-Whiteman through e-mail to keep in touch with home.

“I think the hardest adjustment to living in the U.S. has been the traveling with the team,” Wynn-Whiteman said.

Wynn echoed these thoughts on traveling, especially because she came from a small area such as Trincity.

“It's not very big. Compared to here, it's not bigger than campus,” Wynn said of Trincity. “I can travel around Trinidad in a day.”

While traveling takes some getting used to, other issues also arise.

The food and the weather are two things that Wynn misses about home and has to get comfortable with here in Ohio, Wynn-Whiteman said.

The food has been one of the toughest adjustments that Wynn has had to deal with since being at OSU. She misses the foods and spices she would eat back home, but has found some food to satisfy her taste.

“I eat Chinese food because it has salt,” Wynn said. “Everything else here is so bland. There's no salt, there's no spice.”

Coming from a warm climate, Wynn is waiting to experience the cold weather the winter season will bring. She is also waiting to see snow for the first time.

“Anytime it drops below 50, there is going to be a state of emergency in Trinidad,” Wynn said with a laugh. “I want to see snow, but I want to see it for one day.”

Her first experience with cold temperatures came when the field hockey team played in the Big Ten Tournament in November.

“I had to play in gloves,” Wynn said. “It's the first time I had to play hockey in a refrigerator. It was so cold. Mentally, you have to learn to block it out. It's hard to concentrate when you can't feel your hands.”

Wynn is one of several international players on the OSU field hockey roster. The team calls them the “United Nations,” Wynn said.

Coach Anne Wilkinson has coached players from Trinidad and Tobago before and has experienced blending different cultures.

“It's not easy to put a lot of cultures together, but that's the reality of the world,” Wilkinson said.

Innovator of glass sculpture exhibited

By Andria Venezia
Lantern arts writer

The Franklin Park Conservatory presents Chihuly at the Conservatory, an exhibition which features stunning glass artwork of renowned artist Dale Chihuly among the various plantlife housed in the conservatory.

For the past 30 years, Dale Chihuly has worked diligently to raise the public's interest in glass as an art form, according to biographical information supplied by the Franklin Park Conservatory.

After studying glass both nationally and internationally, Chihuly co-founded Pilchuck Glass School in Washington in 1971. Since its inception, the school has established itself as an worldwide center for the development of glasswork as fine art.

Characteristic to Chihuly is his practice of infusing vibrant colors within each piece. He is best known for his large architectural installations, including works placed in Las Vegas' Bellagio as well as the posh Atlantis resort located in the Bahamas.

World-famous glass sculptor Dale Chihuly fills the large Franklin Park Conservatory with his vibrant, abstract glass creations.

lagio as well as the posh Atlantis resort located in the Bahamas.

"Chihuly has no restraints," said Tom Hawk, owner of Hawk Galleries. "He has the freedom of a child and a tremendous imagination and knowledge of color."

Art and plant lovers alike will truly enjoy the magnificent journey through the conservatory.

"I want my work to appear as if it came from nature, so that if someone found it they might believe it belonged there," Chihuly said to a representative of the Conservatory.

The Pacific Islands region of the conservatory features several floating glass balls of varying shapes and colors in a pond filled with vibrant-colored goldfish. While watching the movements in the pond, art and nature truly appear to be imitating one another.

The Red Sunset Tower, a structure that strikes awe in observers through its 17 feet of rise is overwhelming upon first sight. Red, yellow and orange coils, accented by natural light, appear to be exploding from the earth.

In the Himalayans area, bright blue, yellow, green and red flower-shaped glass figures are arranged atop a thatched roof. As the sunlight shines through the artwork, the colorful display is breathtaking. The sounds of flowing water add to the peace and serenity of the magnificent exhibit.

Chihuly's first major glasshouse exhibition, hosted by the Garfield Park Conservatory in Chicago, was a remarkable success.

"We are thrilled to be chosen as the second Conservatory to showcase the spectacular glass sculptures of Dale Chihuly," said Paul Redman, conservatory executive director.

"The selection of Columbus, and the Conservatory, is a testimony to the vibrancy of our city and the quality of the Franklin Park Conservatory," Redman said.

Jennifer Lewis, a representative of the Chihuly team, said Chihuly is excited about being featured at the Conservatory because he has always been fond of Columbus.

After much deliberation, the conservatory board chose not to raise admissions prices during the Chihuly exhibit. They hope the decision opens availability to Columbus citizens.

The exhibit runs through March 21, 2004. More information regarding Chihuly's exhibition can be found at www.fpconservatory.org.

One of Chihuly's wilder creations is a fluorescent-colored glass tower that emanates flailing tendrils.

Lord dork masters unite

By Lindsey Nock
Lantern arts writer
10.20.03

It's time to reach way down into the dark abyss of the human psyche and embrace that inner dork. Not to fear, the inner dork will enjoy it; it's probably the most action it's seen in years.

Role playing games have enjoyed a massive cult following for decades, and there are more varieties of role playing and card games than any one person should ever want to know about.

"They have role playing games for everything. Movies, TV shows—they actually have pen and paper role playing games for video games," said Dungeonmaster Andy Graves, a Dungeon and Dragons player for more than 15 years.

For those who do not possess an inner dork and need the concept explained to them, it goes something like this: Remember being four years old and getting together with other little four-year-olds to play games like "Cops and Robbers" and "House"?

Add 20 years of life, a variable smorgasbord of fantasy creatures who wish to inflict horrible pain upon a character, a few like-minded individuals with their Friday nights free and there it is: time to party.

"The best way I can explain it is like a sitcom. There is a permanent cast and the writers introduce different characters every week. The situations change every time," Graves said.

The gamemaster of the role-playing game makes up a situation and the players react.

"I'm like the writer, director and extras," Graves said

Most react verbally and commit actions through pen and paper, although every interest group has a faction of fanatics.

"There are people who actually dress up and go out into the woods and play," Graves said, "Those people are bizarre."

Bizarre indeed, Dungeonmaster.

"All role playing games have similar types of characters," said Chris Jones, an employee at The Guard Tower, a wonderland for gamers and hotbed for gaming.

"You have your basic fighter, a healer type and someone of high intelligence. The basic concepts they all draw from magic," Jones said.

The Guard Tower is like a portal to an alternate universe, one in which words such as "the Scaven,"

"Orcs" and "halflings" weasel their way into everyday vernacular.

It is divided into two areas: the retail area where gamers can buy cards, little figurines and rule books for their game of choice; and a large gaming room where gamers can meet and play in a neutral location.

"People who game can come and meet other people who game and get to know them. It's really social," Jones said.

Most gamers acknowledge that society frowns upon grown-ups playing pretend and are comfortable with their positions on the outskirts, a few even embrace it.

"Oh, I'm a dork for sure," said Jamie Whitmer, D&D player for 12 years, "You'll have that, though."

Those who are not one with their dorkdom project the label onto other gamers.

"People that play role playing games are a little more odd," said Trevor Patten, a 21-year-old Columbus resident and "Magic: The Gathering" player for 11 years.

"It's not really role playing. Card games are a different dimension, but from the same basic idea," Patten said.

Because of the popularity of the "Lord of the Rings" movies, which provide the basis for some of the games, the stigma associated with role playing is beginning to lift. But Graves said there are some people that are just way too into their role playing games.

"There are people who play that make me embarrassed to play it," he said.

Aside from being ostracized from society, certain types of gamers face financial obstacles.

Cards for games of this sort can become very expensive very quickly.

"We call it 'Cardboard Crack,'" said Chris Rich, a first-year pharmacy student at OSU.

Patten estimated he has $4,000 worth of "Magic" cards.

"I don't put any new money into it," Patten said.

Most card gamers will buy one set of cards, and when a new set of cards come out, they sell their old cards on eBay and purchase an entire new set.

"One card, the Black Lotus, is worth $800-2,000," Patten said. "It's not even all that cool. It's just old and rare."

Even the role playing games can get pricey. The entire collection of D&D books would cost around $800.

Gamers claim that the addictive nature and expense keep them from other nasty habits.

"Kids who play get their allowance and think 'I could buy pot or cigarettes, or I could spend the money on cards. I want the cards,'" Patten said.

Mark Middleton, a 25-year player of "D&D" and card-carrying member of the Role Playing Gamers Association, agreed with Patten's view.

"I used to play with a couple of guys who smoked pot, and the games took forever and were boring," Middleton said, "It's just too intellectual to do that sort of thing."

Former 'Real Worlder' makes due

By Todd LaPlace
Lantern news editor

This is the true story of one model, picked to live in a house and have his life taped, to find out what happens when a regular person is thrust into celebrity status.

In 1992, Eric Nies was just another struggling New York model/actor until he joined the cast of a new reality television show.

"I went to New York with some people that I knew and I started doing some modeling and some commercials," Nies said. "The Real World" just happened to be another casting.

Having just finished its 13th season, "The Real World" has become one of MTV's staple programs, but Nies, 32, said the show isn't as glamorous as it may seem.

"You get paid very minimal money up front. You get about $4,000," he said. "Because it's cable, there's no union in place, so you don't get paid residuals or royalties. There's millions of people out there that think all these kids on TV are millionaires but we don't make any money."

"So for the last five years, I've been thinking to myself, 'What's stopping all of us from getting together and doing our own show?'" Nies said.

Joined by "Real World" vets "Puck" Rainey (San Francisco), Jaime Murray (New Orleans), Ruthie Alcaide (Hawaii) and "Road Rules" vet Rachel Robinson (Campus Crawl), Nies made his own documentary, "The Road to Reality," available through www.tockstardvd.com.

"The whole idea was we wanted to show the fans of the ("Real World") what it's like to be with the fans of the show," he said. "So we went down to Miami with no money—this was the whole concept—and now that we're pseudo-celebrities, let's see how much money we can make just by booking clubs or giving massages on the beach."

But Nies hasn't completely turned against MTV. He's rejoining other former housemates on another edition of "The Real World/Road Rules Challenge," which was filmed in October. Nies has appeared on three versions of the "Challenge" so far; "The Road Rules All Stars," "Battle of the Sexes" and he hosted "Battle of the Seasons." But Nies said his involvement with MTV isn't just for his own benefit.

"The only reason I'm doing these other projects is to bring awareness to Moment of Hope," he said. A Moment of Hope, a charity co-founded by Nies, helps kids share their ideas with other kids around the world. Nies said the goal of the charity is to inspire kids to make the world a better place.

"I feel it's a responsibility of being a celebrity, being out there," he said. "These are the kids making sure that you get a paycheck. You just want to give back to the fans."

"My mom was a nursery school teacher, so I've always been around kids. I've always had this connection with young kids my whole life," he said.

Nies has also been involved with a number of other charitable organizations, including Prevention First, an organization that helps prevent substance abuse, and the Pedro Zamora Fund, a foundation named after a San Francisco housemate who lost his life to AIDS.

Nies also took part in Voices of Inspiration, a documentary and concert that is dedicated to the healing power of music. Nies connected with four kids that lost their parents in the Sept. 11 attacks, all of whom have used music to "bring closure to the tragic event that happened in their life."

In addition to these projects, Nies is also preparing for a potential second season of "Dance Fever," an ABC Family Channel update of the old Merv Griffin show. He is also releasing a series of jump rope workout videos titled "RopeSport," which bring his total number of videos to 10.

But despite his qualms over the payment of its stars, Nies said he knows he owes his fame to "The Real World." He said when the filming was finally over he knew he had done something worthwhile.

"It was unbelievable," he said. "In one day, we did interviews with every entertainment channel, every newspaper, every magazine—we even did interviews with The Wall Street Journal, and when The Wall Street Journal came in, I said, 'OK, this is going to be big.'"

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

The Lantern will not publish illegal advertising or the advertising of illegal products or services. The Lantern reserves the right to reject advertising that denigrates individuals, groups or organizations based on race, gender, nationality, ethnicity, religion, mental or physical capacity, veteran's status, age or sexual orientation. The Lantern Business Manager will refer questionable advertising to the Publications Committee of the School of Journalism and Communication. The committee will recommend a decision on whether to publish the advertising to the Director of the school.

- Complete name, address and telephone number for each advertiser is required.
- Copy must be furnished by noon three days before publication, except for special publications whose deadlines will be announced.
- An advertisement is required to occupy at least as many inches in height as columns in width. Any advertisement exceeding 18 inches in height will be considered a "full column" (21 inches) advertisement and charged accordingly.
- Make-goods and adjustments will be considered for those advertisements only where errors occur in (a) business or group name, address, or phone number, (b) item price or (c) date, time or place of event. The error must be solely the fault of the Lantern. Adjustments will not exceed the cost of the advertisement and will be based on the portion of the advertisement nullified by the error. Minor spelling errors will not qualify for adjustment. Complaints must be registered with the Business Manager within 45 days of publication to qualify; otherwise the advertiser accepts full responsibility.
- Guaranteed position is sold at the Business Manager's discretion.
- A composition charge may apply to any changes, revisions or cancellations made after deadline.
- No proof will be furnished for any advertisement received after deadline or for an ad smaller than seven column inches.
- If the Lantern finds it necessary to stop contracted advertising because of nonpayment, the advertising agreement will be violated and the advertiser subject to a "re-bill" fee.
- The Lantern reserves the right to require prepayment for advertising, or to reject advertising, if the advertiser is delinquent in payment, or if the advertiser's credit is impaired. Advertisers must prepay all advertising until a satisfactory credit rating with the Lantern is established. A certified check or money order is required for out-of-town advertisers.
- Contract advertisers will furnish the Lantern with a "rate-holder" ad meeting contract minimums for use in any contract period for which the advertiser does not provide an ad.
- A tearsheet will be furnished for all display advertising run in the Lantern. Additional tearsheets are available (limit 15) provided the advertiser requests them from the Lantern office prior to publication.
- The advertiser agrees to indemnify and hold harmless the Ohio State University, its Board of Trustees and its officers, agents and employees from and against any and all loss, cost and expense, including reasonable attorney fees, resulting from the publication by the Lantern of the advertiser's advertisement.
- Advertisers in the Lantern agree that they will not represent themselves in any way as being endorsed by the Ohio State University.
- A mail-order advertiser is required to submit a sample "proof-of-product" prior to publication.
- Advertisers must request the return of their original ad materials; the Lantern will dispose of such materials 60 days after their first publication.

Butt medicine defies the mind

I recently found an unopened jar of suppositories in my new house.

They were hidden in the depths of my bathroom pantry, left behind by former tenants who bought the Fleet- brand glycerin suppositories, shelved them and, luckily, never needed to open the jar.

So there they sat until my roommate came across the jar and disturbed their slumber.

Now they reside on my desk, causing me anxiety.

What do I do with 50 "adult" suppositories?

Maybe I should keep them around for casual — hopefully occasional — usage.

According to the jar, the Fleet-brand suppositories provide "fast, gentle, effective relief."

Equally impressive, Fleet touts itself as the "most trusted name in laxatives."

I generally do not experience "situations" that would require the use of any type of suppository, but they do "generally produce a bowel movement in 15 minutes to one hour."

A bit vague, but not bad. When I do happen to be constipated I don't want to be stuck waiting around for the Immodium A-D to kick in. I want to address the problem at the source, I think, and a glycerin suppository may be just the way one could go about doing that.

My worries, in part, stem from the directions, which read, "Insert suppository well up into rectum."

Not being wholly familiar with inserting things there, I feel worried about the actual distance of "well up." Are we talking finger length? Is it possible to acquire an actual distance definition?

I'd be afraid of not pushing the thing far enough, out of said anxiety, and then what do I do when I am trying to get on with my day and the shallowness of the suppository's placement causes it to become dislodged and to float freely amongst my nether regions?

What am I supposed to do with the somewhat used suppository then? Should I be expected to put it back in place, or do I discard it and reach for a new one, attempting to learn from my earlier placement mistakes?

All of this suppository worry has led me to think about other uses for the jar of greasy, translucent cones.

My house on Highland Avenue is subdivided several different ways. As a result, there is a central mailbox system on the front porch and each respective apartment has an individual lockbox for their postal articles.

As a sign of goodwill to my neighbors, I think it a might be a kind gesture to set the jar of suppositories atop the mailbox unit. Neighbors experiencing an unexpected bout of constipation could thus seek rectum relief as they pick up the day's mail. Double score.

Although, a greedy neighbor could ruin my communal goodwill by swiping the jar of suppositories. Then everyone loses. Except of course the thief who will have his constipation needs addressed for quite sometime.

Instead of kindness, maybe the focus should fall on practical joking. Those who throw house parties should beware. Fleet-brand suppositories could turn up at your next packed soiree; jar open, sitting prominently on the sink. Perhaps a few glycerin inserts will be scattered about for extra effect. Many a muted giggle will follow as individuals file in and out of your lavatory, laughing at a supposed constipated soul who just might be carrying a suppository in their system at that very moment.

Oh, I guess the possibilities are endless for Fleet's constipation cure-all. The seemingly moldable suppository could make for my first foray into conceptual sculpture production. I will press those gelatin-like cones into one and mold them to the likeness of Richard Dreyfuss or maybe an abstract protest against current U.S. policy in Cuba.

In thinking of my colleagues, many a Lantern editor could be well-served to have an emergency suppository within quick grasp. I could be the hero of the newsroom. Hooray.

For now, though, I think the jar will be best suited to rest upon my desk, and I will just play the part of provider. Advice for use is not for the faint of heart, nor the inexperienced, both of which I could be labeled.
