THE STUDENT VOICE OF OHIO

New class good for stalling students

By Andria Venezia Lantern staff writer

For all students putting off writing that last final paper, help is on the way

Bruce Tuckman, a motivation expert and professor of educational policy and leadership, designed a Web-based course, Educational Policy and Leadership 259, which is targeted toward students experiencing difficulty in college courses because of procrastination.

Procrastination is the No. 1 reason highly-qualified students have academic problems, Tuckman said.

He has spent almost three decades studying what motivates college students to learn.

"I've always been fascinated with motivation," Tuckman said.

He came to Ohio State three years ago, when he was recruited to set up the Academic Learning Lab in the Younkin Success Center.

"We try to make them successful students while they're in the class," Tuckman said.

The class focuses on helping students improve their study skills, time and life management, motivation, and test-taking strategies. EPL 259 requires students to turn in more than 200 assignments which can only be completed on the computers in the Academic Learning Lab.

The course's many requirements make it procrastinator-proof, Tuckman said.

"The course is designed to put them in a rhythm of managing their time, which helps with other classes too," he said.

Since the class was first offered in autumn 2000, its enrollment has doubled each year, Tuckman said.

"I think one of the big reasons the course is popular is because it raises GPAs," he said.

During a given quarter, students taking the course have a GPA 0.5 points higher (relative to prior cumulative GPA) than a matched group of students not taking the course.

Each teacher has a different approach to teaching the class, said Cricket Nardacci, an instructor for EPL 259 and a doctoral student in the College of Education.

"I spend my time focusing on ndividual needs of the students," Vardacci said.

Students come into the class with many different levels of ability and past experience with these specific skills, she said.

"The neat thing about this class is it teaches skills that translate into other aspects of students' lives," Vardacci said.

Though the course is a lot of work, students have said they are appreciative of the results.

"It seems like a lot of work, but it really has helped with other classes," said Jennifer Saunders, an undecided freshman.

Tuckman used 116 students taking EPL 259 as his subjects in a recent study.

The aftermath: Students wreak havoc on university area

OSU's reputation burned away with riotous flames

Sunday's riots embarrass alumni and turn away prospective students

By Yvette Yllana Lantern staff writer

Around the city, state, nation and world, former and future Buckeyes alike have responded in masses to the post-Michigan rioting last weekend.

Media coverage of the events has compelled hundreds of viewers to write to the university. The general message from the public has included embarrassment, disgust, a call for an apology by the rioters and action by the university.

"I support OSU 100 percent in expelling all students that embarrassed Ohio State and the city of Columbus," wrote alumnus Jeff Miller.

E-mail messages from former Buckeyes reaching all the way from the United Kingdom and Switzerland made their way to the already overflowing inbox of Lee Tashjian, vice president of University Relations.

"We're receiving one after another, after another," Tashjian

But one local letter captured his attention. Sherry Cashin, mother of a high school senior at St. Ignatius in Cleveland, wrote to Tashjian on Monday.

In her e-mail, she said, "OSU has been permanently and irrevocably eliminated from our consideration for college for our son. In fact, it was his decision to no longer pursue consideration of OSU after viewing the events of the past two days.

Her son plans on majoring in biomedical engineering, and Tashjian said, "He's the type of person we would want to have Regrettably, OSU cannot look forward to adding him to the admissions roster next year.

"Based on the unbelievable lack of respect for people's lives, safety and property, OSU can never be an option for our family," Cashin said in her letter.

Other universities offer help

By Richard Rykens Lantern staff writer

Bill Hall, vice president of Student Affairs at Ohio State, is calling for inter-university cooperation in finding and disciplining students from other universities who participated in the weekend riots.

At the time of Hall's press from Bowling Green State Uni- 13th Avenue. versity, University of Pittsburgh, University of Kentucky, University of Toledo, Capital University and Baldwin-Wallace University were on the arrest record from the riots.

Hall said he had been contacted by a graduate of OSU teaching at Michigan who said he could identify four Michigan conference Monday, students students tipping over a car on Patricia S. Terrel, vice president for Student Affairs at UK, said her university will punish any students found to be involved in the riots.

"This was reprehensible behavior," Terrel said. "We expect UK students to be good students in Lexington or in Ohio."

Police urge students to act with maturity

By Mike White Lantern staff writer

The Columbus Division of Police hopes people who took part in the weekend riots will realize the error of their ways.

"We want people to take responsibility," said Columbus Police Lt. Mike Broberg. "If you were involved and had a change of heart, then give us a call."

Broberg said he wants more victims to step forward.

"Some people think when something like this happens, it is too big to file all the reports, but we want people to fill out reports," Broberg said.

Regardless of whether rioters gain a sudden sense of morality, the Columbus police said they know they still have a lot of work.

"Our biggest challenge is identifying who the people on the tapes are," said Steve Saltsman, head of Columbus arson investigation. "We will review those tapes and try to figure out who those people are. We are also having a hard time in identifying all the burnt cars."

Two of the vehicles are so badly damaged that the usual identification methods - license plates and VIN numbers — were destroyed.

Police officals said they are mystified as to how they can both combat the riots and deal with the public relations that comes with crowd control.

David Andrews has served the Colege of Human Ecology as its dean for the last five years.

high school seniors from considering OSU.

Gary Rasnick, a senior from Sycamore High School in Cincinnati, said the riots do not affect his decision on whether to attend OSU next year.

"I already had my mind set that I was probably going to come here," Rasnick said. "And that didn't bother me whatsoever — what happened here Saturday."

Rasnick said he is not surprised by the rioting at OSU or anywhere else.

"You're going to get people that are really excited over the win or the loss, and they're just going to start tearing up stuff. There's probably no way to prevent it."

Laurie Keys, a senior from Elmwood High School in Wayne, Ohio, agreed prevention is futile.

"I think it's going to happen anywhere," she said. "And it could happen anytime."

Keys's mother, Nancy, was not as nonchalant about the safety on

"Ît definitely makes me think twice," she said about sending her

The riots have not deterred all said the good outweighs the bad when balancing her options at OSU. "There are lots of good opportunities here," she said. But the repercussions of the riots do not last for a single day, at least not for OSU alumni.

Alumni based in New York share more than an alma mater. An unfavorable common bond of a riotous reputation now links them.

Alumnus Stanley Preston said he was the target of jokes when he walked into work Monday.

"My co-workers, having enjoyed my pleasure with the success of my Buckeye team, didn't congratulate me as has been the case after each of our wins this season, but instead asked me if I had ripped the sod up in my yard and set fire to my garbage after the win."

Now that OSU has become the butt of collegiate jokes, the university may struggle to be taken serious-

"While there were several riots throughout the country caused by excessive celebration, the riots at Ohio State took the headlines," Preston said. "Ohio State puts winners on the field of life, but excessive celebrations such as these make the rest of the country believe that we don't know how to handle success."

Dan Lindner, an alumnus based in New York City, attended the game in Columbus and said he was welcomed back to work by a humorless confrontation.

"I have been constantly approached about the riots by my family, friends and coworkers. I have even been accused by my boss of being pictured turning over a car in the New York newspaper; it looks similar to me."

Not all alumni are terribly disturbed, however.

David Hocevar, the president of the Ohio State Alumni Association of Phoenix, said he will remember the legacy of the 13-0 win over Michigan above the riots. "I don't think these riots will have a lasting effect on the team or the university," he said.

Hocevar was a student at OSU in 1968 and remembers the infamous incident when students tore down the goal post and dragged it all the way to the Capitol Building. It's history now. He said people will move on just like they did then.

SCHOOLS FROM PAGE 1

Hall's job may be made easier by an inter-university committee in Ohio. In the past such a committee shared information concerning serious issues like student participation in riots.

"I know when we have our inter-university committee meetings we've talked about this issue before and we've agreed that we would share arrest records," Hall said. "Because they're public information, we can do that.

Hall said his hands are tied to some extent by the Federal Educational Rights to Privacy Act, which limits the kind of information the university can share with other schools.

"For instance, parents can't view records about their own sons or daughters. The student must sign a written statement before we can even tell parents what charges students are facing," Hall said. As of yesterday afternoon, none of the universities identified by Hall have been notified that some of their students were involved in the disturbances. Ruth Gerstner, spokeswoman at Student Affairs, said the university is doing all it can to identify and discipline all who were involved, but they don't want to make any mistakes.

Ron Zwierleine, the senior associate vice president of Student Affairs at BGSU, said students will be subject to the normal judicial process if they were arrested this past weekend.

"Any student caught violating the student code will be reported to judicial affairs," Zwierleine said.

Zwierleine said if the students are found guilty of a "trigger offense," or conduct that jeopardized the safety of the university, then that person would be suspended from school. That suspension would be in effect until the student appears at a hearing which proves the student is no longer a danger to the institution.

"It's a shame, actions like this incident mar the good name of Ohio State and bring distaste to the mouths of those who are associated with the university," Zwierleine said.

Zwierleine received his doctorate at OSU and has a son who

If the students allegedly from Michigan are also found to be guilty of participating in the riots, the procedure at that university would be little different.

Keith Elkin, director of the Office of Student Conflict Resolution at U of M, said he would first need a report of misconduct.

"Typically it's got to be a Michigan faculty or staff member or a student that must make the complaint," Elkin said.

Once that is received, Elkin said students would be prosecuted in a judicial hearing similar to a real court. Students are appointed to prosecute and defend the accused, and Elkin acts as a mediator.

Terrel said once UK students' participation in riots is verified, their judicial process will begin.

"We will send notice to the accused of the charges levied against them. They are given the opportunity to respond, and if the charges are denied, then the student goes to a hearing," Terrel said.

Terrel said she would do everything to cooperate with OSU and determine if students from her university were responsible.

"Our apologies to you and your community," Terrel said.

Gobbling up the top ten reasons to love this holiday

It's finally that time of year again. The time of year for faculty and students alike to make a list, check it twice and....oops, wrong holiday.

It's the time of year to drink beer all day, cause large quantities of destruction to property and start fires. No, wait, that was last

OK, so it's time to eat turkey all day, lay on the couch and watch football and spend time with loved ones.

That's right, it's Thanksgiving. So just what are people doing over the holiday break? Here are the top ten Thanksgiving activities for 2002. 10. Traditional dinner at home

Friends and family really are something to be thankful for.

9. Listen to the "Thanksgiving Song" by Adam Sandler

Sandler says he, "Loves to eat turkey 'cause it's good, he loves to eat turkey like a good boy should. Gobble Gobble goo and Gobble Gobble giggle, I wish turkey only cost a nickel.'

You said it man.

8. Play pin the tail on the turkey

This is a favorite activity of Shane Walter, a senior in finance at OSU. "Each year my family sets three birds loose in our yard. We call them yardbirds, but they're actually real turkeys," Walter said. "The first one of us to catch a yard-bird and stick him with the tail gets the wishbone. Believe me, it's harder than you'd think."

7. Gamble the turkey in Las Vegas Hop a plane to the desert to enjoy a holiday spin of the roulette wheel with Wayne Newton, the ghost of Frank Sinatra and the Vegas showgirls.

6. Spend Thanksgiving with the president (Bush or Holbrook)

OSU student Terri Lindenmayer, a native of D.C., said the White House always leaves the left-over turkey out for visitors to make sandwiches with. "It's too dry and overcooked," Lindernmayer said.

Is she talking about the turkey?

5. Go to a Blue Jackets game.

Kay Halasek, professor in English, said by day she'll keep her nose in "Snows Falling on Cedars" by David Guterson, but at night she's ready for some action. Some non-academic action at a Blue Jackets game.

4. Spend Thanksgiving with motivational speaker Matt Foley.

Go down by the river with Chris Farley and the rest of the cast members from "Saturday Night Live's" past, and watch SNL reruns all day on Comedy Central.

3. Combine large quantities of wine and turkey.

With the alcohol in wine, and the triptophene in turkey, you'll be sleeping like a baby before you know it. Just make sure Jerry and George don't get into your toy collection.

2. Collect insurance money.

Josh Cartmell was planning on a normal Thanksgiving, until his car was tipped over Saturday night. "It's not that big a deal," Cartmell said. "I mean, we did win the game." And the No. 1 thing to do for Thanksgiving is.... 1. Sleep.

Erik Bussa is a senior in journalism.

The study revealed the worst procrastinators received significantly lower grades in the course than did low or moderate-level procrastinators.

The worst procrastinators were also more likely than others to use rationalizations such as "I work best under pressure" to justify their behavior. The worst procrastinators' lower grades show their rationalizations are nothing more than wishful thinking, Tuckman said.

Last August, Tuckman presented the results of his study in Chicago at the annual meeting of the American Psychological Association, to an estimated attendance of 60,000.

"In the past, if we're out there students go; 'It's your fault,' but if you're not out there they also say 'it's your fault," said Columbus police spokeswoman Sherry Mercurio.

Columbus Division of Fire Chief Mike Fultz said he is proud of the way his people handled the violence that occurred when they attempted to control the various fires. The firefighters continued to work while they were peppered with insults, rocks and bottles. "It was an extremely unusual experience," Fultz said. "Citizens usually help us when their neighborhood is on fire. The scale of rioters against firefighters was much larger than normal. The last time it was like that was in the '60s and '70s.' No citizens or officers got hurt, Fultz said. He commended firefighters for

Fiesta Bowl T-shirts a hot item

After Michigan game, winning shirts sell at rate of one every 4.2 seconds

By Sean Casey Lantern staff writer

As the Ohio State football team rang up a second consecutive victory over Michigan last weekend, local venders rang up a vast number of merchandise sales at their registers.

"It was phenomenal, just phenomenal. Both the day before the game and the day after the game ... and actually ever since," said Kathy Smith, the general manager of Long's Bookstore and the Ohio State University Bookstore. "We got in the 'Gold Pants-Michigan Score' T-shirts about two hours after the game ended and sold out in 21 minutes."

Almost 300 were sold in that 21minute span, but the demand for the shirts was still unsatisfied, she

"The next morning, we had 40 people in line waiting at the doors before we opened."

Kelly Dawes, part owner of College Traditions, said her store is being overrun by those infected with scarlet and gray fever.

"Since the game, we've been doing a lot of Victory tees, and now we have the Big Ten Locker Room caps and tees along with Fiesta Bowl goods that just came in today," she said. "(The fans) are buying them out of the box."

Smith and Dawes said their stores were able to get the merchandise with the Michigan score on it on game day because of agreements with local printers. Once the game ended, printers added the score to the shirts' pre-designed screens and began churning them out.

"We just took a small order that night, so we could get it here in time to sell it before we closed," Smith said. "The rest we took the next morning."

"It's just a lot of planning from the manufacturers and retailers combined to get that stuff on the shelves quickly," Dawes said.

College Traditions' sales for Michigan weekend were higher than in years past.

FIESTA BOWL

"It was completely different this year. Leading up to it, we've just been swamped," Dawes said.

'The way the season kind of unfolded, with all the close games and intensity, it has created a whole new level of excitement," Smith said.

Both said they expect to move a lot of merchandise over the holiday season. Their stores have already received hundreds of mail and Internet orders, they said.

Venders of unlicensed products have an opportunity to cash in on the team's success.

Rick Van Brimmer, director of the Office of Trademark and Licensing at OSU, said counterfeit merchandise follows normal patterns of sales. Because of the short amount of time between now and the Fiesta Bowl, there is an increased risk of a "hot market situation," he said. These situations allow unlicensed venders to print and unload their merchandise quickly, leaving little evidence behind.

"Bootleggers don't stay in one place at one time, the ones that are at Ohio State one weekend are operating in somebody else's backyard the next," Van Brimmer said.

The university has patrols out on the streets for every home game, looking for bootleggers, he said.

"We use plain clothes policemen, as well as private investigators who walk through the crowd," Van Brimmer said. 'Sometimes bootleggers will walk right up to us."

He said the university cannot be sure how much money is made through unlicensed selling of merchandise. He believes OSU is losing in unpaid royalties,

"A small percentage of a huge number is still a big deal," he said. Van Brimmer said his office is working with representatives of the Fiesta Bowl to ensure the protection of their trademarks as well.

Faulty teaching

Confused students need options

Earlier this month, Michigan state Sen. Joanne Emmons, R-Big Rapids, proposed an idea to reimburse students for classes in which they were unable to learn because they were unable to understand either their professor or teaching assistant. The policy — which has not yet been offered as legislation — would initially be enacted in all public universities in Michigan, followed by other Michigan universities, and would allow for a refund to be given any time before the last six weeks of the semester.

The idea was created as a response to increasing education costs — Emmons believes as educational costs increase, there should be more emphasis on making sure students are getting the education they're paying for.

Ohio State — which for years has been subject to countless losses because of cuts to education funding — is no stranger to implementing higher tuition costs, and should — for the welfare of the students - give this idea some serious thought.

One of the most common impediments to learning for OSU students is the inability to understand some of the international teaching assistants and professors. This should come as no surprise, since a majority of OSU students are originally from Ohio and other states in the Midwest and are accustomed to hearing "Midwest English" — the standard in American English because it lacks accent and contains very few regional alterations - their

If a student used to hearing "normal" English comes to OSU and finds for the first time he or she must depend on a teaching assistant or professor with a heavy accent or who speaks with broken English, will become frustrated, especially if he or she is completely unable to adapt to these different forms of English.

Though a teacher's ability to verbally communicate does not matter so much in fields like history or literature — in which all material presented is almost always found in paralleling assigned text written in clear English — the ability to communicate abstract principles in math and science fields is absolutely vital. Most science and math books fall short of being able to explain the information, and are instead useful only as formula lists.

In any of these cases where understanding the teacher is critical to understanding the course, there is no reason a refund should be denied to a student, especially in cases of sequences in which information learned in early courses becomes the base for

Of course, it would seem this course of action would lend itself to the university shying away from using international teachers. Critics argue this would lead to less diversity, and the loss of a great deal of knowledge most American professors might not have. But while these international teachers do have some experience our domestics might not, there is little use to having such teachers if they are not able to communicate this wealth of knowledge to students.

Though diversity of knowledge is essential to a good education, so is understanding the material of the courses students take. In the long run, there should be stricter regulations on how understandable international students must be. But until this can be regulated, students should have an option out so they do not waste increasing amounts of money on something not contributing to

Religion, public areas don't mix

Four schools in southern Ohio display the Ten Commandments on their grounds. The 800-pound stone slabs were placed at the Adams County schools in 1997 with the help of a United Methodist minister.

In Alabama, a 5,300-pound monument of the Ten Commandments sits in the rotunda of the state's judicial building. Chief Justice Roy Moore arranged to have the massive statue in the building.

Appeals courts in both states have ruled the statues should be removed from government grounds. The Associated Press reported that Ohio appeals Judges Damon Keith and Karen Moore said the expense or inconvenience wasn't enough to overcome the continuing constitutional violation of having the dis-

Ohio public schools have already been scrutinized for only allowing the teaching of the evolution theory until recently. A religious symbol conveys the same type of message — the belief only one idea is right.

This country is at the point where people should know better than to attempt a stunt like this. National religious identity has expanded beyond the realm of Christianity.

U.S. Rep. Rob Portman, R-Ohio said he would support legislation to allow the Commandments to be displayed and believes "the Ten Commandments are not so much a symbol of a specific religion, but rather constitute the moral principles on which many religions are based." This statement may have some truth, but that is not what the United States is based on. Religious endorsements have no place at government institutions. The perception of a fair trial is nullified with the representation of an "open Bible resting on a podium." Public schools educate about how the world works, they don't endorse a particular religion. At least we know our Ohio judicial system has its head on straight.

Officials set hopes very high

he weekend of the Ohio State-Michigan game is like Las Vegas, New Orleans during Mardi Gras and a Sex Pistols concert all mixed together and multiplied by 10. It's one of the few places you'll see two girls aged 20 and 60 wearing cowboy hats and puking on the same fence. It's all like a huge rugby pileup, full of excess and exuberance, anger and frustration, coming to a fever pitch to explode.

But I guess city officials just didn't understand, or at least not in time.

Granted, no one could have predicted how bad everything would get. However, Karen Holbrook and others in charge didn't seem to anticipate anything out of the ordinary surrounding the OSU-Michigan game, acting surprisingly optimistic before the biggest, meanest rivalry in sports came crashing down onto one of the nation's most intense party schools — even in the midst of a quest for a national championship title.

For instance, Holbrook's committee formed to study gamerelated behavior was "not planning to make any major changes" for the game. Sherry Mercurio, spokeswoman for the Columbus Division of Police, said they did not expect any riots.

These head-in-the-sand comments only provoke the question, "Why the hell not?" Why were Columbus and university officials so blindly optimistic? Maybe they wanted to seem hopeful so as not to cause a stir, secretly fearing the worst. It's true, publicly predicting a war zone would seem sensationalis-unnecessary negativity. But then why was the university district so unprepared for what happened?

tic and may have created more

Any secret anxiety officials felt was not acted upon. The campus area preparations mirrored their spoken optimism.

First, there were only minor precautions taken around the off-campus area, such as parking bans and extra trash collection. Second, there was far too little preparation for the post-game celebration. Officials kept insisting there would be a police presence, but campus wouldn't become a police state. Officers would simply be working their regular shifts without significant increase in staffing.

Why this was promised remains a mystery. No student partier or tourist promised their parties wouldn't turn into riots. No "thug" said he wouldn't start fires. There was no real basis for trusting anybody, let alone a student body with such a poor party record in a situation with so much at stake and laden with so much destructive rage.

Hunter S. Thompson once said, "You can turn your back on a person, but never turn your back on a drug." And It's probably pretty dumb to turn your back and hope for the best when it's practically guaranteed that thousands of people will be ripped and twisted on beer and drugs, celebrating in the streets in the morbid ways they have in the past.

a fascist police regime is an insult to civil liberties. On Michigan weekend, cops ing, which always prove to be the least of worries.

Officials communicating and planstudents can't drink, blast music and get wild. It just means they can't start fires, overturn cars and rip out telephone poles.

The result of the trusting, optimistic pleas for respect and unprepared, disconnected game policies was a campus and student body which were vulnerable to attack. Most of it from people who don't even go to OSU.

The only question still remaining is: can you handle

As the former news editor of a college newspaper, I recognize the value of free speech and the communication of ideas. I recognize that to enhance communications in the "Marketplace of Ideas" the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution has created, the press plays an important role. The press has the responsibility and duty to accurately report news to the public.

However, in doing so, the press has a duty to convey the news with neutrality and to report the news with impartiality. However, editors and columnists are given the opportunity to convey their personal viewpoints on hot news topics via the editorial pages of the paper.

I am writing this letter in response to an editorial written by Vijay Ramanavarapu, a columnist at The Lantern. The editorial was very well written, and I do not take offense to Mr. Ramanavarapu expressing his views toward U.S. policies. Every American has the right to criticize the policies and practices of their government.

However, the first paragraph of the editorial shocked me. It read as follows: "Even though Ronald Reagan can't move very well or form coherent thoughts, he continues to wreak havoc on America."

There are many ways that Mr. Ramanavarapu could have conveyed his thoughts on policies initiated during the Reagan era. Instead, Mr. Ramanavarapu chose to use a phrase relating to the mental health of one of America's greatest leaders. This comment was in poor taste.

May Mr. Ramanavarapu never be inflicted with a debilitating disease such as Alzheimer's disease. May he never have to care for a close family member or friend who has been inflicted with the disease. Perhaps then he would find his choice of words grossly inappropriate.

Security column ignores the facts

After reading Monday's col-umn entitled "U.S. does not defend privacy," I was very disappointed with its lack of factual accuracy and by the naiveté of the author concerning the war on ter-

First, his criticism of Ronald Reagan (for appointing three judges to the FISC review board who supported Ashcroft's proposal) was completely off the mark and does not at all reflect Reag character. Reagan abhorred big government and spent most of his life fighting - and finally defeating - communism, the most repressive type of big government. He made reducing big government in Washington his No. 1 one domestic priority.

The author's joke about Reagan's debilitating Alzheimer's was in very poor taste. Even now that the ex-president is a shadow of his former self, the fact remains that this man, more than any other single individual, brought down the

One of the lessons we could learn from Reagan was wars must be fought with only one goal in mind: absolute and total victory. The war on terrorism must be fought in exactly the same way or it is doomed from the start, like the Vietnam War and the dismal détente policy.

As the author pointed out, efficiently analyzing intelligence data is the key to preventing future attacks. The Department of Homeland Security was created exactly for this purpose, not "so the government can garner any information or people they deem suspicious or potentially dangerous."

It does not include the controversial Operation TIPS idea or authorize the Total Information Awareness program for using computer databases to pick out terrorist tendencies. Its goal is simply to combine existing agencies into one department to strengthen our ability to combat terrorism.

The $40 billion price tag stated by the author is just plain wrong; the $40 billion figure is actually the sum of the current budgets of the 22 separate agencies which the Homeland Security Department will replace, not the cost of implementing the new department.

If we truly want to defeat the terrorists, we need both a strong offense and defense. Our troops in Afghanistan provided the offense, and the Homeland Security Department will be a good first line of defense.

Keith Platfoot student in engineering It seems a growing faction of people in our age group have lost a sense of accountability for their actions. For example, the thought of commandeering an innocent bystander's automobile, flipping it and torching it seems ludicrous to me and most other sane people.

Furthermore, ripping the door from someone's home as fuel for fire to most people seems absurd. As of late, there is a growing element — within the age group of college students — that participates in these activities of reckless abandon with no sense of consequence.

Enter the parents. Those who exhibit this behavior demonstrate a clear lack of understanding of accountability. Why are they without accountability? It is because their parents never taught it to them. Many "baby-boomer" parents, in an effort to be what they perceive as "better" parents than their own, have become too permissive with their children.

By not properly disciplining children, or teaching them consequences, parents have showed their children that one is not responsible for his actions. It is because of this type of child rearing that this violent trend continues, and we've seen the genesis of school shootings, violent university riots and other damaging activities. Imagine social trends that drive high school kids to murder and a football game that drives college-age people to destroy. What's wrong with this picture?

I truly feel bad for Coach Tressel, the team and the majority of students at this university — those who are hard working, well-tempered people. There are so many great things happening here; yet until things change, the success of many will be overshadowed by the lack of responsibility of a few.

I hope the university and the city of Columbus punish Sunday morning's offenders to the full extent of the law, and finally send the message that their parents didn't care to teach them: you will be held accountable for your actions.

Riots show great disrespect to OSU

I applaud university president Karen A. Holbrook for taking prompt action against the students who have ultimately humiliated our university. Just one suggestion — maybe OSU should consider offering rewards to people who can name unidentified rioters.

Our Buckeyes and Coach Tressel have poured every ounce of energy and pride they have into this 13-0 record. The students who chose to represent the university by setting fire to furniture and automobiles should at the very least be suspended if not expelled, and above all, held accountable for the financial damage caused to the community and their fellow students.

I don't care how intoxicated one may be, but how cool is it to trash and burn another person's vehicle or better yet, loot Long's Book Store? Last time I checked, we were in Columbus, not Los Angeles.

What may be the most disappointing fact of all is instead of our nation hearing about Maurice Clarett making school history, CNN has reports of the riots on national television and online. It's not exactly the kind of PR we were hoping for. Rather, you played right into the "Generation X" stereotypes that we normal people fight against every day.

Going to bed Saturday, I was blushing with Buckeye pride. Now, while at work Monday, I had to listen to my boss, a Michigan alumnus, thank me for not destroying his property and automobile. Thanks.

Police responded well against rioters

"The police need to be more discerning." This was a comment made to me by a friend at about 4 a.m. while we were sitting in Jimmy Johns following the night of the riots. As I walked down 13th Avenue at about 1 a.m., I saw a huge crowd of people cheering and taunting a line of police officers dressed in full riot gear, and I knew things were bad and would get worse.

What was most shocking to me was that people were getting so upset by police actions. People seemed to think the police were using an unnecessary amount of force. What else could they do? There is simply no excuse for destroying street signs, lamps, other people's cars and a landmark Ohio State store.

But even though most people did not actively participate in these behaviors, there were still large crowds encouraging these acts. I was standing on High Street watching a burning couch in the middle of the road when I was unexpectedly pepper sprayed. Although it was very painful, I was not angry with the police for having done it. Why? I knew by being out there the possibility of me getting pepper sprayed or hit with rubber bullets or knee-knockers was real.

My roommate, on the other hand, stayed inside, watched a movie, went to bed and woke up the next morning without any horror stories of what the police did to him. Why? Because he did not go outside. Anyone who did not flip a car or break a window could say they did not deserve to be tear gassed or sprayed, but how are the police suppose to distinguish between people who did not have malevolent intent and those who did?

The "real rioters" did not wear distinguishing marks, and there is no real way to determine if a seemingly innocent bystander will not decide to set a Dumpster on fire or throw a trash can into the middle of High Street.

Since those things cannot be easily determined in the context of a riot, the only thing left to do is treat everyone as if they will behave poorly. The police are a reactionary force responding to senseless acts of destruction initiated not by other police officers, but by rioters. If students (who were the majority of the rioters) choose to behave irrationally, then it is the duty of police officers to re-establish order. If people did not like the form of order the police chose to establish then they should have been mature enough to either control themselves in the first place or stay inside.

OSU rioters who were upset about getting sprayed probably have no idea what real police brutality is. I have no idea what real police brutality is, but I do know what happened in the early hours of Sunday morning was not true brutality. True brutality is not a relatively small group of police officers spraying huge crowds of reckless college students after an OSU victory over Michigan, regardless of whether or not everyone in the crowd was rioting.

There is such a thing as guilt by association. Just because you did not do the crime yourself, proximity to those who did breeds suspicion. My only question to the police was why nine cars were flipped over before they intervened. My sympathy goes out to those who have to deal with finding other means of transportation much more than those, myself included, who had to deal with a stinging, burning sensation in their faces for a few minutes.

Riot solution: lower drinking age to 18

The recent riots near the OSU campus were, as all similar riots have been, an inexcusable abomination. Students arrested for their involvement should be expelled. Students and non-students who were involved should spend time in jail.

City officials in the future would be justified in instituting a curfew to keep people off the streets after football games to prevent similar occurrences. University officials should seriously consider suspending the Buckeyes' participation in postseason play as a result of fans' actions.

That being said, President Holbrook has asked what can be done about the nationwide problem of college student riots. One answer, paradoxically, is to lower the drinking age to 18.

The current law that sets the drinking age at 21 does not prevent a single college student from getting alcohol if one wants it. What the law does do is label something "illegal" that virtually every college student between the ages of 18 and 20 does at least occasionally. When this unreasonable law turns students into lawbreakers when they drink, it causes respect for the law to decline. (For another, well-known example of this phenomenon, recall the Prohibition Era in the 1920s United States.)

When one is already engaging in "illegal behavior" simply by drinking, a relevant line has already been crossed, and it becomes easier to engage in other forms of illegal behavior, particularly when one's judgment is impaired by alcohol. Obviously it doesn't work this way for everyone, but the student riots that our president has described as "national and ongoing" seem to provide ample evidence that it works this way for a significant number of people.

Lowering the drinking age to 18 would allow larger numbers of college students to drink socially in more supervised settings such as bars, and even on campus. Not as many would turn to illicit off-campus parties where sexual assaults, exploitation and other forms of injury are all too common. I'm sure that Columbus law enforcement would agree riots would be much easier to control and prevent if the masses of students who currently fuel them were not present on the Lowering the drinking age to 18 would also allow our university residence life and student affairs professionals to treat drinking realistically and constructively as an issue of student health and welfare, rather than as a discipline issue. For students with serious, life-impairing drinking problems, this would be a life-saving shift.

Lowering the drinking age to 18 would allow younger students to socialize more with older students, allowing older students to model responsible, more mature social drinking behavior. Over time, this would help to change the culture surrounding drinking among our young people.

Many argue that lowering the drinking age would cause the number of drinking-and-driving-related injuries and deaths to skyrocket. However, if this is the problem about which we are concerned, then this is the issue our law should address. We should not discriminate against an entire age cohort of citizens because of the harmful actions of a minority, particularly when there are serious negative consequences to doing so. If we are serious about preventing drinking-and-driving, then we need to do the following things:

A first offense must be a felony, regardless of whether any injury or property damage resulted, and must result in both jail time and a multi-year drivers license suspension. A second offense must result in permanent license revocation, and a long jail term.

We must make a national effort to make driving after drinking absolutely unacceptable and to make alternative forms of transportation and accommodation readily available.

When 18-year-olds can vote, can marry, defend our country in the military, and are considered adults in our society in every other way, not allowing them to drink is an absurd legal and social incongruity. As the riots and the other negative consequences discussed above demonstrate, the effects of this law are not trivial.

While the law has reduced the numbers of young people who kill and are killed in drinking related car accidents, it has spawned and exacerbated a host of other social ills. There are other ways to keep people from drinking and driving if we are serious about it.

Young people should organize and demand the law be changed. Older people should support them, and our leaders should hear them and act in our collective best interest by reducing the drinking age to 18.

ELIZABETH NIHISER/THE LANTERN Tailback Maurice Clarett avoids Michigan's Charles Drake en route to the Buckeyes' 14-9 victory that sent them to the Fiesta Bowl.

Fiesta Bowl welcomes Buckeyes

By Matt Andrews Lantern sports writer

Deep down inside, John Junker wanted nothing more than the Buckeyes to take the tortilla chip and scoop up the salsa.

OSU did just that on Saturday by beating Michigan 14-9, and in the process earned the Big Ten's first ever berth in the BCS National Championship game.

Junker, the president and CEO of the Tostitos Fiesta Bowl, is a native of Akron and grew up following the Buckeyes. He knew there was no reason to wait in extending the offer to Ohio State.

As approved by the BCS earlier in the week, Junker made the invite despite the final BCS standings being weeks from official.

"It really came down to this very simply," Junker said. "With Ohio State's victory, nobody in America can fathom any way, either statisti-cally or ethically, that Ohio State could be left out of the national championship game, as one of two major undefeateds in the nation.

"It was obviously the right decision when you saw the looks on the faces of those players (in the locker room) after going to battle with the Wolverines in the kind of game they did," he said.

The reaction by the Buckeyes after Junker offered the invite can best be described as joyful.

"We're honored to be here to have an opportunity to host the Ohio State University, their football team, their fans, their legend, their history and traditions in our game this Jan. 3 for college football's national champi-

Junker said the top priority of the committee is to satiate the needs of both teams, to give them the opportunity to be fully prepared to take home college football's grand prize.

For the fans, however, Junker said the activities are numerous.

On Tuesday, Dec. 31, the Fort McDowell Fiesta Bowl Parade will feature Ohio State's marching band. The Grand Marshall of the parade is Cal Ripken Jr.

New Year's Eve can be celebrated at the Tempe Tostitos Fiesta Bowl Block Party. The party has been named by USA Today as one of the top 10 places to be in the nation on New Year's Eve. Among those performing are the Charlie Daniels Band, the Go-Go's and Collective Soul. About 100,000 people are expected.

On Thursday, Jan. 2, the Fiesta Bowl presents BCS first — The National Championship Pep Rally — next to Sun Devil Stadium.

Junker said it was one of the goals of the BCS to create this setting — one that can be compared to practice day at the Final Four.

On game day the bowl presents "College Football's Biggest Party.

"We've hosted groups upwards of 35-40 thousand for the event, a terrific event prior to the game. We really try to make sure the football teams can prepare for football, but the fans can have tremendous memories and a lot of fun with the events that go along with the national championship game," Junker said.

Junker said the post game riots were not a concern of the committees.

"The riots are regrettable and obviously they happen in a lot of places across the nation," he said. "We have no compunction, hesitation or concern about the quality of people who will come to celebrate Ohio State, and seek to enjoy a national championship game being in our community.

'No community has a monopoly of knuckleheads, and there are a few even in our own community," Junker said in reference to the Valley of the Sun.

Fans interested in learning more on the 2003 Tostitos Fiesta Bowl have two Internet options.

The official site of the bowl is www.tostitosfiestabowl.com and the bowl's partner for lodging and accommodations, the Scottsdale Convention and Visitor's Bureau's Web site, at www.scottsdalecvb.com.

It is still undecided as to when the Buckeyes will depart for the desert, but OSU athletics spokesman Steve Snapp said the earliest the team would leave for Tempe is Dec. 26.

Cagers hit century mark

By Matt Duval Lantern sports writer

With a much bigger frontcourt and a deeper bench than the competition, the Ohio State women's basketball team looked to have an easy match-up with Wayne State in the Buckeyes' home opener last night.

While OSU (2-0) walked away from the Schottenstein Center with a 100-57 win over the visiting Warriors, the Buckeyes got all they could handle for the first fifteen minutes of the contest.

I think we were just a little tentative early in the game," said OSU women's basketball coach Jim Foster. "This time of year, it's the first time for seeing things and we probably weren't as aggressive as we can be.'

OSU started the game on a 6-0 run as guard Ashley Allen hit a three-pointer. Center LaTova Turner followed with a bucket and free throw.

Wayne State began to heat up. The Buckeyes tried to work the ball inside, but the Warriors concentrated most of their offense beyond the three-point arc.

Fifteen of Wayne State's first 17 points came on 5-of-7 three-point shooting and the Warriors took a 17-10 advantage.

We weren't really surprised at their three-point shooting, Turner said. "Coach told us that we needed to watch the threes.

The Warrior lead grew as large as five before OSU began to chip away.

While it struggled early in the contest, the Buckeye post play finally began to use its height advantage. The 6-foot 3-inch Turner scored four point of her 23 points and forward D'wan Shackleford added a layup of her own as OSU pulled to within one.

OSU finally took back a 28-27 lead on Turner's inside jumper. But the Warriors wouldn't

The two teams traded baskets and a trey by Wayne State's Kristen Rogers tied the score at 30-all with just under six minutes remaining in the half.

That's when things turned sour for the Warriors.

For the final five minutes of the opening half, the Buckeyes went on a 17-0 run to take a 47-30 halftime lead.

MELISSA MILLER/THE LANTERN Buckeye forward Latoya Turner delivers the ball to the hoop against Wayne State. Turner capped the night with 23 points, second among all scorers in Ohio State's 100-57 win.

"We are a team capable of runs," Foster said. "We began to settle into a rhythm and got aggressive."

Much of OSU's success during that scoring run came from frontcourt. Shackleford scored six more points during the run. Forward Courtney Coleman scored a game-high 29 points, many coming during OSU's 19-point scoring purge.

"I think our size played a big part," Coleman said. "I felt pretty good out there and was just going with the flow."

The second half belonged entirely to the Buckeyes as the lead continued to grow. A 20-6 run midway through the latter half extended their lead to 75-47. Beth Howe's layup in the final minute put OSU at the century mark.

Sophomore wing Meaghan Mulvaney (22) heads after a loose puck in front of the Connecticut net in the Buckeyes' 6-2 victory over the Huskies on Nov. 17. That was the first home win for the Ohio State this season.

Women's hockey needs season victory

Weekend last chance this year for OSU to get conference home win

By Mike White Lantern sports writer

The Ohio State women's hockey team (3-9-2,2-6-2 WCHA) will try to win its first conference home game of the year when it hosts St. Cloud State this weekend for two games at the OSU Ice Arena.

"We would really love to win that first game in our building," said OSU women's hockey coach Jackie Barto. 'We need to start using the home ice to our advantage."

While the Buckeyes respect St. Cloud State (3-8-0, 3-5-0 WCHA) they said they are confident they will be able to beat them.

They are a hard-working, fairly skilled team," Barto said. "But I think we're going to have a great weekend. We just need to make that big play that will win us some games.

Defender Christine Partno stressed the importance of a Buckeye victory.

"These games are huge for us," said senior defender Christine Patno. "I think that with the way we have played recently we can win them."

Both teams are tied for fourth place in the WCHA.

This is a big game for a lot of teams because there are only about four points separating the fourth place team from the seventh place team," Patno said. "I plan on every team coming out hard in the next couple of weeks because they are huge for every team right now.

This will be the Buckeyes' last chance for almost two months to win a home game, until they face Merychurst on Jan. 25.

Last weekend, OSU faced the always tough No. 7 Wisconsin Badgers. While OSU didn't win either of the games, the team played well. The Buckeyes tied Wisconsin in Madison on Friday before losing to the Badgers on Saturday.

"We played pretty good but couldn't get our chances in the net," said junior defender Emma Laaksonnen.

The Buckeyes outshot the Badgers 46 to 29 over both

"Overall, we had a good weekend," Barto said. "In a lot of ways we out played them. We just couldn't pull it out."

The few, the dumb, the rioters

Sport-related riots are nothing new and they aren't uniquely American or confined to one sport.

As far back as the 1700s, the British would riot over cricket games. Montreal rioted after it won a Stanley Cup in the early '90s. In 1992 fans caused more than S10 million worth of damage after the Chicago Bulls won the NBA title. And the word riot routinely appears next to the word soccer. So if sports riots are destined to happen, the question has to be: why? Why would someone want to commit all this vandalism and violence because of the outcome of a game? And why, in the name of Woody Hayes, would anyone want to riot after their team won a big game?

Unfortunately, this question is impossible to answer.

A room full of 10 Ph.D.s would come up with 10 different answers.

But I can tell you pointing only to alcohol is a cop-out. If you are one of the morons trashing the off-campus area, you're going to have to come up with a much better excuse.

Many students and fans were just as inebriated as anyone destroying our school's reputation, and the only senseless acts they committed were hugging and high-fiving every stranger they saw.

Sports celebrations can be joyous, as they are supposed to be. I was in Boston when the New England Patriots won the Super Bowl. While the circumstances were very similar, the result was different. After the Super Bowl, the intoxicated fans flooded onto the city streets. There was no tipping over cars, kicking in windows, and starting blazes. While everyone was as drunk as Teddy Kennedy on New Year's Eve, they didn't riot. The fans simply danced, hugged and screamed. It was in good taste and the city's reputation wasn't tarnished.

So I don't want to hear anybody playing the keg card. While many drunken sport celebrations end up in a ball of flames, many don't. All week we were told to act responsibly. But when it came down to it, we failed. The reason I say we failed is because that's how the rest of the nation sees it.

Most of the student body wasn't a part of these actions but unfortunately all of us carry the weight.

The rest of the nation doesn't see a few names rioting, they see our Ohio State University rioting and now we all have to live with the consequences.

The Buckeyes accomplished something incredible and unexpected and we repay them with a riot. Instead of the entire country marveling at their trip to the Fiesta Bowl, it was focusing on OSU's riot fiesta.

It is in my opinion that the only way to deal with these idiots is to treat them like idiots.

As far as I know, idiots shouldn't attend a school as great as Ohio State. Because they proved their mental ability so well on Sunday morning, they should pack up and try not to let the door hit them on the way out.

And all the people who simply cheered on the destruction of our school's reputation should also be dealt with harshly. No one who encouraged what went on should have the privilege of ever cheering on the Buckeyes. While no crime was committed, they are very much responsible and should not be able to go to OSU games. No, Columbus is not the epicenter of morons in the world.

They exist all over the place and what occurred this weekend is not anything new to the world.

It has happened before and it will happen again. Hopefully we have learned our lesson and the only riots we will be seeing from now on will be on CNN and not from our pepperspray-soaked eyes.

Somehow I doubt that.

Comic fans to take over Easton

By Sarah Cornelius Lantern arts writer

Along with hosting the usual post-Thanksgiving mob, Easton will become a holy ground for comic book fans as it hosts the 23rd annual Mid-Ohio-Con.

An estimated five to eight thousand fans from the United States, Canada and Europe are expected to make the Columbus pilgrimage in order to meet more than 145 of their favorite comic book artists, illustrators and writers.

'Comics are the original American art form," said Mid-Ohio-Con executive producer Rodger Price. "They are classic entertainment and a medium that as kids, many of us learned to read by.

Although comics are the main attraction, anime and role playing rooms will also be featured.

Special celebrity guests include stars from the hit movies "Spider-Man" and "Star Wars: Episode 2" along with TV characters from "Buffy The Vampire Slayer" and

"The Mid-Ohio-Con is very wellknown and one of the oldest conventions in the nation but the reason it is so well-loved is because it's not as big as some of the other yearly comic events," said Gib Bickel, owner of comic book store, The Laughing Ogre. "At some of the other conventions, there might be a thousand people in line for an artist, in which case your contact with them is limited to them signing your book and you being on your way, but fans get a lot more personal interaction at Mid-Ohio-Con."

Price is very proud of that repu-

"We pride Mid-Ohio-Con on being fun and friendly with accessible guests," Price said.

Fans long for the chance to meet and speak with their favorite artists, which is one reason The Laughing Ogre hosts its pre-party the night before the show opens.

"Our pre-party is a celebration of comics," Bickel said. "It's a place where retailers, professionals and fans come together to socialize about something that they are very passionate about." Bickel said he hopes this year's convention will spark new interests in the comic scene. 'Readership is low right now, as with any media that relies on audience participation," Bickel said. "The mentality that exists today is 'why read newspapers, magazines or comic books when you can look at the TV or play video games,' but comic readers are looking for something that's different and something that not everyone is into."

Easton Comic Town manager Rob Patton finds that most people who are interested in comics are also interested in the world of fantasy.

'With comic books, you read and follow life in a fantasy world," Patton said. "And usually the people who are interested in the different characters and story lines in comics find themselves also interested in gaming."

Role playing games will be another attraction at the convention. Tournaments will be held where fans can play and try to outsmart each other. The newest game, "Hero Clix," is anticipated to draw a big crowd. "Hero Clix," which is comparable to chess but only with Marvel and DC comic characters, has looped together the gaming and comic worlds.

"The Mid-Ohio-Con is an awesome opportunity to cross promote the two hobbies," Patton said.

The Mid-Ohio-Con opens at 10 a.m. this Saturday and Sunday at the Hilton Columbus at Easton. The convention costs $15 per day and is open to the general public.

No battle between man, machine in animation

By Anthony Breznican Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — On one hand, you've got traditional ink-andpaint animation, and on the other, there's 3-D computer animation.

In the case of John Silver, a cyborg character in Disney's sci-fi adventure cartoon "Treasure Planet," there's both: his human half was hand-drawn, while his robotic side was created and manipulated digitally.

"The computer is great for symmetry and mechanical perfection - a machine drawing a machine," said animator Glen Keane, who drew and supervised the character's organic side. "Humans are better at imperfection ... which works best for the expressive and emotional parts."

The hybrid animation in the film, a futuristic reworking of Robert Louis Stevenson's pirate novel "Treasure Island," is part of an ever-changing fusion of art and technology that's designed to add new levels of dimension and detail to cartoon worlds. Silver's steely hand had so many tiny gears and hydraulic pistons that swivel, twist and clench

The computerized arm also served the story thematically, said "Treasure Planet" co-director John

"All the characters have a missing piece," he said, and Silver's robotic side represents the humanity he sacrificed during his life of buccaneering.

Once the dimensions of the devise scenes with camera moves digital animator Eric Daniels pushed, pulled and turned its components on the screen instead of repeatedly redrawing them.

"There is an element of puppetry there in terms of how you have to maneuver the arm," said "Treasure Planet" producer Roy Conli. "You can't think of a computer as just a very expensive pencil."

Keane started the process by sketching the stubbly, bulbous body of the pirate with only a crude outline of the mechanized side. Daniels then laid the gesticulating intricacies of the computerized parts atop Keane's drawings.

Once both elements were in place, they were colored and shaded to create the illusion that the entire character was illustrated by Digital technology also allowed the filmmakers to replace static, painted backgrounds with "virtual" sets" — computerized 3-D models that can bustle with activity and be photographed, lit and reused like live-action locations.

The designs were an extension of Disney Animation's "deep canvas" work in 1999's "Tarzan," in which the 2-D ape-man hero anitaken three decades to hand-ani- through a three-dimensional jungle humans and backgrounds.

While the computer jungle in "Tarzan" was designed from only one angle, "Treasure Planet" features a galactic sailing ship, a moon-shaped spaceport and a fiery planet core that could be photographed from any side.

That made it easier for Musker and co-director Ron Clements to robotic limb were programmed, and alternating points of view. Previously, artists created new paintings for each new shot, which limited directors to only a handful of backgrounds for any given scene. The same technique has been used in live-action, with films such "Gladiator," "Star Wars: Episode II — Attack of the Clones" and "A.I. Artificial Intelligence" featuring virtual backgrounds. Hybrid animation has been present since 1986's "The Great Mouse Detective," when computers were used to create massive clock gears for the film's climax. Computer graphics also rendered the revolving background for the ballroom waltz in 1991's "Beauty and the Beast," and the flying carpet and Cave of Wonders from 1992's "Aladdin.

Early computer imagery had a shimmering, glazed quality that distinguished it from the ink-and- John Silver, top, aids Jim Hawkins in Disney's "Treasure Planet." > The Fox carto ma" uses the technique to create camera moves for flying cars, spaceships and other geometric shapes that would cost too much and take too long to hand-animate, executive producer David X. Cohen said.

Cohen said the computer graphics are "dumbed down" to resemble the "charming crudeness" of

One result of the efficiency of such technology is that some hand-animation jobs have become obsolete, especially those of clean-up artists, who color and polish the sketch work of ore would be several hundred - now they're about 120 or so. The work is less labor intensive but not less expensive because they're developing new technologies," said Steve Hulett, business representative of Animation Guild Local 839 in North Hollywood.

Disney's animation department has laid off hundreds of employees in cost-cutting measures since com-animator salaries to skyrocket.

Until he was laid off four weeks ago, Stephan Zupkas, who worked for nearly 19 years at Disney, was responsible for "smoothing the transition" from an animator's drawing board to the polished "Crews on an animated feature image that moviegoers saw

> "I would take rough animation, redraw it, put it on-model and correct the anatomy," said Zupkas, whose credits include "The Lion King" and "Pocahontas."

> The automatic precision of computer animation eliminates much of that work, he said.

But Tim Johnson, a cartoon director at DreamWorks who now."

"Antz" and the upcoming hybrid feature "Sinbad: Legend of the Seven Seas," said hand-animation may be reduced by technology, but never eliminated. In "Sinbad," for instance, the made the animation toolbox explode," Johnson added. "We have gone from a screwdriver and a hammer to a 500-piece garage mechanic's set. There is nothing we can imagine that is out of reach

Arie brings 'India' to town

By Todd LaPlace Lantern arts editor

If India. Arie has done anything for music, she's proven a singer doesn't have to be "the average girl from your video" in order to be famous.

On her first headlining tour to promote her sophomore album "Voyage to India," Arie has already been put through a hero's trial, suffering sound check problems and a back-up singer's injury but maintains a positive attitude about the shows themselves.

'The shows have been great," she said. "Every time we get on stage, it's

Arie will bring her tour, which includes British duo Floetry as the opening act, into the Palace Theatre

Arie said she got hooked up with Floetry when both were making music in Philadelphia and is happy to have the group on tour. She said Floetry's original sound blends well with her

"They have bold points of view and they're just talented and different," she said. "We just match for a lot of different reasons. I think we're just cut from the same cloth in a lot of ways. Named after Mahatma Gandhi and the Hebrew word for lion, Arie certainly knows how to be original. She told VH1 she added the dot in between her names for "an aesthetic flow." Following up her Grammy-nominated sleeper smash "Acoustic Soul," Arie said she was unfazed by her newfound stardom when making "Voyage

"I couldn't help but wonder how (the album) was going to be received, but I didn't worry about it at all," she said. "I just wrote what I wanted to write and said what I wanted to say. I was actually more comfortable on this one than I was on my first one - a lot

"Last time I was kind of stressed out, like 'What am I going to do?' and I didn't know how to do an album,"

Arie said the new album was shaped in part thanks to the perks brought about by success. She said much of her new album was influenced by the other artists she's met and the conversations she's had.

"As a musician, everything I've heard influences me by varying degrees," she said.

Arie listed Elton John, Santana, Stevie Wonder and John Melloncamp —

Avoiding the path gone by many other musicians, Arie said she doesn't want to leap from music to new entertainment mediums available to her after her success

'There are things that I've always done like making jewelry, drawing, writing — I will continue to do that stuff," she said. "It might look like I'm making a leap, but I've never really thought about doing something

"You have to have a mission statement - know why you're doing it," she said. "If you know why you have an interest in it, you get so much more

Creating her own unparalleled style of music (she has complete artistic control), Arie said she has no plans to change her technique in the future.

"I'm still myself — I will always be myself," she said.

WOSU tunes into new ideas with fresh station manager

Lantern arts writer

Tom Rieland, new general station manger at WOSU, has high hopes for the future and has many ideas to change and improve WOSU AM, FM and television stations.

Rieland, who took over the stations on Nov. 12 after the retirement of Dale Ouzts, said he wants to take advantage of the Ohio State campus and create a collaborative environment with students. "We are looking into strategically using students more in

our operation," RIELAND

Rieland said. "We need them and they need us for professional experience."

The stations need students to grow, Rieland said, because they do not have the budget to run on paid employees alone.

"Students revitalize an organization," Rieland said. "They bring in

Lee Tashjian, vice president for university relations, agreed that the focus should be placed on strengthening student involvement. He said it is important to take advantage of the opportunity to link the community and academics.

Broadcast journalism is no longer a major at OSU, but both Tashjian and Rieland said they hope to involve students with broadcast interest and give them the experience they need to succeed in the professional world.

Nick Bronder, a senior in communications, is a student employee in the newsroom at WOSU. He said he would like to see a range of opportunities and be able to work in different departments besides the newsroom, such as marketing.

"Working there has helped me a lot more than the school of communications," Bronder said. "You are working in a real environment where the student factor doesn't really count."

Rieland was chosen from a national employee search because of his experience in public broadcasting and his work with students, Tashjian Rieland has prior experience working with students as director and general manager for the Center for Public Television and Radio at the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa. He has worked at the University of Mississippi and in reporting positions at various networks.

'At the University of Alabama, he worked with the university community to have all academic areas well represented and getting students involved in the development of programs," Tashjian said. "He has a high level of academic and university involvement in running his stations."

Many aspects of OSU convinced Rieland to take the job. He said he liked OSU's large service area and its ability to reach a large community. He also felt the OSU campus was resource-rich and full of potential partnerships.

"Columbus is a great city. I love it," Rieland said. "There is so much going on, it's a great experience so

Though he would like to make some changes, Rieland said there are many good things about the WOSU stations. He said it is highly regarded and has good programming. The station is strong in local shows that keep a lot of people in the community watching and listening. Rieland said there are so many television and radio channels that the stations need to focus on local and in depth programs. The stations need to take those programs and present them in different ways to distinguish them for the others.

"Our mission is to affect the community, to give more local programming, and to show off resources here at Ohio State," Rieland said.

He said public broadcast has to change to survive and he wants to see the stations more toward digital

"Digital technology can connect us up better than we are," Rieland said. "We will really flourish with digital TV and radio.

Rieland also recognized the need to plug into the Internet and would like to further develop WOSU's Web site and tie it into the community.

Change is the key to the continuing success of WOSU stations. Rieland said change is coming in the industry, but the stations will be

'It's a challenge to develop new talent and stay ahead of technology," Rieland said. "That's my job, to keep us ahead of the curve."
