Court firm on school funding

Ohio legislature must still come up with 'complete and systematic overhaul'

By Anthony Lima
Lantern staff writer

Ohio's system of school funding still can't be unconstitutional, can it? Well, it is — and it might not become constitutional anytime soon.

Friday's decision and the Dec. 12 school funding ruling — that any further litigation has been blocked — were nothing groundbreaking.

Instead, these were an affirmation of three other similar rulings in a span of five years. The court's latest decision effectively ended the 11-year-old DeRolph case by declaring Ohio's heavy reliance on property taxes unconstitutional. After the decisions were made, both times Gov. Bob Taft declared "The DeRolph case is over."

Or was it?

The Supreme Court's past decisions were supposed to precipitate a "complete and systematic overhaul" of Ohio's school funding system. Since these decisions, the degree of "overhaul" has been thoroughly debated.

Bill Phillis, executive director of the Ohio Coalition for Equity and Adequacy of School Funding, is far from content with the lawmakers and their attempts at a new system.

"I am concerned that the governor and legislature are not being held accountable for not complying with the court orders," Phillis said. "The economical distance between the poor and affluent school districts in this state is incredulous."

In the court's December decision, it surrendered its jurisdiction — allowing the plaintiffs (DeRolph and a consortium of Ohio school districts) to re-open litigation in their original county of filing.

History

On May 9, 1991, lead plaintiff Nathan DeRolph filed a lawsuit in Perry County on behalf of five other school districts. Three years later, Judge Linton D. Lewis ruled Ohio's school funding system unconstitutional.

al. After mountains of appeals between the state and the local courts, Lewis' decision was overturned on the grounds the legislature, not the courts, should determine the degree of school assistance.

In 1995, Phillis and his group, the Ohio Coalition for Equity and Adequacy of School Funding, became involved. The coalition was then made up of more than 500 Ohio school districts. The case came to a temporary conclusion in March of

SARS-free families welcome at graduation

By Angela Mitchell

Spring commencement could attract as many as 35,000 visitors to Ohio State's campus, including people from SARS-infected regions — providing they show no traces of the disease.

This is one of several new policy guidelines put in place by university officials to prevent a possible outbreak of severe acute respiratory syndrome.

"With the nature of the disease, if someone's ill, they're not going to want to come to campus, let alone leave the house," said Ted W. Grace, director of Wilce Student Health Services.

Grace said the university is not discouraging relatives from SARS-infected regions from coming to graduation June 13.

President Karen A. Holbrook, along with members of the university cabinet approved the policy on Wednesday, after they received recommendations from the SARS advisory group which included representatives from Student Health Services, Student Affairs, Residence Life and the Office of International Education.

"We had been discussing a policy ever since the SARS issue evolved," said OSU spokeswoman, Elizabeth Conlisk.

Grace, also a member of the advisory group, said the university policy was structured around guidelines from the Centers for Disease Control.

"We elected not to restrict anyone from coming to the university. We just followed CDC guidelines," Grace said.

According to the CDC Web site, the center does not recommend canceling or postponing classes that will include people traveling to the United States from areas with SARS.

However, the major reason the university opted not to ban visitors from SARS-infected regions is because travelers from affected areas must undergo a screening for the virus both within the affected country and again upon entry to the United States.

"They (health officials) don't think we need to do any additional screenings on campus. We're not isolating people who don't show symptoms and aren't even ill," Grace said.

Grace said airport screenings consist of a physical examination and a series of questions.

"At the airport, they check the passengers' temperatures (usually with an ear thermometer), ask them if they have any respiratory symptoms and maybe listen to their chest. After they screen people, they give them a list of SARS symptoms," Grace said.

Anyone who is infected is asked to seek immediate health care.

However, Port Columbus International Airport isn't screening for SARS.

"We don't have any direct flights from SARS-infected regions, said Angie Neal, spokeswoman for Port Columbus International Airport. Neal also said employees would do screening if the airport had direct flights.

As part of the new policy, Ohio State also said it will not fund travel for faculty, staff or students to SARS-infected countries that have travel advisories.

"We have members that travel regularly to China and Mongolia and have ongoing research in those areas, but we don't think it's safe," Grace said.

China, the country where the disease originated, has two travel advisories in Hong Kong and Taiwan.

RIAA continues to fight piracy

"What the f--- do you think you're doing!"

Fans downloading Madonna tracks on person-to-person file sharing networks were berated by the singer after attempting to play the song "American Life" from her new album. The queen of pop's extreme lash-out fueled the already raging debate of whether programmers should be held responsible for Internet piracy.

On April 25, U.S. District Judge Stephen Wilson denied requests to shut down file-sharing programs Grokster and Morpheus. The judgment was a stark contrast to previous rulings in cases involving Napster and Verizon Communications.

Grokster President Wayne Rosso recognizes that copyright infringement is illegal and in no way condones it. He believes, however, their responsibility for illegal exchanges is "zero."

"I think if you stop any student on campus and pulled them aside they would say the record companies deserve what they get," he said.

Kairsten Thies, a senior in computer science, agrees with Rosso.

More than an excellent adventure for Keanu

"The Matrix Reloaded" had the highest grossing box office opening for an R-rated movie this weekend. From Friday through yesterday, it brought in an estimated $93.3 million, beating out 2001's "Hannibal." That total was also good enough to have the second highest opening for any movie, behind last year's "Spiderman." Since its opening on Wednesday, "The Matrix Reloaded" has brought in an estimated $135.8 million.

'OSU Idol' winner awarded studio time

By Traci Beck

Although no one named Simon or Paula was there to judge, the nerves still ran high when a group of singers showcased their talent at the first annual OSU Idol competition.

Brandon Toler, a sophomore in hospitality management, took the title of OSU Idol by singing N'Sync's "Gone."

"I appreciate it," Toler said while accepting his win. "Thanks to everybody and to all my fellow singers up here."

Brandon was one of 13 students who displayed their singing ability Friday evening on the West Lawn of the Ohio Union. All were competing for a 10-hour recording session from PowerPlant Recording Company, valued at $3,000.

Toler has been singing in church since the age of 8, and said his plan is to make a demo and see where it leads.

"I'm going to try this PowerPlant thing out and see how it goes," he said. "One of my friends produces and writes. I'll get together with him and see what we can do."

Toler said he will compete in the contest next year if he is able.

Contestants were judged on a 1 to 5 scale with five being the best in the areas of appearance, performance, technique and audience score.

Judges included members of The Argument, a band that played sets before and after the winner was announced.

"We're happy to be a part of this," said Matt Warder, guitarist of The Argument and judge. "We love Columbus and Ohio State, and we're really happy to be a part of the festivities."

Warder said he thought the contest was very well organized and gives credit to those who were involved in the making of it.

"I thought the contestants showed considerable poise and talent during their performances, and drew from a really diverse repertoire," he said.

None of the judges made negative comments or criticisms like Simon Cowell does on American Idol.

"We wanted to make a positive impact on the university and make a positive experience for the contestants," said Alison Specht, a junior in agribusiness and co-creator of OSU Idol. "That's why we decided on no Simon-like judges."

The majority of the contestants were nervous before the show but said they would do it again next year.

"It was fun," said Abby Hartsock, an undecided freshman, who sang "The Right Kind of Wrong" by Leann Rimes. "I'm still shaking, but I would absolutely do it again."

After all the contestants had performed, they ended the show by gathering on stage to sing "Carmen Ohio."

Katie Najarian, a junior in human development and family science and also a resident adviser in Scott Hall, created OSU Idol with Specht, an RA in Norton Hall.

"We have been planning this since September," Najarian said. "We were going to have it during winter quarter but funding set us back."

Najarian said the biggest problem with the contest was financial support.

"We first needed money, then we had to reserve space. Then we needed concert equipment, which I know nothing about," she said.

Door-to-door effort gets good feedback

By Greg W. Moore
Lantern staff writer

OSU President Karen A. Holbrook joined faculty, Undergraduate Student Government and OSU students to participate in the "Invest Yourself" program yesterday.

Professors and administration were randomly paired with students to go door-to-door in the University District and talk with residents about the concerns and problems that accompany the pursuit of a college education.

"We're going out with the sole purpose of having a dialogue with students of the off-campus area," said USG president, Eddie Pauline.

"There are a lot of people that need more avenues to respond to all the one-way communication and this is going to be a great way to accomplish that," he said.

Holbrook was equally optimistic about the program and the advantageous circumstances that brought students and faculty together. Developing a sense of community pride and avoiding the disenfranchisement of students are goals Holbrook said she hopes to accomplish through the event.

"The point of this activity is to get a real understanding of how we can reach out across High Street and be Ohio State on the other side of campus," Holbrook said. "I'm enthusiastic of what will come of this."

Through the exchanges, residents voiced concerns of foreign teaching assistants, general-education courses, the difficulty of graduating on time, problems with landlords and rioting on campus.

"People are doing more bad things because they have less to do," said Glenn Johnston, a senior in psychological biology, in regards to the riots.

Each student and faculty pair was given a folder containing fliers, a pen and paper, on-line evaluation forms, contact numbers and a "what-if" sheet in the event communication with the residents became non-productive. The students and faculty had specific roles in the discussions: the student was to act as the moderator and introduce the program and the faculty member was there to ask and answer questions.

The tandem of USG president-elect, Mike Goodman, and professor of English, David Frantz, received a great deal of positive feedback from their conversations with residents on East Lane Avenue.

"It was a great experience to have the chance to hear different voices. I'm pleasantly surprised at the good things mentioned," Frantz said.

1997, when the Ohio Supreme Court ruled 4-3 that the General Assembly had a year to fix the method of school funding.

In the next year, lawmakers increased per-pupil spending and added more than $1 billion for school-building construction and repair — but failed to lessen the reliance on property taxes. In 1998, Lewis ruled the legislature had not complied with the Supreme Court's order for a "complete, systematic overhaul."

Voters turned down a one-cent sales tax increase in 1998 by nearly an 8-2 vote. The tax would have raised $1.1 billion per year for schools and property tax relief. Taft in 1999 signed Ohio's first budget devoted exclusively to education. The budget supplied a new funding formula — one that included a new provision: Parity aid. The newfound assistance provided poor districts extra funding to alleviate their disparities from the wealthier districts.

None of these measures were adequate for the Supreme Court, which ruled in 2001 the system remained unconstitutional, and it had to be fixed to a "thorough and efficient" standard.

Where we are now

The difference between last year's December ruling and its predecessors was the lack of guidance in the matter. The court offered no deadline and surrendered authority.

Since the decision, Attorney General Jim Petro, the courts and the original plaintiffs have been involved in a legal tug-of-war. In March, DeRolph attempted to reopen the case in the original county of Perry. Petro then countered that motion with an effort to cease all new proceedings.

The attorney general agrees with the governor on the status of the case.

"The courts have gone as far as the constitution will allow. It's now in the hands of the legislature," said Mark Gribben, Petro's spokesman. "The Perry County court has no authority to take further action on the matter."

To compound the problem further, Lewis has asked the Supreme Court for clarification of its Dec. 11 ruling. Responsibility over this case was still very much in question, until Friday's 5-2 court ruling — in which all litigation was halted. The general assembly now has complete autonomy to generate a fair system of school funding.

Phillis said the political dynamics in this state need to be altered before the legislature can come up with a viable solution. The Republican Party has a substantial edge in numbers, both in the House and Senate, thus putting the responsibility on that party to do something tangible with school funding.

"Given the circumstances, we have the choice to wait for the political makeup to change," Phillis said. "We would see some considerable progress if Ohio had real political balance."

A solution?

Michigan used to have something in common with Ohio: a disparate system of funding that left poor districts without an equitable flow of revenue. Just like Ohio, wealthier areas were able to raise far more money for their schools because their system relied too heavily on property taxes.

In an unprecedented move, Michigan lawmakers in 1994 voted to eliminate property taxes as a source of school funding. This left Michigan with effectively no school funding.

Lawmakers then signed off on "Proposal A," which rolled back property taxes significantly and increased the sales tax by two cents — something Ohio voters have already balked at. Michigan's schools are now funded almost 80 percent by the state, as opposed to Ohio (43 percent).

Under "Proposal A," each school is guaranteed a specific amount of funding per student. This year that total in Michigan is $6,700. Any of that money not raised by a district through property taxes is supplied by the state. Ohio's per-pupil spending is at $4,949.

Ohio has a long way to go

Ohio has many roadblocks in establishing an equitable method of school funding. Last year, Meigs Local School District in rural Ohio raised $1,190 per pupil, while suburban Solon School District in northeast Ohio amassed $7,585.

Lawmakers continue to debate the significance of funding in addressing such a disparity.

"We have a constitutional obligation to fund primary and secondary schools in Ohio," said Rep. Keith Faber, R-Celina. "I don't buy the premise of throwing money at our problems unless we have feasible solutions."

OSU political analyst Herb Asher said the state has done some to rectify the funding issue, but not enough.

"They (lawmakers) have put more money into education through instruction and facility," Asher said. "But the fundamental method of funding has not been changed. The poorer districts are still in a bind, and the state has not accomplished the court's mandate."

"I don't think networks are the problem," she said. "There is no way the RIAA can claim they made that much damage to artists."

The Recording Industry Association of America and Motion Picture Association of America, the groups which brought the case, are going to appeal Wilson's decision.

"We were certainly disappointed by the judge's opinion, but we are confident an appeals court will hold these networks responsible for copyright infringement," said Jonathan Lamy, spokesman for the RIAA.

The judge's affirmation that there is no question about the illegality of trading copyrighted material reassured Lamy.

"We believe these are networks who should be held responsible for the copyright infringement that occurs on their programs. They can control the piracy on their networks," Lamy said.

Despite the decision on the Grokster and Morpheus case, the case against another file sharing network, Kazaa, is still pending.

We are taking a three-tiered approach to discourage people from illegal downloads, Lamy said.

The first enforcement against networks and individuals has proved itself slow but effective. The students from Princeton University, Michigan Technological University and Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute settled suits filed by the RIAA in upwards of $17,500.

Education for users on file sharing programs has helped reach a wider range of people. The RIAA's Instant Messenger campaign utilized the IM function some programs offer to send out warnings about copyright infringement. They ran a public campaign and started a Web site, musicunited.org, to further educate people about copyrights.

Alternatives, such as Apple's iTunes store, allows users to download their music for a fee. Response to the pay sites has been mediocre at best.

"No business can be expected to compete against free," Lamy said.

Rosso is more than skeptical of the RIAA's intents.

"The RIAA is trying to mask harassment and scare tactics as educational," he said.

Grokster, along with others, are organizing to lobby on Capitol Hill. We will start to encourage users to make donations to continue the fight, Rosso said.

Homosexual RA bucks cliché

By Brian Duff
Lantern staff writer

A vision of the perfect resident adviser, Steve Lynch strolls into Barrett House; he smiles to a friend and makes small talk at the front desk. He warns that his room is a complete mess. It's not.

A half-hysterical resident looms with a red-marked term paper clutched in her grasp.

"I just really need to talk to you," she manages to say before Lynch stops her. "How about I come by around 11:30 tonight?" he says — an offer she gratefully accepts.

Lynch closes his door, sits down, and begins to speak frankly and eloquently about being homosexual. Never hedging a question, he contemplates long and hard, but answers every one.

"Every straight person asks 'when did you know?' and it's the hardest one to answer out of all of them," he said.

"You always know that you are different. The way that you are working inside is different than your friends," Lynch said. "So, I guess these feelings of being outside the norm have been there since I was a little kid."

During those formative years of early adolescence, Lynch was often difficult and withdrawn at home, said his mother, Christine Griswald.

"He had a terrible love of books. Family vacations were spent hollering at him to get his nose out of a book and see whatever beautiful place we had taken him," she said. "We would make him go play outside, and he would go read out there."

Upon his shelves sit books by Virginia Woolf, Salmon Rushdie and Roald Dahl, among others.

Suddenly he is energized, sitting bolt upright to argue the relative superiority of Woolf's "Mrs. Dalloway" over "To the Lighthouse." He speaks without condescension — articulating his point, providing evidence and concluding analytically, like any good English student should.

Lynch recently petitioned the English department to allow him to take more than 80 credit hours as an undergraduate, which will be a solid 16 classes in just more than three years.

"I've wanted to be a teacher since third grade," he said. "With each passing year I remember wanting to teach in that grade. Except for a brief lapse when I thought I was going to be on Broadway, teaching was it."

Lynch has been stuck on high school recently. He says high school students have an important sense of self, but they aren't hard like college kids yet.

For now, Lynch is content to study with Ohio State's English faculty, who he describes as "really, really amazing." Through his time as a work study employee in the English department, he has made many friends there.

"He is a great working, very organized, and pleasant young man," says Kim Summers, assistant to the chairman of the English department.

"He has good initiative and knows when to ask questions. He's funny, polite and helpful. We are so happy that he is here to help us," she says.

Although generally as enthusiastic as Summers described, Lynch has the ability to become reserved and moody at times.

"I see a lot of myself in Steve. Not like manic-depressive, but there is a tendency towards being quick to anger, as well as the really, really high times," Griswald said.

Lynch's sometimes introverted lifestyle leads him to reading and listening to music.

"I have, like, 400 CDs — not so much, right? I would like to have maybe 1,000," he said.

Bright Eye's Conon Oberst adorns his computer desktop, and Luscious Jackson and Ben Folds Five discs lay about. While his music collection is not unusual, the internal isolation it represents is part of what sets him apart from his community.

"The gay community serves a really important purpose. It gives a sense of community and group — and fulfills self esteem issues — but I just don't identify with those groups. I tried the dance scene, and Fusion [a gay student community on campus], but I never really felt comfortable in my skin, so I pulled myself out," Lynch said.

Much of his independence stems from experiences coming out in high school.

"My entire experience with coming out has been exactly opposite what I expected," he said.

During the beginning of Lynch's junior year of high school, he came to terms with the reality of his sexuality, telling his close friends and his mother.

"Everybody's coming out stories are similar in many ways, but I think mine was a lot less gradual than most. I can actually pick the day, and almost immediately after I accepted it, I was out," he says.

Lynch came out in an unbelievably positive atmosphere in his high school.

"High school was a good experience, but it was very atypical. The homophobia I had envisioned was not as violent or as angry as I had imagined," he says.

However, the acceptance he experienced with his peers was not always evident in his home life.

"It was bad with my mother. It simply wasn't talked about for a year. It was very gradual. There has been gradual acceptance since I began dating," he said.

"I was scared at the time," Griswald said. "When he told me, it was right around the time that Matthew (Shepard) was killed in Montana. I guess I just knew the kind of prejudice he was up against. He is sometimes outspoken, and there are people that are intolerant, that will never listen. I think Steve saw my fear as non-acceptance, but it really wasn't," Griswald said.

"It's hard to keep perspective about my parents. I've had 21 years to deal with what I am, while they have only had a couple," Lynch said.

Despite his relative independence from the gay community, Lynch still maintains ties to some of its programs. He is a regular panelist on the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Transgender Student Services mock game show "Guess the Straight Person," a fixture in resident hall common rooms around campus.

The game is fun and sometimes rowdy, but also educational. A handful of panelists tell a little about themselves — avoiding any description of their sexual orientation. From their descriptions, the audience attempts to guess which of the panelists is straight.

While Lynch does fit many of the stereotypes of gay men, he also bucks convention. He is slender, neat, and dresses well, but he shuns the club scene and tries not to become involved in the 'who's sleeping with who' gossip. "Stereotypes are really ridiculous."

How can you stereotype a community that includes gay scientists, gay punk rockers, gay African Americans," he said.

Lynch said stereotypes are a way to come to terms with your sexuality at first.

"You learn what it means to be gay, and find similarities," he says. "It's the same process that straights go through, just much later and more gradual."

Travel alerts have been issued for Singapore and Toronto by the CDC.

Contrary to the University of California at Berkeley's decision to cancel its summer program for international students from China, OSU will continue to enroll international students from affected areas for both summer and fall quarter.

The university will also inform incoming freshmen and international students about SARS throughout the summer at orientation sessions and international student health screenings.

Even so, some students do not think the university is doing enough. "It seems like they could do more," said Tia Bacon, a graduating senior in sociology, said she does not support the university's decision.

"It's an epidemic and OSU being one of the largest schools, you'd think they would be more proactive," she said.

Grace said since the travel advisories vary on a daily basis, the university policy will remain throughout the summer and will be re-analyzed during fall quarter.

According to the CDC, the disease which is spread by close person-to-person contact with an infected person — including kissing, sharing eating or drinking utensils, coughing and sneezing — has resulted in 7,761 cumulative cases and 623 deaths worldwide.

Allison, a senior in fine arts, said he loves doing any kind of concert and was happy to help.

"Katie had never done anything like this, so I took over the technical side of things and she did the pre-planning," he said.

Along with OUAB, other sponsors included the Late Night Activities Board, Undergraduate Student Government, The Coca-Cola Company and CD 101.

Specht said they decided to base the auditions and competition in the residential halls.

"North, South and West dorms were all represented in the contest," she said.

Next year the plan is to hold auditions for the entire campus and not just the residence halls, Najarian said.

"We want to make this an annual thing like the Big Free Concert, and hopefully it will grow more each year," she said.

WHO strives to expand its power

The World Health Organization, the U.N. agency which has encountered so much interference in trying to contain the global outbreak of the SARS epidemic, is trying to obtain more power to fight diseases in the future.

During the WHO's annual meeting in Geneva beginning today, the World Health Assembly — WHO's governing body — will consider various revisions which could improve the WHO's power and efficiency.

One change would increase the evidence WHO could use in identifying health threats. WHO can act only on information from a U.N. member's ministry of health, a problem exemplified by China, which did not confirm SARS until months after it began. Allowable sources could expand to "news stories ... Doctors Without Borders and the Red Cross and WHO-affiliated scientific laboratories," according to the Washington Post.

Another change could give WHO authority to judge the effectiveness of nations' countermeasures against disease, and possibly utilize inspections by WHO teams. Also, the proposal would allow WHO to create a formal system for issuing international health alerts. WHO's only means of alerting countries of the SARS epidemic was through a news conference.

Though the proposal would seem to increase power for the United Nations, it should be touted more as a possibly massive increase in the world's ability to prepare for, react more quickly to and better understand new diseases. As was evident in other outbreaks such as AIDS, lack of uniform methods of gaining and sending out information, as well as governmental interference, can severely add to the snowball effect of an outbreak of disease.

There are various problems plaguing the possibility of the WHO gaining these powers, however. Parts of the proposal — such as superseding governments' assessments of disease and determining the effectiveness of countries' countermeasures — would subtract from nations' sovereignty, a value protected by most countries and respected by the United Nations.

Also, as was evident in the repercussions of SARS-related travel advisories, the WHO's alerts can have a crippling economic impact on tourism, travel and trade — meaning increased power of the WHO could lead to politicization, allowing the WHO to dangle unnecessary travel warnings as political weight in unrelated U.N. disputes.

However, on the whole the WHO has acted responsibly when dealing with epidemics, and its motives appear to be curing and prevention, not political manipulation. Also, sovereignty, though always protected, often proves problematic in dealing with outbreaks because of a dangerous mix of governmental optimism of their country's ability to find a cure and withholding information vital to the public in hopes of preventing panic.

While not supporting an increase in power of a global organization over nations' sovereignty, the need for speed and effectiveness in defeating disease is critical to saving countless lives. If WHO can pass measures countering an individual nation's ability to aide disease through irresponsibility, it should do so as soon as possible.

In a man's world

Sorenstam belongs in PGA Tour

On Thursday, LPGA star Annika Sorenstam will compete in the Bank of America Colonial tournament on the PGA Tour.

Sorenstam will be the first woman to play in a PGA tournament since Babe Zaharias competed in the Los Angeles Open in 1945.

A media frenzy has surrounded this tournament, and thankfully little has been heard from Martha Burke.

Vijay Singh, a PGA pro, has blasted the PGA and Sorenstam for her participation in this weekend's tournament.

Around the country, people are expressing their opinions on the matter.

Sorenstam should be allowed to compete in the Colonial.

Critics say her participation in the tournament is simply a public relations move by the PGA. Fanning this is that Sorenstam was invited to play and didn't qualify like the other players.

Sorenstam has proven herself on the LPGA tour. She has every right to participate in the Colonial. If she flops this weekend, it will be the end of the women's movement into golf for now. If she succeeds, she will have proven herself as able to compete with men.

Golf isn't like basketball or baseball or any other sport with a women's equivalent. There is no physical contact in golf; it's a pure skill sport.

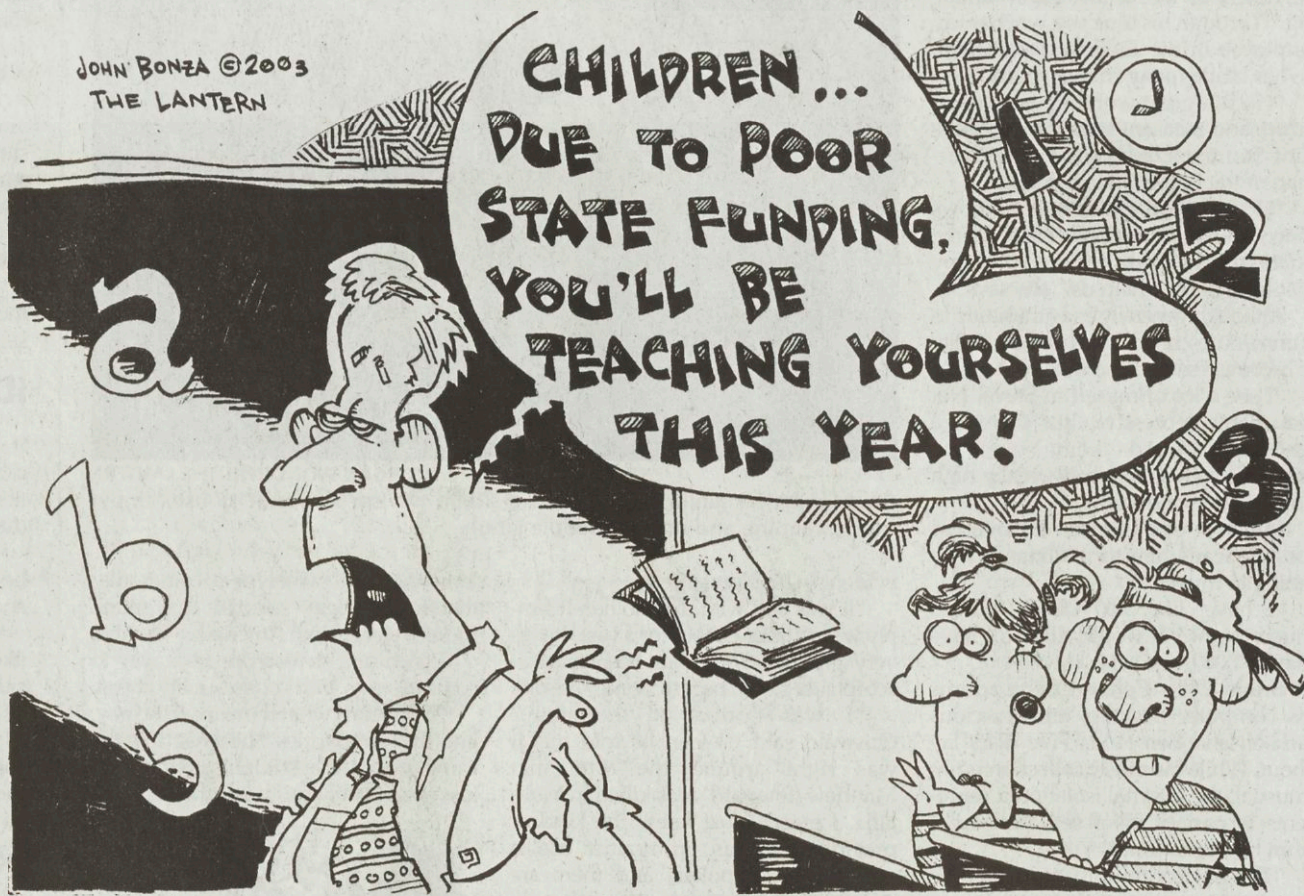

If Sorenstam thinks her skills are good enough to compete with the men, let her do so.

In a sport like golf, the LPGA should be looked at as a minor league. If a woman is good enough that she can step up and succeed on the largest stage in the golf world, then professional golf is better for it.

Tour pros and bellyachers in America have said Sorenstam has caused a PGA pro to lose his spot in the tournament. Big deal. Maybe this will be an incentive for the men to raise their level of play so they don't have to constantly look over their shoulders at the women.

Golf offers a unique opportunity in sports for women to prove they can compete. None of the contact sports provide this possibility. Sorenstam has a chance to do something rare: beat the best men in the world at their own game. Best of luck, Anna.

U.S. has own nuclear no-nos

I have to give credit to Karl Rove, President Bush's political strategist. Rove has done a spectacular job of changing the public's opinion on our president.

While some say Bush is out of touch with average Americans, many feel he is a man full of composure and values. This is quite amazing, considering Bush has allowed the murder of Americans. While some people don't care that we've killed innocent Iraqis, everyone should be concerned that Bush has allowed the Pentagon to kill U.S. soldiers.

The primary reason for the war in Iraq was believing Saddam Hussein possessed weapons of mass destruction. If we want to find weapons of mass destruction in Iraq, we don't need to hunt down the weapons we gave him in the '80s. All we have to do is look at the missiles and bullets on our combat planes. Many of our munitions have depleted uranium tips.

Depleted uranium is essentially the waste product that comes from spent fuel in nuclear reactors. As with any type of uranium, it is highly toxic and lethal. It didn't take scientists long to realize the combustion temperature of depleted uranium was extremely high. In fact, depleted uranium gets so hot that it can penetrate through any type of metal. This obviously would be a huge asset to any military operation — the United States has been using depleted uranium for years.

It was extensively used during the Gulf War and was used heavily throughout the decade in other conflicts. While there were public outcry for a while, they were quickly rebuffed by the government which continued to say depleted uranium had no long-term health effects. However, as early as 1991, internal memos mentioned the consequences of depleted uranium should be suppressed, otherwise the public outcry may have forced the military to stop using these weapons.

It's horrifying that the Pentagon continues to use these weapons. Whenever a depleted uranium shell combusts, it kicks up a cloud of U-238 dust that can easily be lodged inside anyone's lungs. Bush keeps droning on about how this war was to give the Iraqi people a chance at democracy. He doesn't mention that he's leaving them a country that has essentially become a radioactive wasteland. In the years after the Gulf War, there were thousands of Iraqi babies born with defects and mutations. They're essentially letting the U.S. government mutate their DNA in order to get freedom.

The use of depleted uranium in the latest conflict in Iraq was even more substantial. Thousands of Iraqis will die due to the radioactive components spewed everywhere. Aside from the Iraqis, we have to worry about the horrendous effects that our own forces faced.

While some of us have been against the war, it's fair to say that we all support the men and women in our armed forces. Bush never misses an opportunity to congratulate them. They deserve our gratitude because many have risked their lives.

However, when we see footage of U.S. soldiers celebrating while driving past wrecked buildings or tanks, we are inadvertently watching these men die. They're breathing in radioactive material that will be in Iraq for over the next 4.5 billion years.

Soldiers are facing some of the ailments that their predecessors faced in Gulf War. While it's outrageous that these soldiers must be subjected to toxic materials, it's more egregious that the government doesn't want to admit depleted uranium is dangerous. The Pentagon is prioritizing the "gee-whiz factor" of depleted uranium weapons like bunker busters over the lives of our military force.

Companies like Alliant Techsystems are gaining profits while thousands of people must suffer the long-term effects of radiation exposure because of the flagrant judgments of our top military leaders. The White House has been gleeful at the small amount of U.S. casualties. However, the people who have died so far will be a small fraction of those who will suffer and die in the coming years because of their exposure of depleted uranium.

Bush talks about terrorists who have no regard for human life and are set on killing Americans. It's obvious some people in Washington have the same disregard for human life.

It may seem unfair that I'm lashing out against Bush for the depleted uranium problem, especially when the last two administrations have been aware of the problems with depleted uranium. However, Bush is different from Clinton and even his own father; he stresses morals and ethics more than any recent president. He should rise to the occasion and set an example by taking the initiative to condemn these atrocious weapons and make sure they're not used by Americans ever again.

Undeserving live the dream

I always thought people needed to work hard to achieve success. After all, that is the basis of the American dream. Individuals must try to construct their own dreams with their own hands.

The American dream means allowing the poor and blue-colored workers who work each day at a low-paying, menial-labor jobs, the opportunity to become whoever they want to be. Perhaps a construction manager might notice a diligent worker one day and offer him the chance at management. From there, the sky is the limit.

The classic example is John D. Rockefeller, who became one of the most wealthy and prominent businessmen in New York City. Although he became the embodiment of the word "tycoon," Rockefeller was born into a modest family. Through shrewd business dealings, taking risks and grabbing opportunities, the well-known businessman was able to build himself a fortune.

However, a half a century later, the new way to the American dream has changed dramatically. Nowadays, people don't need to work hard. They don't need to sweat and toil for every inch of the essence of success.

People really just need to know the difference between right and wrong. Then, they actually need to commit the wrong. Afterwards, it's an easy trip to the fast lane.

If anyone disagrees, all he or she needs to do is ask Jayson Blair. Anyone would have loved to be in Blair's shoes. He was only in his 20s, but he had already been working for the New York Times for four years. The editors sent him out on major assignments such as writing stories on the Washington, D.C., sniper and the War on Iraq.

If things had gone as planned, Blair could have been promoted to editor, he could have joined an even better newspaper (although the New York Times is already one of the best) or he could have gone off to do other productive jobs.

However, there came "the rub," as Shakespeare would like to say. Blair's editor became confused. He just couldn't understand it. How could Blair be reporting on the War in Iraq — dodging bullets and trying to stay out of harm's way — if he was actually sitting at home in his recliner, with a mouthful of popcorn and a New York Knicks game on the TV.

Blair was creating his own stories from home. He didn't think being on location was an important part of trying to write the article. If he made up false quotes and false descriptions, everything would be fantastic. The public wouldn't care.

Although fired from his job, Blair won't really have any trouble finding a job because he has followed the path to the American dream. He has done what is professionally considered to be a huge faux pas, and now he will be rewarded. In fact, things are looking bright for Blair's future. He was offered a book deal by a major book publishing company to write about his eventful life.

Blair is not the only one. There's also O.J. Simpson. Simpson may have been tried for the death of his wife in a civil trial, and he may be seen by some people as a criminal, but that has not stopped the movie producers, directors screen writers and book publishers. As soon as the trial finished, people were on Simpson's doorstep, ringing the doorbell and ready to make a few deals. The aroma of crime, punishment and guilt just reeks of dollar signs for all of Hollywood.

I wish we were back in the old days when people actually did respectable and dignified work to reach the top of the hill. It's sad when undeserving, lazy people receive the chance to make millions, while the father who works two jobs a day just to feed the children doesn't have a chance.

YOUR VIEWS

Columnist off base on Israeli conflict

I am writing in order to respond to Vijay Ramanavarapu's recent reflections upon the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. This opinion piece relied upon a series of statements that are both uninformed and offensive. His commentary, while undoubtedly good-intentioned, reflects the type of misinformation that has inspired the recent dramas on The Oval.

Ramanavarapu argued that Jewish people have no right to their own country as "Jews can live in numerous countries around the world where they will be safer and have a more stable environment." I wondered exactly which countries he had in mind when writing this article. Certainly he could not have meant the former Soviet Union, because Russian Jewish refugees have flooded the United States and Israel since the mid '80s in an effort to escape an undying legacy of anti-Semitism.

The current state of Western Europe is neither stable nor secure for Jews. In France alone, 500 anti-Semitic incidents were reported just from Sept. 9, 2000, through early April 2002. To use another example, Germany has experienced a rising wave of neo-Nazism. In the first 10 months of 2000, 11,752 right-wing extremist crimes were reported, including attacks against Jews and foreigners. Were I not limited by space, I could supply you with pages of similar information, all of which prove that in 2003, anti-Semitism thrives around the globe.

Ramanavarapu also censured Israel for failing to cultivate warmer relationships with neighboring countries. "Although it is surrounded by countries that loathe its presence, Israel has played hardball from day one and hasn't truly tried to adapt with its neighbors," he said.

Is this statement not inherently contradictory? Since 1948, Israel has faced war after war with countries that are determined to end its existence. Should Israelis have "adapted" with Syria, Iraq, Lebanon, Transjordan and Egypt on May 14, 1948, when these countries banned together to eradicate the Jewish state the same day it had been declared? And how were they to adapt to such attitudes as that of President Abdul Rahman Aref of Iraq, who declared on the eve of the Six Days War in 1967, "The existence of Israel is an error which must be rectified ... Our goal is to wipe Israel off the map?"

What about the surprise Egyptian-Syrian attack of Oct. 6, 1973, that commenced the Yom Kippur War — could the Israelis have combated this through more congenial foreign relations? In such a climate of hostility, is not constant vigilance the only option?

Finally, I want to address the most disturbing of Ramanavarapu's claims — that "Israel and her army is imposing the same grief and sanctions on Palestinians that Hitler imposed on Jews in the 1930s and '40s." This irresponsible statement insults not only every Israeli, every supporter of Israel and every victim of the Holocaust, but also everyone with a proper respect for history.

First, the comparison would be ludicrous were it not so appalling. The differences between the attempted genocide of an entire people and a war in which both sides suffer casualties, albeit tragically, are numerous. Second, the Holocaust is not a metaphor for the convenience of popular political rhetoric. Those far more eloquent than I have expressed the singularity of this event and thus its defiance of written description. To employ it casually is a cheap ploy to arouse emotions without effectively addressing the actual situation at hand.

Many Americans possess emotional and familial, as well as political ties with both Israelis and Palestinians. However, I would implore anyone who wishes to comprehend the current conflicts in the Middle East, and certainly anyone who plans to publish or publicly protest their opinions, to learn the history of this region as well as the stakes involved for all sides. It will be impossible for Ohio State students to participate in any informed dialogue if we fail to challenge such blatant untruths as those in Ramanavarapu's article.

Letterman actually the one who stinks

I normally don't go out of my way to rag on kids, but Jordan Gentile is out of his mind. In his column "Accept it folks: Conan stinks," the self-described "comedy connoisseur" demonstrates that he not only doesn't know what's funny, but that he likely has never even seen "Late Night With Conan O'Brien."

"Conan" was a television staple for me during my time at Ohio State. Who can forget Oldy Olsen, Pimp-Bot or the Masturbating Bear? Certainly no one with a sense of humor. True, Conan's approach to comedy can be far from subtle at times, but at least he isn't phoning his show in the way Gentile's beloved Letterman does.

A typical Letterman show features Dave latching on to some stupid phrase early on and beating it to death for an hour. This just isn't funny, and if it were, then why has Jay Leno (arguably the least funny person on the planet) consistently beaten Dave in the Nielsen ratings for the past seven years?

Oh, it's on, Gentile. Your rant on Conan has opened the floodgates. May your days be full of diapered bears, and your nights haunted by robot pimps.

Partners' trip to Vegas a Circus-Circus

Now that the Iraqi government is no more, its information minister (a.k.a. Steve Sterrett of Campus Partners) is once more spinning the Gateway Project.

You have to love it. The Partners boys will be flying to Las Vegas for a convention. There they will learn how to give the Gateway Project a "local feel," according to The Lantern. The first and so far, only example is calling the new Barnes and Noble Bookstore "Long's Bookstore."

What better place is there to learn about local feel than Las Vegas? It has New York, New York. It also has the Eiffel Tower, Ceasar's Palace, the Egyptian Sphinx and even a Circus-Circus for the whole family.

Here are a few suggestions, just to help them out.

The new apartments can be called "The Neil House." Charles Dickens wrote about his stay at the original, across from the Ohio Statehouse, about 150 years ago.

How about a Hooters? We can call it "Papa Joe's." We could get an Emeril's. Orlando has one, why shouldn't we? Let's call it "Souvlaki Palace." How about naming a J.C. Penney's "Waterbeds and Stuff?"

worried because of the insurance. I expected a nominal $20 fee, but just the other day I got a notice in the mail that I owed $220 because my visit was only partially covered. As it turns out, in order to receive full coverage, I needed to schedule an appointment 48 hours ahead of time. Imagine that.

Since the year began in September, I have spent $1,081 on student health insurance and other fees, as opposed to throwing down the $937 for the three-hour visit. My suggestion to students is to get your own health plans thorough parents or private agencies because unless you need the E.R. once every three months, the OSU plan is not for you.

Student sick to stomach over fees

I've had enough of the red tape and money-oriented decisions that the trustees make concerning undergraduates, whom they don't even care about in the first place. I'm about fed up with Ohio State health insurance, and the mandate that students have it is nothing more than a joke.

In winter quarter, I contracted a nasty stomach virus that had me throwing up all night and into the early morning. I lost all my water and became very weak from six straight hours of vomiting. An OSU police officer took me to the Ohio State University Medical Center emergency room.

As I lay in the bed with needles jabbing me from all directions, a nurse wheeled up a laptop and got my name, address and insurance information. I was answering the questions as best as possible and doing my best not to pass out. Little did I know that I should have been worrying about how to pay for my visit.

I was in the hospital for three hours, received three IVs and got 30 minutes of sleep. The bill: $937. While this seems a tad outlandish, I was not

Oval campers support Palestine

By Ebony Johnson
Lantern staff writer

The members of Committee for Justice in Palestine camped out on The Oval to make a statement.

For the last four weeks CJP participated in a solidarity camp. The members of this activist group sponsored the event because they wanted to have a place to discuss war, violence and the problems associated with creating refugees.

Matt Snyder, an undecided freshman, said people from all over came to participate in the camp. Students at OSU as well as students from other universities and non-students participated in this event.

"A solidarity camp is people coming together against a wrongness. We are here for the victims of American's foreign and domestic policies," Snyder said.

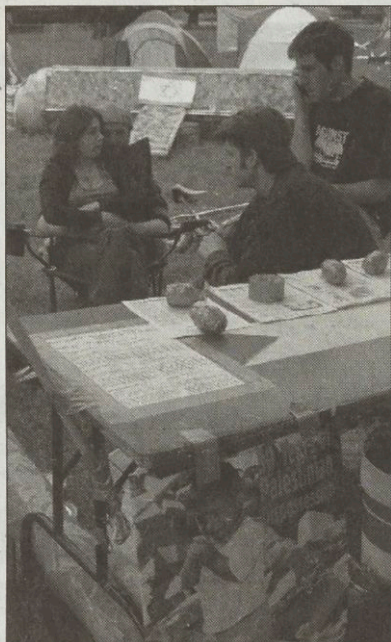

Jon Lehman, a senior in international studies, said CJP chose to hold it on The Oval to create a visible presence.

"OSU is one of the biggest campuses and we want many people to have exposure to this as possible," Snyder said.

John Tattan, a junior in German, said the group received a decent response from people who had no previous knowledge of its cause. The camp was also helpful in networking people who were already concerned with the issues of justice for Palestinians.

Tattan said every three days the tents had to be moved in order to preserve the quality of the grass. Other than that, students slept, ate and studied in their tents. How much time one spent in a tent was all up to personal preference. Tattan said most people slept there every night.

Lehman said last week was the second annual Palestinian Awareness Week. After having the solidarity camp, the group turned it into a refugee camp and built a mock separation wall, name Qalqilya, like the one that Israel is building. The organization had art exhibits, discussions and lectures throughout the week to promote awareness.

Lehman said the students built the wall to create a visible analogy, create dialogue, and promote events.

"We wanted to bring it to the students so they could actually see it for themselves," Lehman said.

May 16 was the last day for the wall. Tattan said the refugee camp is representative of the Palestinian refugees.

"A lot of them fled their homes for fear of being killed and they have a right to return to their homes. When people are outside with guns and tanks it's hard to do that," Tattan said.

Tattan said CJP is trying to get people to understand that there is information out there that they aren't aware of.

"We are trying to provide a balance for what you see on TV," Tattan said.

Zoo exhibit features south-east Asia

By Benjamin Hickey
Lantern staff writer

The plaque on the entrance to the new exhibit, "the Islands of South-east Asia" at the Columbus Zoo reads, "Bhinneka Tunggal Ika." Translated these words mean "Unity in diversity" or "We are of many kinds, but we are one."

The ribbon cutting for the exhibit was held Friday, which was also the Buddhist holiday Wesak. Wesak occurs on the day of the full moon in May and is a celebration of the birth, death and enlightenment of Buddha.

The birth of the new exhibit was the reason for celebration at the zoo.

"This is a wonderful new addition for the zoo," said Jerry Borin, the zoo's executive director.

Visitors are immersed by the sights and sounds of Indonesian architecture and music. "The Islands" is the third of its kind to be what Borin calls a 'zoogeographic region.' The first two were North America followed by the African Forest exhibits; an Australian exhibit is scheduled to open next spring.

"It's going to be a service to the community for years to come," Borin said.

The $8.3 million installation took 18 months to build and features eight different species of animals.

"This exhibit is part of the zoo's master plan," Borin said. "This is another step we took in going forward to make us the No. 1 zoo in the U.S."

Animals featured include orangutans, Asian small-clawed otters and white-handed gibbons.

"In the exhibit all animals are part of a management survival plan, which means they need our help," said Lisa Beebe, special events coordinator.

Animals come from breeding programs from other zoos or are orphaned and in need of special care.

"A lot of caring for the animals here is part of caring for the animals in the wild," Beebe said.

Habitats for the Komodo dragons and white handed gibbons are designed so the creatures can be viewed indoors and outdoors.

"The Islands" features a boat ride that transports passengers around the exhibit. The boats were designed to look like Indonesian water taxis. Passengers are in for a wet ride thanks to a squirting device controlled by the two orangutans, a male and a female, in a tower perch.

The boats seat eight and cost is $2 for the five- to seven-minute ride. The boat was not operational on the day of the opening but is expected to be running in a week, Borin said.

Beebe expects the exhibit to be very busy. The manatee exhibit, which opened three years ago, had long lines of visitors waiting to get in when it first opened, she said.

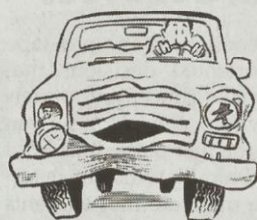

On hand for the ribbon cutting were Reps. Linda Reidelbach, R-Columbus, and Jim Hughes, R-Columbus, Delaware County Commissioner Jim Ward and Franklin County Commissioner Dewey Stokes. Zoo characters Manny the Manatee and Sydney the Koala made appearances as well.

Big East in need of Notre Dame

The Atlantic Coast Conference voted to expand its conference to 12 teams earlier this week. The proposed move, which would take effect in the 2004-2005 academic school year, would make the ACC a new football superconference with a season-ending conference championship game.

As a result, the ACC wants to invite three more teams to its ranks, and to no one's surprise, all three teams — Miami, Boston College and Syracuse — would come from the Big East Conference.

But the real question is not whether the Hurricanes, Orange-men and Eagles should swap conferences. In fact, it would be smart for Miami to jump ship as it is located right in the middle of ACC country. The Hurricanes already have a natural rivalry with Florida State, and putting a conference championship on the line every year would further the animosity between the two teams.

So instead of asking if this should happen, we should be asking: Where will the Big East Conference go from here?

If the trio does move to the ACC, the Big East would be left with 11 teams, but only six of the schools — West Virginia, Virginia Tech, Temple, Rutgers, Connecticut and Pittsburgh — play football in Division I-A. There is already talk that if the proposed move does come to fruition, then that would set off a domino effect that could see Conference USA teams like Cincinnati and Louisville join a revamped Big East Conference. If that happens, Conference USA would most likely die as a conference, and the rest of the teams would find new homes.

But even with all of those scenarios, the real answer lies within one team — Notre Dame.

The Fighting Irish's name always seems to appear when football conferences vote on expansion. For years, the golden domers have been linked with possible Big Ten expansion, but they have always turned it down.

The main reason Notre Dame hasn't wanted to join a football conference is money. The school has an exclusive contract with NBC, which allows the network to televise all of the Irish's home games. The contract, which is scheduled to run out in 2005, pays the university $9 million a season for the exclusive broadcast rights. On the other hand, the Big East's multimillion dollar deal with ABC and ESPN, which ends in 2007, calls for the conference to split the money with all of its teams. If Notre Dame were to join this package, it would receive far less than the NBC deal.

But with the Big East in trouble, it is time for Notre Dame to step up to the plate and shed its independent status. In 1994, the Fighting Irish took the Big East's offer and joined the conference for almost all sports except football. The Irish need to swallow their pride and be the Big East's savior.

The move would not just benefit the conference. With the advent of the Bowl Championship Series, independents are finding it increasingly tougher to schedule games and receive the high bowl revenue. Independents are becoming a thing of the past — only four remain in Division I-A.

Tradition has always been a part of Notre Dame football, but now it's time to establish a new identity. Gone are the days where the Irish mystique alone will help them get the best recruits and win national titles. Notre Dame needs a change, and the Big East Conference is the perfect place to start.

Matt Duval is a junior in journalism and The Lantern sports editor. He can be reached at duval.15@osu.edu. If Notre Dame still refuses to join the Big East Conference for football, he thinks the conference should kick the school out for every other sport.

Baseball drops three to Minnesota

By Matt Duval
Lantern sports editor

The scenario may have sounded easy, but the Ohio State baseball team knew the execution of it was going to be anything but simple.

Coming into this weekend's four-game series with Big Ten front-runner Minnesota, the Buckeyes knew they needed a sweep to earn the conference championship and become the host of this week's Big Ten Tournament.

But it didn't take long for the Golden Gophers to dispel any hopes of an OSU sweep with their 9-2 win in the first game of the series Friday night.

For the first three innings, the Buckeyes hung close to Minnesota, trailing just 3-2. But in the fourth inning, OSU stranded runners at second and third with just one out and couldn't retake the lead.

"A base hit there, and we get the lead back," OSU manager Bob Todd said. "We don't do it. We don't execute."

The Gophers quickly took advantage, lighting up Buckeye ace Scott Lewis. Lewis, who entered the contest 9-0 on the season, gave up three runs in the inning as Minnesota jumped out 6-2.

"I looked up there on the scoreboard, and at one time, they had six runs on five hits," Todd said. "Our defense and two leadoff walks, and a hit batter really hurt us."

But even more ominous was when Lewis came out of the game after just 3 1-3 innings with a sore elbow. The sophomore got tests on the elbow in Minnesota, but the extent of the injury is not yet known. The Buckeyes hope to know Lewis' situation before the start of the Big Ten Tournament on Wednesday.

Things got a little better for OSU in Saturday's doubleheader as it earned a split with Minnesota. After losing the first game, the Buckeyes stormed back to take a 5-1 victory in the nightcap. The OSU win snapped Minnesota's 12-game home winning streak in Big Ten play.

"It's definitely a confidence boost for us going into the tournament," OSU outfielder Christian Snively said.

Snively had a big hand in the win when he hit a two-run home run in the fourth inning, his 12th of the season.

Along with the win, the Buckeyes learned they wrapped up the No. 2 spot in the conference, thanks to two Michigan losses earlier in the day. The Buckeyes will have a first-round bye, along with Minnesota, in this week's conference tournament.

The Golden Gophers closed out the weekend rallying to a 5-4 win yesterday. OSU held a 3-2 lead into the seventh inning before Minnesota struck back. The Gophers scored twice in the seventh and then added an insurance run in the eighth when Gary Dick hit a home run to right-center field.

Snively hit his third homer in as many games for the Buckeyes.

Funny Cide sets his sights on Triple Crown

AL BEHRMAN/AP

Jockey Jose Santos rides Funny Cide (9) to victory ahead of the field as they win the second jewel of the Triple Crown by capturing the 128th Preakness Stakes at Pimlico Race Course in Baltimore, Saturday.

After controversy, jockey Jose Santos rides gelding to Preakness victory

By Richard Rosenblatt
Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Funny Cide barreled down the stretch for a runaway victory and sweet redemption for his jockey in the Preakness Stakes on Saturday, setting the stage for a Triple Crown try at Belmont Park in three weeks.

The win may have meant the most to jockey Jose Santos. It came just five days after he was cleared by Churchill Downs stewards investigating a photograph and a news report that raised the question of whether he carried something other than his whip when he rode Funny Cide to victory in the Kentucky Derby.

Instead of two days, Santos had to wait less than two minutes for the verdict this time. Funny Cide pulled away from the field turning for home and steadily increased his margin through the stretch before the cheering crowd of 100,268 at Pimlico Race Course. His powerful finish was something to behold: He won by 9 3/4 lengths — 1/4 length shy of Survivor's 10-length victory in the first Preakness, in 1873.

The win moved Funny Cide to the brink of racing immortality — on June 7 he will attempt to become the 12th Triple Crown champion and first since Affirmed in 1978.

Funny Cide will be the fifth horse in the last seven years with a Triple chance and ninth since Affirmed swept the Derby, Preakness and Belmont a quarter century ago.

A gelding has never won the Triple Crown.

At the finish, Santos stood in the stirrups, put his fingers to his lips, blew a kiss and then held up two fingers — as if he wanted to make sure all the world could see there was nothing in his hand.

The 9-5 favorite in the field of 10 3-year-olds, Funny Cide covered the 1 3/16th-mile Preakness in 1:55.61, well off the record of 1:53.4 last accomplished by Louis Quatorze in 1996.

Midway Road, a 20-1 shot, was second, with Scrimshaw third and Peace Rules fourth. Senor Swinger was fifth, followed by New York Hero, Foufa's Warrior, Cherokee's Boy, Ten Cents a Shine and Kissin Saint.

Funny Cide won for the fifth time in seven starts and earned $650,000 for Sackatoga, boosting his career money totals to $1,889,385. Tagg, a self-described eternal pessimist, bought Funny Cide for $75,000 late last year.

It was Funny Cide's show all the way. The horse, who had beaten only New York-bred competition prior to his Derby victory, was brushed at the start by New York Hero. But he settled in quickly to follow the duel that developed between Scrimshaw and Peace Rules. Funny Cide was third along the backstretch, with Santos just waiting for the right time to make his move.

He did it just before the turn for home.

Funny Cide had pulled even with Peace Rules and then — whoa! — the gelding found another gear and left the others reeling in his wake.

"This is a wonderful horse. New York, here we come!" Santos said.

In winning his first Preakness, Santos took a jab at the post-Derby controversy.

"The only machine I had today was the red horse I was riding," Santos said.

Added Tagg: "Jose is a world-class rider and a world-class human being. Those photographers and people in Miami are nuts."

Jack Knowlton, Sackatoga's

general partner, referred to the controversy as hitting "a couple of very little bumps in the road" that were handled expeditiously by the stewards at Churchill Downs.

Santos had vowed to win the Preakness to "show the public that everything we were doing was fair and square."

Santos' ride was investigated after a published photograph and a story in The Miami Herald raised suspicion that the rider had something other than a whip in his right hand when he crossed the finish line.

Funny Cide buried the controversy with his decisive win, and now shifts the focus to the assault on the Triple Crown. The Belmont Stakes, at 1 1/2 miles, is called the Test of the Champion.

Post's single lifts Clippers to win

By Mike Burcham
Lantern sports writer

It took the Columbus Clippers 10 innings to find a clutch hit yesterday when they defeated the Rochester Red Wings 1-0 to split a doubleheader yesterday at Cooper Stadium.

Third baseman Drew Henson led off the bottom of the 10th inning with a double to the gap in right-center field. Clipper catcher Michel Hernandez reached base on a bunt single, moving Henson to third. Shortstop Devi Mendez hit a shallow fly ball to right field for the first out.

Clipper manager Bucky Dent made a crucial decision and decided to use David Post to pinch hit for left fielder John Rodriguez.

Post came to the plate and knocked a sinker from Red Wing reliever Mike Duvall over the drawn-in outfield to plate the winning run.

"That was a big, big hit. He swung the bat good today," Dent said.

Post, who is batting .157, hopes yesterday's hit is the boost he needed to get out of his slump.

"I've stunk, there is no other way to put it. The hit felt good, it felt real good. I have been working as hard as the next guy and hopefully today was a good first step," Post said.

It was the first run the Clippers had scored in 12 innings, since the fourth inning of game one of the twin bill.

"That has been one of our problems. We get into long droughts like that all the time," Dent said.

home the win for the Clippers after pitching the top half of the 10th, giving up only one hit. But the real work was done by starter Rolando Arrojo and middle reliever Adrian "Duquecito" Hernandez. Arrojo threw five shutout innings, allowing three hits and striking out four, while walking only one.

"We needed to get him where he was at and he did a nice job holding them," Dent said.

The other righty, Hernandez, came on in relief in the sixth and nearly duplicated Arrojo. He threw four innings of one-hit baseball and didn't allow a runner past first base.

"Duquecito was outstanding today," Dent said.

The Red Wings won the first game 8-2.

Off to the Market

Annual Apron Gala delights with wide array of world cuisine

By Nicholas Gill
Lantern arts writer

Just by looking around the North Market during the Seventh Annual Apron Gala, it's easy to see how diverse Columbus — and its citizens' tastes have become.

On Saturday, the North Market played host to its Seventh Annual Apron Gala where for just $60 patrons could indulge in all of the food, wine and beer they could handle.

A surplus of ethnicities, cultures, regions and styles are represented in Columbus' only public market, located at 59 Spruce St. next to Nationwide Arena. On a normal day, 35 or so merchants fill the space selling vegetarian, Indian, Irish, Turkish, Chinese and organic cuisine, as well as various knickknacks.

The Apron Gala is the premier event at the North Market and unofficially kicks off the summer-gluttony season.

Other events include an outdoor farmer's market, which takes place every Saturday during the growing season (featuring 20 local farmers) and the Second Annual Ohio Food and Wine Festival on July 12 and 13. Both events are free.

The Apron Gala was crowded with people of varying ages, races and prominence, as the site has been predominantly considered a meeting place since 1876. The concept still holds true, as socialites, urban trendsetters and the average Joe or Jane mingled and bumped into each other at the Apron gala.

For three hours or so, the old warehouse dispensed some of the specialties that each of its stores is known for. As hard as some tried, it would have been impossible for a single person to eat at every place, let alone try every dish.

A constant flow circled the outer ring of the market in both directions. The progress kept steady, but swelled on occasion when a new tray of food was brought out. Few people had the room to stand still. It was pick up a bite, then eat while walking. The only breathing room was upstairs by the tables and Braddock's Diner.

Wandering entertainers — including belly dancers, opera singers, a big chicken, plate jugglers and a fortuneteller — were far and wide. The night culminated in a silent auction benefiting the North Market.

Wine was free to ticket holders and was supplied by Ohio Wineries, with choices of cabernet sauvignon, merlot and riesling. Kegs of Gordon Biersch managed the beer drinkers.

Appetizers, main courses and desserts were set out in front of each small stand, sometimes at varying times, sometimes not. Most places had two or three different trays of food at a time. Nida's Sushi, an excellent sushi option for beginners as well as advanced connoisseurs of raw fish, had its basic display of rolls and seaweed salad. Curds & Whey showed off its pate, cheeses and olives. Smokin' Joe's Ribs glamorized sweet and smoky pulled pork and beef brisket.

Gaelic Imports was a big hit with its shepherd's pie. It was featured as a slice in a tiny bowl — clearly not the best way to enjoy it — but the presentation suited the atmosphere. The eatery was an even bigger hit with its haggis, which usually consists of sheep liver (as it did in this case), but sometimes may include the sheep's lungs (considered illegal in the U.S.), heart and stomach. Many were trying the dish for novelty purposes, but it wasn't nearly as disgusting as the movie "So I Married an Axe Murderer" makes it sound. The soft, doughy clumps of meat have an almost indescribable, sage-like taste.

The word-of-mouth award would have to go to the small table at Bob the Fish Guy's stand. Conversation about the poached salmon was heard almost everywhere. The long time occupant of the North Market also served fresh, large cocktail shrimp.

Best of the Wurst's Prosciutto and Mushroom Toast had a wonderful combination of flavors. The in-season mushrooms were tasty and the high-quality prosciutto and bread was crispy. It's a perfect hors d'oeuvre that wouldn't be too difficult to make with the right ingredients. Ham spring rolls with vegetables, lettuce and lunchmeat in a thin moist ham wrap had their place beside the toast.

The stromboli made from coppacollo, salami, pepperoni, mushrooms and mozzarella at Sarefino's Pizzeria & Italian Deli were spicy and hearty. A roasted vegetable stromboli was also available. As evidenced by the focaccia, sarefino's had the bread element covered.

North Market Poultry and Game, which served Frog Legs sautéed in butter and garlic, was one of the first places to run out of a dish. The Turkey Breast Roulade quickly vanished. The moist, succulent turkey was what any catering service (and many fine dining restaurants) would hope to achieve with a main course. The meat merchant serves many other rare delicacies during the average day, including bison, elk and the always-enormous ostrich eggs.

As usual, Mozart's Bakery had an impressive display of pastries. There was a choice of white or dark chocolate-covered strawberries which were fresh, juicy and plump. The biscotti, on the other hand, lacked a little without easy access to coffee, but still had its place.

Sabor Mexicano deserves mention for its flan. The squares of custard with hints of vanilla are not things that usually come to mind when thinking of Mexico.

Barry's New York Style Deli, which primarily sells meat, served a variety of cheese-cakes including the Chocolate Chip. The crust was hardly noticeable, but the extremely rich creamy cake melts in your mouth while contrasting with the chewy chocolate chips.

Jeni's Splendid Ice Creams was perhaps the highlight of the night. Having trouble keeping up with hungry customers, Jeni's was perhaps the only place that kept a steady line. Only a few flavors made an appearance, including salty caramel, lemon meringue, coco gelato and some variety of strawberry. Each was topped with sauces and whipped cream, some with fresh fruit. Each small cup of ice cream brought out the rich, sweet, creamy flavors of its namesake. The shop has made headlines in recent months by offering premium flavors made with fine wines and liqueurs such as Black Muscat with Fig, and Plum Wine and Kir with Crème de Cassis.

The event wasn't limited to just food. Joy of Soy Market passed out candles and soy soap. Market Blooms passed out single roses, and the Source by Wasserstrom gave away miniature dipping bowls.

The Seventh Annual Apron Gala proved how diverse the North Market is by offering gourmet food from all over the world, while also demonstrating how the people of Columbus will eat just about anything if made appropriately.

The North Market is open from 9 a.m.-7p.m. (Tuesday-Friday), 8 a.m.-5 p.m. (Saturday); and noon-5 p.m. (Sunday). Select businesses are open Monday's from 9 a.m. - 5 p.m.

Revamped OSU-made TV show to air tonight

By Brian Duff
Lantern arts writer

Buck-iTV will air the fifth installment of its soap opera sitcom "Kollege" tonight at 8:30 on channel 18. Absent for the past seven weeks, the show returns with a slightly altered format and blistering new content.

"We wanted to curb the show to more Ohio State-based material, so we revamped it this past quarter, and this new episode is about student government elections," said director Chris Langer.

Tonight's episode will be a satirical look at the student government that producers say will have a "Law and Order"-style "ripped from the headlines" feel to it.

The series is produced through professor Robert Schubach's Theatre 405.10 course. About 50 OSU students are on the staff as writers, actors, crew and production staff members.

Students of diverse majors are represented on "Kollege," and lend a creative diversity that producers feel is integral to the show's success. Although he never expected the show to grow as large as it has, Schubach embraces all comers.

"Any creative person interested in writing a half-hour episode is welcome with open arms," he said. "Auditions for actors are usually at the beginning of the quarter, and we almost always find a way to work many different characters into the show."

"Kollege" has the potential to affect its members' lives dramatically.

"Having the opportunity to work on a television show during an undergraduate education sharply increases the students' marketability: Breaking into the professional industry is quite difficult; 'Kollege' provides the opportunity for practical experience in front and behind the camera," said Schubach.

"Kollege" has endured several incarnations, transforming from a vague, pre-production brain-child of professors Dan Boord and Joy Reilly into the more focused, mature satirical comedy that will air tonight.

Although originally slated as a soap opera, Langer changed the direction of the show in an effort to make it more palatable.

"I thought a soap opera might be a little cheesy, content wise, but the format of it was good. So I changed the content by suggesting to the writers to put a more sitcom spin to it, leaving out the dramatics," Langer said.

For the show's core group, it is more than just an opportunity for students; it marks an important step by the university to re-embrace filmmaking. "The show is very important to me because it brings back the concept of film-video production that hasn't been here for over 10 years since that department's dissolving," Langer said.
