Democrats plan new techniques

Campaign returns to basics, charts 'roadmap to victory'

Democratic leaders hope that modern marketing techniques combined with a return to hard-core grass roots campaigning will win the 1988 presidential battle for them.

With this purpose, the Democratic National Committee is drawing up 50 state profiles and calling them "roadmaps to victory" in

The profiles include lists of past state election results, opponents' statements for the past 20 years and political heavyweights who know how to win their states.

The Association of State Demo-cratic Chairs heard these strategy outlines for gaining the White House in 1988 during a meeting last weekend in Cleveland.

Jeff Ely, spokesman for the Democratic committee, told the state leaders that "to win in 1988, we must systematically developed." we must systematically develop plans allowing the Democratic Party to go on the offensive. We are calling your attention to these new initiatives now, and want you to make use of them throughout whatever the Democrats plan for 1988, David Garick, publicity director for Ohio Republican headquarters, said he wasn't concerned.

"I didn't pay a whole lot of attention to what took place in Cleveland," Garick said. "We're not spending a great amount of energy analyzing or fretting over their candidate. We're not too terribly impressed."

In Washington, the Pentagon said the Navy had not detected any move by Iran to ready any of its Chinese-made Silkworm anti-ship missiles. The ships were out of range after the convoy cleared the strait. "So in reality, the ships are already safely through the passage and on their way to Kuwait," one official said.

By mid-afternoon, they had passed within 12 miles of Abu Musa, an Iranian island used by Revolutionary Guards, fanatical followers of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, to launch gunboat and helicopter attacks on commercial shipping.

As night fell on the gulf, the convoy cruised past the long shoreline of the United Arab Emirates and the Onited Arab Emirates and the port of Dubai. "They are moving fast in close convoy," reported one shipping source as the cluster of ships traveled through the strait at about 16 knots, the approximate top speed of the 401,382-ton Bridgeton.

Capt. David P. Yonkers, who commands the Navy escort dubbed "Operation Earnest Will," said the U.S. ships would come no closer than one or two miles to the "exclusion zone" declared by Iran

Smoking marijuana damages the body's immune system by preventing full maturation of blood cells, a government scientist said.

Tetrahydrocannabinol, or THC, the main substance in marijuana that gives the drug its mood-altering effects, prevents some cells from maturing, resulting in fewer white cells, Huberman said. He said researchers can tell exposure to this substance prevents the blood cells from maturing because of changes in their appearance, their enzyme activity and their ability to react with monoclonal antibodies.

Monoclonal antibodies are blood proteins with the ability to attach to cells, he said

Technicians cut medication problems

By Jennifer Onesto

Medication errors may be cut in half if hospitals use pharmacy technicians instead of nurses to administer medication to patients, said Philip Schneider, associate director of pharmacy at University Hospitals Hospitals.

Over a five-week period, Schneider and two pharmacy residents monitored 24 technicians, logging more than 2,000 observa-tions. Some aspects observed were timing, dosage strengths and whether the medication was given in proper form to the correct

They concluded that medication distribution errors made by the hospital's pharmacy technicians are 4.4 percent lower than the estimated 10 percent of distribu-tion errors made nationally by nurses, Schneider said.

The most common mistake made by the technicians was the "wrong-time" error, in which medication was administered more than 90 minutes after it was due.

Schneider attributes some of these errors to intangibles such as a patient being X-rayed or not feeling well when it is time for their medication.

The question of whether such delays should be cited as errors is the reason many researchers have excluded them from recording procedures. Schneider said discounting such "wrong-time" errors nistration training course that lowers the incidence of medication distribution errors among OSU During the first two phases follow-up activities," said Schneider.

NFL can wait

uspended OSU football star Cris Carter has filed a petition with the National Football League in order to make himself eligible for a supplemental draft.

In the past there has been an understanding that the league will not draft a player unless he has graduated, used up his eligibility or the class he entered the univesity in has graduated.

Carter meets none of those requirements and the NFL would be setting a dangerous precedent if it allows a player who has admittedly broken NCAA rules to become eligible for a draft before his class has graduated.

Carter's lawyer, Bob Berry, contends Carter's case is unique for the NFL because Carter was ruled ineligible by his university which makes him eligible to play in the NFL.

Berry seems to be forgetting the reason Carter was suspended by the university was because Ohio State did not want to face the embarrassment of having one of its athletes ruled ineligible by the NCAA.

Based on what was known about his activities with agents, Carter was sure to have been ruled ineligible by the NCAA sometime, the university just beat them to the punch.

While Carter has admitted his guilt and is entitled to a second chance as much as anybody else, it would be foolish for the NFL to make a special concession in his case.

What kind of message would this send to other college players and what would stop them from doing the same things Carter did?

Carter should not be allowed to go to the big money of the NFL so soon after his suspension.

Carter should be forced to sit out a year to send a message to other college players about the consequences they face if they don't follow NCAA rules.

KUWAIT:

Protection needed

he United States should not be afraid of escorting Kuwaiti ships through the Strait of Hormuz in the Persian Gulf because some type of action needs to be taken to protect the shipment of oil to the free world.

In adopting the policy to reflag the Kuwaiti ships so they will be able to benefit from American protection, the U.S. is protecting its interests and its allies' interests by making sure the oil shipments make it through the gulf

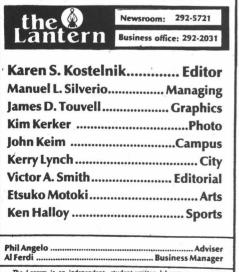

Oil tankers moving through the Persian Gulf have been targets in the war between Iran and Iraq, which has been raging for nearly seven years

If the tankers aren't protected and the oil shipments continue to be the targets of the war, this will surely mean higher oil prices for Americans in the future. The less oil that there is available, the more expensive it will be throughout the world.

The U.S. needs to establish itself in the gulf, so we don't lose prestige to the Soviets.

Also this policy will strengthen our relationship with Kuwait, which will in turn strengthen our ties with Saudi Arabia and other moderate nations in the Middle East.

This policy will allow America's voice to be heard in that region of the world and it will go a long way toward re-establishing American credibility that has been damaged in the Iran-contra scandal.

Carter or agents: Who's to blame?

A young man graduates from high school with exceptional athletic ability. He has been approached by several major universities and has signed a letter of intent to play at a university with a nationally-recognized sports

He is 19, maybe 20 years old and thrown into the national limelight. His school's games are shown weekends on national television and in front of tens of thousands of fans in the stadium.

Then he is approached by some smiling men who offer him money to sign a contract with them; they want to represent his best interests. The dilemma occurs; he is not supposed to accept, but the money and other benefits are so tempting to a young man who has never seen so much.

He accepts. A scandal occurs and suddenly the game he loved to play turns against him. He is suspended, the "adoring" public turns against him, and suddenly he is a shameful example to other amateur athletes

Cris Carter was suspended last Wednesday for accepting $6,800 and wednesday for accepting $6,500 and signing representation papers with New York-based agent Norby Walters and his firm, World Sports and Entertainment. Truly, a blow against Buckeye national championship hopes. Earle Bruce said that Carter "wasn't a Buckeye off the field."

Carter said in a statement that he did not realize the pain he would cause his mother, Ohio State, his teammates or Bruce by accepting the money and signing.

Many fans are angry at Carter. "How could he do this to us?" "What the hell did he think he was doing, the bum?" Carter did hurt Ohio State and himself by accepting this. But imagine a little scenario if you will.

Go back to when you were 19 and 20. Remember your circumstances and picture yourself as an outstanding point guard or an All-America receiver with great hands. You're doing fairly well in school and you're living somewhat comfortably. Imagine an agent compression of the second se agent coming up to you and offering you real money. Do you know for a fact that you couldn't resist?

There is a great deal of pressure on a young man at the age of 20 even bitter to think that any agent would without athletics being a part of his try to do that to somebody...If I ever wished any bad on anybody, I wish it life Being a famous college athlete is "They are despicable." difficult for a person that age for it by not ever being allowed to play at Ohio State again. But the prosecution should not end with arter's suspension.

Walters should also be made to pay. He never should have tempted Carter to begin with; he never should have gotten within a mile of Carter. He is as much to blame, if not more, for Carter's problems.

According to Bob Berry, Carter's lawyer, Lloyd Bloom, working for Walters, came to Columbus "not just armed with cash, but also with a promissory note...and a representation agreement." They came to get Carter, and they weren't going to leave until they had him.

College athletes are under a huge strain and not all will turn out like ex-Buckeye Dennis Hopson. Hopson was an exceptional athlete with an exceptional attitude; the highest stan-dard among college athletes.

College athletes must be guarded if the NCAA rules on accepting money are to be followed. Athletes such as Alabama's Derrick McKey, Pittsburgh's Teryl Austin and Charles Gladman and Carter are all examples of ath-lete's being tempted by Walters and Bloom. All those athletes are paying for their mistakes.

But the real culprits are Walters and Bloom. They must be the ones who pay the most. They must receive the severest penalties. If the college athletes only suspected what they were doing was wrong, then the agents knew full well that what they were doing was illegal and would hurt the young men.

The NCAA must set up ways to keep agents away from amateur athletes. And if that doesn't work, then some kind of laws must be enacted. Something must be done about these flowers routine for Cris Carter.

Don't tell me he's the innocent lamb led astray. Don't cry to me about the troubles of a 19 or 20-year-old kid. Don't tell me he's the victim of a manipulating brother.

Yes, all those things are true to an extent. But the bottom line rests solely on those padded shoulders.

Cris Carter betrayed his team, his coach, and his university.

He may have cost Ohio State a national championship. He certainly has caused the university's athletic program a loss of credibility and I understand why he could have done it. Money is tight when you are a varsity football player. Maybe he really believed a no-interest loan wasn't breaking the rules. Maybe he really thought his brother George would take the fall if it all came out.

Sorry, I don't buy that. I think Cris knew it was wrong, and I think the only reason he did it is because he thought he wouldn't get nailed. Maybe he had seen others get away with it.

Athletic Director Rick Bay said at the Bye-Cris press conference last week that the rules about agents are hammered "time and time and time again" into players' minds. Chris Spielman has said he gets calls from agents all the time.

Everyone knows there are a lot of Lloyd Blooms and Norby Walters running around. You are trying to tell me when Cris was driving around Columbus with his brother, George, and Bloom that this never entered his mind? That just because the contract was post-dated until after next year's Rose Bowl it was okay? It was wrong and he knew it.

And it might be worse than disclosed. There is evidence to indicate more money than the $6,800 Bay estimated could have changed hands, evidence to indicate Cris led a lifestyle that required money. More money than $150 a month. Hell, I can make $150 a month asking if you want fries

Hopefully, ways exist to make money less attractive to college players. Perhaps athletic scholarships should include more spending money or provide easy jobs for the they don't feel that pinch. A more realistic solution would be for the NCAA to allow football players to go 'hardship" as is done in basketball.

JIMBORGMAN

This would let players who really want the money and really don't want the education to go for it.

Go ahead, blame the agents. Call them the scum of the earth. They deserve it. Walters and Bloom have destroyed Cris Carter's collegiate repu-tation. Now, forever it won't be: "Oh destroyed Cris Carter's collegiate reputation. Now, forever it won't be: "Ohyeah, I remember Cris Carter, the great All-America wide receiver"; it will be: "Oh yeah, I remember Cris Carter, that great receiver that got caught taking money." That will always be Carter's albatross. He won't he able to play a game in the NEI. be able to play a game in the NFL without the play-by-play man referring

In Cris' case, perhaps that is punishment enough. He still could face, criminal charges of mail fraud and income tax evasion. He doesn't deserve to be a criminal. He didn't commit a crime; he violated a trust. Our trust. And he didn't care.

If you are looking for heroes in this sundry affair, there are two of them. Butch Carter and Rick Bay. Butch did what he could to try and help his brother after he made his fatal choice. and tried to convince him to come forward. It is a tragedy that Crischose George's advice to follow rather than Butch's

Rick Bay deserves praise for his quick, decisive action. In pushing for justice in Carter's case, in immediately suspending the wide receiver, and in not appealing the NCAA action, Bay has said that maintaining a clean program is more important than winning a national championship.

Bay has said if some loophole did exist allowing Carter to return, Bay would not want him back. It's good to would not want him back. It's good to see, in the days of a football scandal in Texas where even the governor was in on it, someone make winning take a back seat to moral conduct.

Cry no tears for Cris Carter. In a year's time, the NFL will make him the wealthy young man he has wanted to be. And he'll be back in action, making those acrobatic catches that im fame here. But I won't cheer for him.

In the same report, however, a majority of the respondents had "major concerns" or were "someof NutraSweet.

The report was generated by the Government Accounting Office at the request of Sen. Howard Metzenhaum, D-Ohio

James Wagoner, a legislative assistant for Metzenbaum, said the actual figures contained in the report were as follows:

Of the 67 respondents, 29 were "very confident" and had "few if Ruth Weisheit, consumer affairs any concerns" about the safety of NutraSweet; 26 were "generally confident" but "somewhat concerned" about the product and 12 had "major concerns" and "little, if any confidence" in Nut-

He said 22 of the respondents would require additional warning labels on products containing Nut-

Wagoner said 19 would like to see more information about NutraSweet given to medical personnel, and 20 would like to see heightened public awareness of NutraSweet safety.

He said 16 respondents would limit the use of NutraSweet to certain populations, although the report did not specify who these populations were. Wagoner said 12 would limit the types of products containing NutraSweet, and 10 would withdraw the approval for use of the artificial sweetener in any foods.

Wagoner said Metzenbaum plans to hold a Senate hearing concerning NutraSweet safety in researchers who responded to a personally don't think that NutraSweet presents a hazard to or people for consumption.

"My advice to consumers about aspartame is that if you don't think it's good for you, don't drink it," Chism said. "Most people don't have any adverse what concerned" about the safety responses to it as far as we can

"Metzenbaum is just trying to make some press," Chism said. Aspartame is the generic name for NutraSweet. It is a protein formed from the amino acids

Ruth Weisheit, consumer affairs officer for the U.S. Food and Drug Administration in Cleveland, said aspartame was first approved for human consumption by the federal Food and Drug Administration in 1974.

This approval was stayed, how-ever, after the safety of the artificial sweetener was questioned by researchers who claimed that NutraSweet might cause brain tumors, seizures, mood swings and headaches.

It is known that NutraSweet must be avoided by people who suffer from phenylketonuria, or PKU. PKU is a metabolic disorder that prevents the sufferer from processing phenylalanine correctly.

Weisheit said after an FDA review, aspartame was given final approval in 1981 for use in such foods as cold cereals, drink mixes, dairy products and sugarless gums. Aspartame was not approved for use in carbonated beverages until 1983.

"(NutraSweet) has probably been the most widely tested food additive that we have on the market," Weisheit said. "We basically do not see any problems for the general public with aspar-

Weisheit said the FDA receives calls about aspartame safety periodically and all calls involving illness are investigated.

She said the Center for Diseas Control in 1984 reviewed "a little over 500 cases" filed by people with complaints about aspartame and that the study found no food additives to go through significant problems with the sugar substitute.

Chism said many of the questions being asked about the effects of NutraSweet on human brain chemistry are unanswerable because researchers lack data from human subjects in these areas

"Obviously we're not biopsying human brains after we give some-body aspartame so (that) we can take a blood sample and see amino acids rise in the blood,

He said aspartame studies using laboratory rats have been done but, it is difficult to apply any of these findings to humans

Chism said he has not seen any documentation supporting the claim that NutraSweet causes headaches. But he said people who are drinking excessive amounts of beverages flavored with NutraSweet should ask themselves if they are benefiting by drinking these liquids.

"For many people there is no real reason for them to drink it. For example, I see people giving it to their kids," Chism said. "In many cases the kids need the calories anyway, and so it doesn't make any sense to give them that kind of stuff."

Chism said although NutraSweet is now very popular, other artificial sweeteners undergoing FDA review could claim some of the artificial sweetener market within the next 10 years, should they be approved.

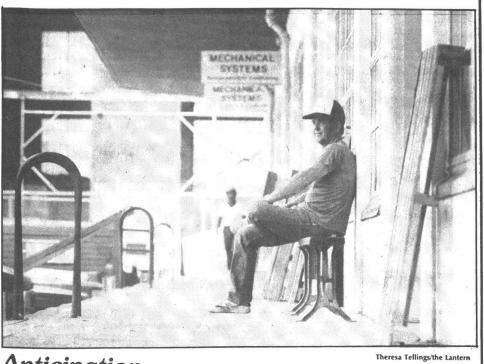

Chism said such sugar substitutes include Acesulfame K, which is a saccharine-like sweetener used in several parts of Europe. It is 130 times sweeter than sugar and was develped in West Germany. It is heat-stable and can be used in baking. Aspartame is not heat-stable. The FDA has been reviewing Acesulfame K for approval

Another possible artificial sweetener is Sucralose. Chism said the FDA has been petitioned to approve this product by Johnson and Johnson, but that it has just begun the regulatory approval

Chism said a third potentially important sugar substitute is Alla-tame, an artificial sweetener simi-

MY LIFE AS A DOG, WRITTEN AND DIRECTED BY LASSE HALLSTROM, WITH ANTON GLANZELIUS, TOMAS VAN BROMMSEN, ANKI LIDEN AND ING-MARIE CARSSON. STARTS FRIDAY AT THE DREXEL. IN SWEDISH WITH ENGLISH SUB-TITLES.

Can a movie about a little boy learning to accept death be a raucous comedy? Can a raucous comedy have anything meaningful to say about learning to accept

Happily, the answer is a resounding "yes" to both questions, and the proof is the film "My Life and the proof is the film "My Life as a Dog."

The film covers a year in the life of Ingemar (Anton Glanzelius), a Swedish boy growing up in the late '50s. In addition to all the usual problems a boy has to deal with, he must also come to terms with his mother's terminal terms with his mother's terminal illness. Because everyone thinks he's too young to understand, they don't tell him what is going on and he is forced to figure it all out for himself.

This movie is funny in both senses of the word. Not only is it Looking back, we can see that an excellent comedy, but it sur-often this expository information prises you. Scenes start out going is not necessary, that we just one way and end up going quite have to accept things as they are.

Although this is a very sentimental movie about children, it is neither cute nor sappy. Like any average boy, Ingemar can be touching and lovable one minute, and the next minute turn into an obnoxious brat. One scene, where he is so snotty that he causes his weakened mother to collapse on the floor gasping for air, makes you laugh and cry at the same

As the story continues, we get glimpses of small-town life that range from side-splitting to heart-breaking to downright weird Hallstrom understands the special pleasure to be derived from driving someone else up the wall; the special relationship between a boy and his dog; and just how confus-ing adult behavior can be to a

As talented as Hallstrom is however, the fate of the film rests on the shoulders of its pint-sized on the shoulders of its plant stars, Anton Glanzelius, who is in virtually every scene. But the little guy is up to the task. Registering almost every emotion in the space of less than two

Capital South Mall will offer area shopping alternatives

With the construction of the Capital South underway, Columbus will end up with more than just another mall.

The construction of the Capital South three-level mall on the corner of Main and Third streets will make 23,000 jobs available, said John Rosenberger, executive director of Capital South.

Although Capital South will be a regional mall, attracting people from more than a 35 mile radius, many OSU students are unaware of its construc-

"If students knew more about the mall, it would interest them," said Lisa Herhold, a senior from Rosenberger said planners are in their first stages of advertising, and some OSU business and journalism classes have had representatives from Capital South speak in class.

Capital South will draw students in to shop in stores that can't be found anywhere except for nearby states, he said.

Rosenberger said Capital South already leased to three of its four major retail stores including Jacobson's, a department store chain from Michigan and Florida; Marshall Fields, a department store from Chicago; and Henri Bendels, which has one store already located in New York.

"There will also be 140 to 150 smaller shops and restaurants," Rosenberger said.

The expected completion date of the mall is spring 1989, Rosenberger said.

"The regional malls are a little outdated, Capital South will offer an attractive alternative that is easy to get to, if you're really dedicated you could walk," Rosenberger said.

Rosenberger said the mall will have an express terminal for buses running directly from the Adult minorities helped by grant

By Donna Meacham

Adults and minorities are two of the smallest groups represented on campus. The adult minorities constitute an even smaller part of the student population.

There are 2,957 students enrolled in continuing education, with only 211 identified as being black or hispanic.

To help increase this number, the Ohio State Affirmative Action Grant in 1985 funded the Minority Continuing Education Opportunities Program.

The program, in cooperation with companies, attempts to re-cruit working-adult minorities to attend Ohio State

The program recruits participants by offering services which will help the adults to overcome personal and financial barriers

Support systems are available to help students with the stress of working, being a student and taking care of a family. They also help network opportunities with other minority adults.

tuition reimbursement programs for their employees, after an employee pays for and completes

The problem with this, however, is many employees do not have enough money to cover the initial fee before taking the courses, said Karen Montagno, academic counselor for the Office of Continuing Education and coordinating counselor for the program.

The program offers the up-front tuition for the initial payment. The money does not have to be paid back until the participant has completed his or her last quarter of classes and has received reim-

After its first year the program has recruited nine companies and 14 participants and is now "trying to open and expand" the program, said Montagno.

Many of the companies are Almost all of the companies recruited through the Central who belong to the program offer Ohio Minority Affairs Representatives. The members are industry representatives interested in minority affairs.

When a company becomes a participant it nominates minority employees who have promotion and increased responsibility potential within the company.

The company appoints an employer liaison who works with Montagno. A contract is then signed that states the company will reimburse Ohio State for the initial tuition payment.

"It has been a real advantage" said Merlyn Ruffin, an employee at Compuserve and one of the participants in the program. "The primary reasons I joined the program were the up-front tuition and the individualized counseling."

Rosa Williams, a nurse at Mercy Hospital said she began the program to better herself and to have the opportunity to receive better

'At first I had problems," said Williams, who hadn't been to school in 20 years. "I had to learn new study habits."

Steve Wolfe, a liaison between Adria Labs and the university, thinks the program is "working well" but has suggestions on more publicity and expanding the program to other branches.

Montagno is working on starting a program at the Marion Campus. She also wants the program to offer a tutor, a math refresher course, more publicity for the program and increase staffing in the future

In 1986 Vinny Testaverde won the Heisman Trophy for his skills as quarterback In 1950, Vic Janowicz received college football's most prestigious award not only for his skills as Buckeye left halfback - the mainstay in the backfield - but for his proficiency as a punter, kicker and passer for the team.

Janowicz led the Buckeyes in rushing, passing, total offense and punting, as a junior that season. He accounted for 938 yards and 16 touchdowns. In addition, the All-American also played safety on defense. "I could kick the football, pass it, run with it and even blow " Janowicz said.

The versatile Janowicz said his most memorable game as a Buckeye was the 83-21 victory over the University of Iowa in 1950. Janowicz said the Hawkeyes were a respectable team that year, but in that game 11 different Buckeyes scored. Janowicz personally rushed for two touchdowns and passed four more. He also kicked 10 extra points, still an Ohio State

"Since I was in the limelight in the halfback position, every time I touched the ball the first five or six times, we scored a touch-down," he said. "Every time they punted to us I scored running it back, and every time I threw a pass we scored."

Janowicz returned in 1951 for his senior season to face a new coach who brought with him a new formation, the 'split T'.
Woody Hayes replaced Wesley Fesler, after Fesler resigned following a 6-3 record in his final season.

Janowicz said 1951 was a very confusing year. "We had the single wing (offense) down to perfection," he said. "Then Woody came in, threw in the 'split T' and used me as a decoy."

Hayes used Janowicz as a flanker instead of the trailing halfback, expecting the defense to cover the Buckeye standout. At times, Janowicz said Hayes would run him off tackle

"He had me concentrate on my running, so I didn't do much passing," he said.

Because of the new formation, Janowicz did not match the feats he made the year before. How-ever, he again lead the Buckeyes three-year career as a Buckeye, Janowicz played in 26 games, and carried the ball 250 times for 802 yards and 20 touchdowns.

Janowicz said throughout his career he had trouble with only one formation, the 'split T', which he thought was a "ridiculous" offensive strategy. Janowicz said he believes Hayes felt the same many years later.

"The only guy who stopped Vic Janowicz was Woody Hayes," Janowicz said. Janowicz stressed he never held any animosity toward duty. Playing about 70 baseball games while in the military gave him the desire to return to the sport. Janowicz played baseball in high school and briefly at Ohio

Janowicz said he was a "pretty good" player, and even trained with the Cincinnati Reds and Detroit Tigers during the summer of 1950. "Ohio State was quite concerned that I was going to sign a baseball contract and not return to Ohio State University," he said.

Pittsburgh Pirates co-owner John W. Galbreath told Janowicz he could give baseball a try as a Pirate. A month after being released from the military in December, 1952, Janowicz signed with Pittsburgh. At the time, Janowicz was also drafted by the Washington Redskins of the National Football League.

After two seasons with the Pirates and losing "a hundred games a year," Janowicz decided to go with George Preston Marshall, owner of the Redskins, who had been calling Janowicz every week for two years to get him into football.

Janowicz began playing with the Redskins a week after baseball eason.

Janowicz started on defense in 1954, and midway through the season replaced Charlie "Choo Choo" Justice as halfback. Janowicz continued playing defense.

The next season, Janowicz said Janowicz's professional career he became "the Big Cheese" with was put on hold when his Na- the Redskins, leading the league

Ruzich, then an offensive lineman for the Green Bay Packers, played against Janowicz. "He was the key guy to their offense," Ruzich said

After the final exhibition game against the Los Angeles Rams in August, 1956, Janowicz was in an automobile accident that left him paralyzed on the left side of his body. His playing career was Janowicz said he was living with his in-laws in Chicago "wasting away like a vegetable" when Hayes found out his whereabouts. Haves invited Janowicz to the Northwestern game in Chicago that November. In Columbus, Buckeye athletic trainer Ernest Biggs worked with Janowicz, along with staff at University Hospitals. About two years later, Janowicz said he was back on his feet again, able to hold down a job.
