Provost Ray could be leader at another OSU

By Michelle Payne
Lantern staff writer

Ohio State Provost Edward Ray is a leading candidate in Oregon State's search for a new president.

The Oregon State Board of Higher Education could name the new president as early as today, according to Di Saunders, Director of Communications for Oregon University.

Oregon State announced finalists for the position on Saturday.

Ray is one of three finalists selected by the board. He has been at OSU since 1970 and served as a professor and department chairman before he became provost. Ray's desire to leave OSU is not a surprise, he has pursued job opportunities at other universities, including the University of Michigan, New Mexico and Iowa University.

Interviews with the two other finalists were conducted yesterday, and Ray will be interviewed this morning. The board will begin deliberation at 3 p.m. and will make its decision sometime this afternoon, Saunders said.

"We're hoping to make the announcement sometime (today), but there's a possibility that it could be (tomorrow)," Saunders said.

The announcement could be delayed if discussion between Richard Jarvis, Chancellor at Oregon State and the person chosen takes longer than expected.

"The chancellor and whoever is selected to be the president have to sit

Page Hall renovations to be completed in 2004

Parts of the historic building still stand to be added during the reconstruction

The renovations to Page Hall are all but complete.

Only three walls and some pillars are left standing of the old building located on The Oval. The renovations began in February and are expected to be finished by next fall.

The project budget is $16 million and will house the new John Glenn Institute, Public Policy and Management and the Physical Facilities Shop is also expected to be located there.

"It is scheduled to be finished by Labor day of 2004," said Mike Burger of Danis Construction Company, the general contractor for the project.

Kevin Miller of Miller-Watson Architects is the designer for the project, and Ruth Miller is the senior programming manager for the planning and development facilities at Ohio State.

"The John Glenn Institute is an interdisciplinary institute that sponsors programs for students to engage in public service," said Deborah Merritt, the director of the John Glenn Institute.

The John Glenn Institute

offers internships in Washington for students and assists in the training of public officials. Page Hall was chosen for the new location because it looks similar to the style of buildings in Washington. Merritt said it is a historical building on The Oval.

"Page Hall is 100 years old," she said. "The new building will be very contemporary yet also historic."

Everything is going according to plan, Merritt said.

"It is much more costly to tear down the whole building and rebuild it," Merritt said. "That's why we're keeping the walls and pillars to add on to the old building."

Kevin Miller is the architect in charge of the project. He designed the rectangular glass prism which will look like a three-story floating box. The creation will be added to what is remaining of Page Hall.

"The project is to create a new gateway into the university," Miller said. "Page Hall was one of the original buildings built on The Oval, and our goal is to reconnect the building back to The Oval."

It will be a somewhat U-shaped building, he said. The goal is to redefine the whole entry into the university. Currently, the primary way to get to OSU is by car, but an entrance will be added behind the building where a large parking garage stands.

"This gateway building will bring the parking garage to The Oval," Miller said. "Page Hall was built in 1902 and it was one of the original Oval buildings. It is a classic building."

"It is much more costly to tear down the whole building and rebuild it. That's why we're keeping the walls and pillars to add on to the old building."

OSU Super Regional sells out

While the Ohio State baseball team's series with Southwest Missouri State is still two days away, Ohio State officials announced yesterday that the first two games of the Columbus Super Regional are already sold out.

If the Buckeyes and Bears should split the games on Saturday and Sunday, then tickets for Monday's winner-take-all matchup will go on sale at 8 a.m. Monday. Tickets for that game would be purchased at the Ohio State Athletics Ticket Office or by calling 1-800-GO-BUCKS.

For fans who were unable to buy tickets to this weekend's games, ESPN2 will be airing both games. Saturday's first pitch is scheduled for 8:05 p.m., while Sunday's is 6:05 p.m. If necessary, Monday's game would be televised on ESPN at 1 p.m.

OSU students getting smarter

By John May
Lantern staff writer

The academic profile of incoming freshman classes at Ohio State has improved in the past eight years.

The grades of all undergraduate students has gone up, but not by a large amount as the academic profile of incoming students has improved. The grades of incoming freshman during their first year at Ohio State has also increased in the past five years, but not by a large amount.

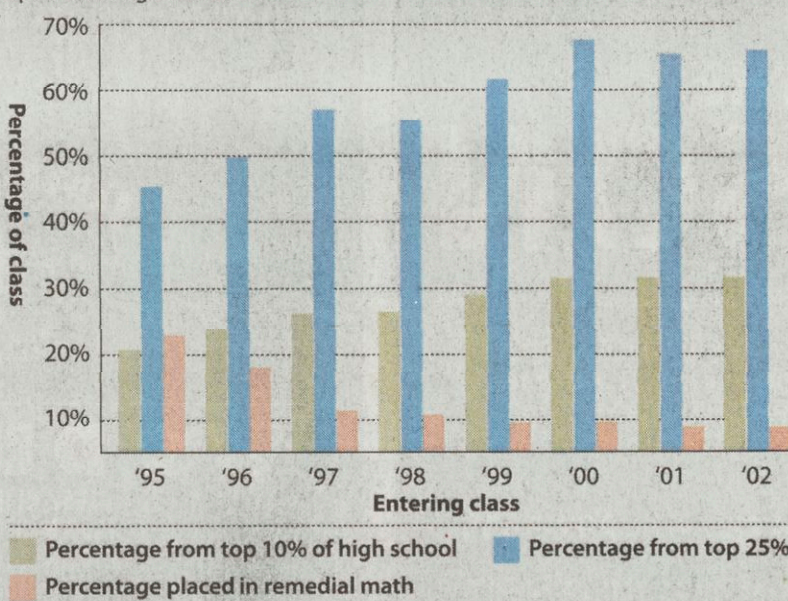

"We have not necessarily become more selective, since roughly '95 we have sought to improve academic profiles of incoming freshman classes each year," said Allen Kraus, senior assistant director of undergraduate admissions.

Kraus said there were to many students failing out and the university was looking to change that by improving the overall academic profile of incoming freshman classes. Along with improving the academic profile of incoming freshman classes the university

Advisor sets students on the right career path

Animal science professor Karol Fike given University Career Services award

By Sean O'Connor
Lantern staff writer

Finding someone to get good advice from can sometimes be as difficult as the decision itself. To help aid in this process, the University Career Services Committee gives an award to someone at Ohio State who is involved in career advising.

Karol Fike, assistant professor in animal sciences, was awarded this year's Career Services Award.

"UCSC solicits nominations campus-wide for individuals with official job responsibilities which do not include career advising, who go above and beyond the call of duty to work with students to promote career development related activities," said Amy Lahmers, of the UCSC.

Fike was nominated for the award by Stacie Smith, a senior in animal sciences, and Jim Kinder, chairman of the department of animal sciences.

Fike grew up in Iowa on her family farm which raises cattle and sheep. She went to college at Iowa State University and earned her bachelor's degree in animal science in 1991. She then earned both her master's degree and doctorate from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

At Ohio State, Fike teaches introductory animal sciences and team teaches both animal products and the freshmen research seminar. She is also the internship program coordinator for her department. She said an internship is required of each undergraduate as part of their major.

"I'm not sure if I am really deserving of this award. I just feel like it's a bigger deal — that I haven't done any more than a lot of people do," Fike said.

She said she thinks it comes as a natural extension of her involvement with the internship program. Talking to students about their interests and possible career paths makes it easier to find the right internship program for the right student.

"Teaching an introductory class, I see a lot of the students in our major early on, so I get to know them as freshman. I think the most fun part of what I do is working with students and just trying to help them out when they really need help and are seeking advice," Fike said.

Learning her students' names is one of the most valuable tools she uses in the classroom. She said it usually takes her awhile, but it has turned out to be more useful than she ever imagined.

"Just getting to know them, they're more likely to come up and ask questions or come to office hours for help and advice," Fike said.

Having open ears and a caring attitude help her to communicate her experiences and give advice to the students she is involved with.

Smith first met Fike by taking one of her introductory animal science courses as a freshman. She said, like most freshman, she was struggling to figure out what she would do after graduation.

"Upon returning for my sophomore year, I was in search of career guidance, but instead of calling my assigned advisor, I looked up Dr. Fike's office number. I knew she would help me sort through my goals and decide on a plan for the rest of my undergraduate time at Ohio State," Smith said.

She was trying to decide between going to graduate or veterinary school. After talking to Fike, they both decided that more time was necessary before choosing a career path. They agreed it would be good for Smith to gain some research experience while still an undergraduate student.

"It was then that Dr. Fike went above and beyond her duties and gave me a job herself. I began by helping her graduate student with his project, assisting with field and lab work," Smith said.

After a few months Fike offered her an internship where she would have the opportunity to carry out her own research project.

Smith recently won first place in the agricultural and environmental sciences category of the Denman Undergraduate Research Forum.

"She has surpassed her responsibilities as an advisor and a teacher and has become my mentor," Smith said.

On the door of Fike's office, there is a small poster that reads, "Students are deserving of our most courteous and attentive treatment" and "It is our privilege to fulfill those needs."

"Dr. Fike is one of the few people I know who stands by the motivational words she has chosen to display. I am grateful to have had her help in creating my career plan, and it has truly been an honor and my great privilege to know her," Smith said.

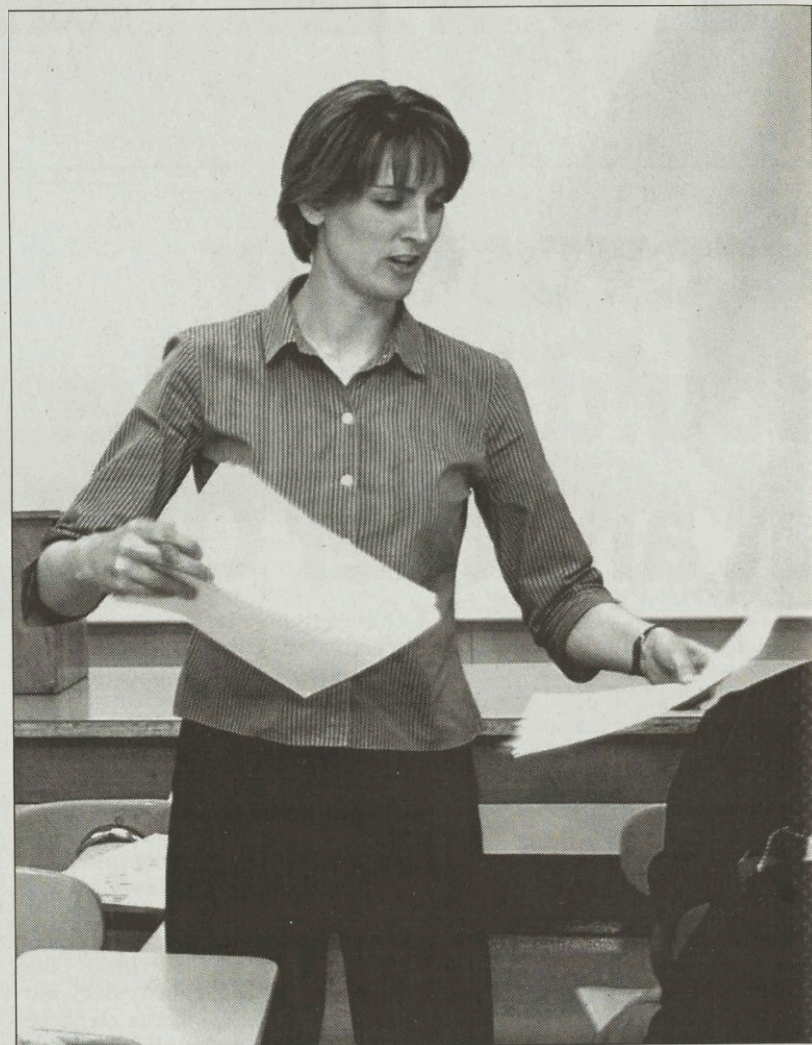

Jim Kinder, department chair for animal sciences, has worked with Fike since she was a graduate student at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. Kinder was her overseeing professor during her graduate work.

"It became obvious during her graduate program that Karol had a strong desire to work with students, both in the classroom and beyond, and that she had unique attributes in this regard," Kinder said.

"Her professionalism and strong desire to help students along life's way were and remain two of her strongest attributes," he said.

Kinder said Fike has excelled in working with students at OSU during the three years she has been here. He said she has a primary focus on undergraduate student programs and development of high quality internship opportunities for undergraduate students. Kinder said this has been a significant benefit to many of these students in enhancing their career opportunities.

"Karol has an open door policy and always has time for the students. They are without question her highest priority, and students perceive her strong desire to help them," Kinder said.

down and discuss things like salary and terms of the position. The time of the announcement really depends on when they finish that meeting," Saunders said.

The other candidates for the position are Dr. Stephen W. Director, dean of engineering at the University of Michigan, and Dr. Yacov A. Shamash, dean of engineering and applied science at the Harriman School for Management and Policy for the State University of New York at Stony Brook.

All three finalists were given the opportunity to address students, faculty and members of the press during open forums that were conducted Tuesday and yesterday. This was also a chance for those in attendance to ask the candidates questions. Director spoke on Tuesday and Shamash and Ray conducted their forums yesterday.

"(Ray) did an excellent job of answering questions from faculty, staff and students in today's open forum," Saunders said.

Once chosen, the new president will take office in late summer. He will be replacing the interim president Timothy White, who served as provost before accepting the interim position.

HEALTH BRIEFS

Surgery does not promote male fertility

Surgery to treat male infertility is not as useful as previously thought and should not be used, according to a study reported on WebMD.com.

A study showed varicocele repair, a procedure that repairs varicose veins in the scrotum, did little to up pregnancy rates for infertile couples. Research showed couples with men who had varicocele repair saw a one percent increase in pregnancy rates when compared to men who had no treatment at all.

The enlarged veins can lead to a rise in temperature and decreased blood circulation to the area, which can lower sperm production.

Yet, some doctors are tentative to rule out use of the procedure. Dr. Susan Benoff, president of the Society for Male Reproduction and Urology, said because other problems factor into infertility, the surgery could still be an effective option for some couples.

"Male infertility is a complex issue, and you have a mixed bag of men with different problems," she told WebMD. "It makes no sense to say that none of them will benefit from this surgical procedure."

American 'smokes' prove more deadly

Cigarettes made in America have double the amount of a chemical that causes cancer compared to the foreign version, health officials told msnbc.com.

The Center of Disease Control and Prevention evaluated the amount of carcinogen nitrosamine in Marlboros and 13 foreign brands. Researchers told msnbc.com brands from 11 of the countries had much lower levels of the chemical than Marlboro.

The study also compared popular American brands and found the levels were similar.

The CDC blames the American method of curing and blending tobacco for the increased nitrosamine, but adds it is possible to make cigarettes less harmful. Researchers said cigarette smoke has other carcinogens than nitrosamine and "reducing their levels alone does not guarantee a less hazardous cigarette."

Drug beats dieting in race for weight loss

A drug used to treat obesity is twice more effective for weight loss than dieting and reduces the risk for heart disease, according to a report from msnbc.com.

Orlistat, commonly known as the brand name Xenical, blocks the body's ability to absorb fat.

The study showed that people on orlistat lost an average of 14 pounds while those dieting dropped an average of 6 pounds. Those on the drug slimmed their waistlines by almost an inch more than dieters and had lower blood pressures.

WOSU gets lots of money to go digital

Federal government gives $1.2 million so station could meet May 1 mandate

By Benjamin Hickey
Lantern staff writer

WOSU received two federal grants totaling more than $1.2 million for the conversion to digital television of WOSU channel 34 Columbus and WPBO channel 43 Portsmouth.

"We are now focused on going digital with these stations sometime in October of this year," said WOSU general manager Tom Rieland.

The Public Telecommunications Facilities Program, through the U.S. Department of Commerce, granted $738,676 to WOSU for digital transmission equipment. So far, the PTFP has distributed $25 million in grants to 56 public television facilities in 31 states.

Another grant from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting Digital Distribution Fund awarded $500,000 for the construction of a digital transmission system at the Portsmouth station. The station serves more than 460,000 people in 22 counties.

"While our digital production facility still needs to be built, we're thankful for the state and federal support we've received so far," Rieland said.

A federal mandate, passed in 1996, established deadlines for all stations to be broadcasting digital signals by May 1. The Federal Communications Commission has already established channel assignments for the new technology.

The conversion of the two stations will be enabled as federal money will be matched by state money received in previous years.

"We got a six month extension from the FCC, which is common. We are planning on starting Oct. 31," said Don Scott, director of marketing for WOSU.

The new digital signal has the option of broadcasting three different transmissions of datacasting, multicasting and high definition television. Multicasting will allow for three separate channels, each assigned to a different transmission purpose.

"We are having weekly DTV meetings," said Scott. "We are at the early stages and are making progress, but we are still in the planning stage."

The meetings, involving television and marketing associates at the station, have discussed assigning the first channel to HDTV while leaving the other two standard definition.

WOSU has been on air since 1956 and the new technology will usher in yet another first for the station.

Digital picture and sound quality is much higher than that of standard analog transmissions, said Matt Orosz, a senior in English, who owns a high-definition television.

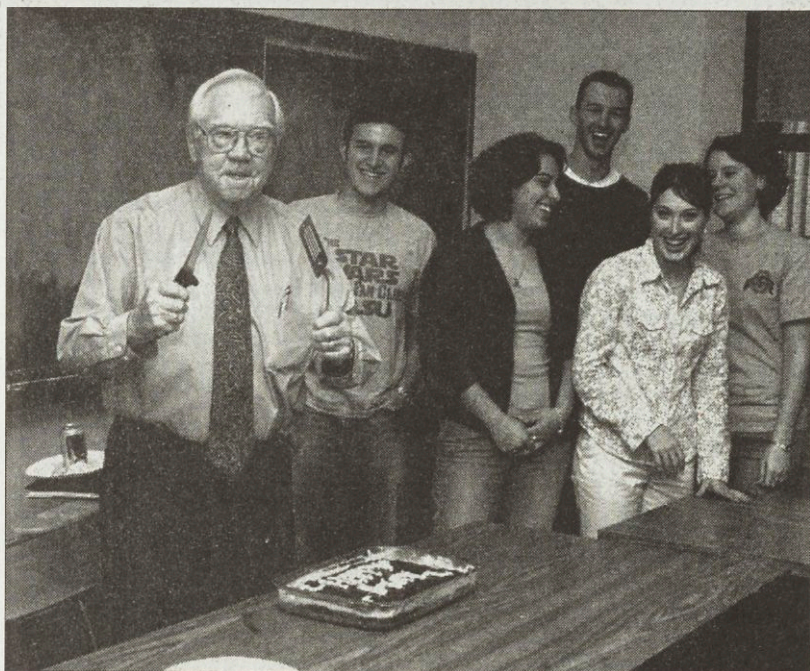

"The picture looks amazingly clear. There really is no comparison," he said.

Building named after professor

By Michelle Payne

Professor John Mount celebrated his 85th birthday among Ohio State University faculty, staff and students yesterday. Mount's colleagues surprised him with a cake while he was teaching his afternoon class in Brown Hall.

Mount has been a mainstay at OSU for over six decades. He graduated from OSU in 1941 and went on to hold a variety of positions including: Secretary of the board of trustees, Dean of University College and vice president of the OSU branch campuses. The professor even has a building, Mount Hall, named after him. Despite his retirement in 1983, Mount has continued to teach an arts and science course on the history of OSU.

Big Bear trying to roar back

By Keli Gangl
Lantern staff writer

The fate of several Columbus area Big Bear stores is unknown after its parent company, Penn Traffic, filed bankruptcy last week. This is the second time in four years the company has filed for bankruptcy.

All of the 212 stores owned and operated by Penn Traffic are operating normally while the company designs a restructuring plan.

"It is possible that some store could be closed or sold, but we don't know yet when this will happen, and which store it will affect," said Marc Jampole, Penn Traffic spokesman.

Penn Traffic's President and Chief Executive Officer, Joseph Fisher, blames the company's troubles on the poor economy and increased competition from super centers and limited assortment stores.

Jampole said the company has a commitment for a $270 million line of credit. He also said the banks approved the company's access to $70 million of that credit on an interim basis.

"The chapter 11 filing will give us the flexibility we need to address the financial and operation challenges that have hampered our performance," Fisher said in a statement.

"We are gratified by the strong support of our leaders, which we view as an important vote of confidence in our company, our people and our potential," he said.

Jampole said this decision is not affecting local stores.

Several major distributors had stopped shipping to area Big Bear stores after the company announced it was considering filing for chapter 11 protection, leaving some stores without popular snack foods.

Jampole said virtually every vendor is shipping to the stores, and all the stores are operating normally.

"All of the stores are fully stocked and staffed," Jampole said.

Employees of the company are being paid in the usual manner, and all insurance benefits are expected to continue.

John Parsons, a finance professor at OSU, said the company's financial history should not affect the reconstruction.

"Even though they filed for chapter 11 protection four years ago, it shouldn't make things too difficult for them now," Parsons said.

The company named Steven Panagos as chief restructuring officer, and outlined several initiatives the company plans to implement during the reorganization process. Plans include enhancing the companies merchandise, improving store operations, strengthening management programs and reducing operations costs.

Penn Traffic operates 212 stores — including 62 Big Bear and Big Bear Plus stores — 35 of which are in the Columbus area.

Big Bear is the No. 2 grocer in Columbus, second only to Kroger, which controls almost half of the industry.

Summer means sun and fun — and bathing suits.

"During the pre-summer months, we have about a 28 percent increase in sales," said Teresa Kelly, spokeswoman for Jenny Craig.

The majority of participants usually stay in the program throughout the summer; then there is another increase during back-to-school time, Kelly said.

Jenny Craig, Inc., founded in 1983, is one of the largest weight management service companies in the world. The program includes one-on-one consultation at Jenny Craig Centers, as well as advising over the phone. The program also gives menu plans that are nutritionally balanced, according to recommendations of the USDA Food Guide Pyramid and Dietary Guidelines for Americans.

About 660 Jenny Craig Centers operate in the United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and Puerto Rico. Five of those locations are located in central Ohio.

"Our three busiest times are right after New Year's, pre-summer and when it is time to go back to school," Kelly said.

"Year after year, attendance increases for us," said Donna Stein, spokeswoman for Weight Watchers. "Our first quarter, which is Jan. 1 to March 31, showed an increase in enrollment."

"We see an increase in enrollment after New Year's, but there is a big push right after Easter because people realize that summer is just a few months away," Stein said.

Weight Watchers also has meeting places in central Ohio where customers pay and meet weekly with consultants.

According to a recent study by Marketdata Enterprises, Americans will spend almost $40 billion this year alone to lose weight. The study also predicts the weight loss industry in the U.S. will grow 5.6 percent annually to $48.8 billion in the year 2006.

In 2002, commercial weight-loss centers represented 1.2 billion of the $39 billion industry pie, according to Marketdata Enterprises.

Another growing trend is the popularity of Internet-based weight-loss programs. One company, eDiets.com, is the largest subscription-based online diet, fitness and counseling network. EDiets.com, based in Deerfield, Fla., offers online, subscription-based weight-loss programs using propriety software to generate customized diets based on the customers' personal goals, food preferences and lifestyles.

Over 1.2 million customers have purchased memberships since 1997 and over 13 million opt-in subscribers receive the company's bi-weekly health and wellness newsletter.

"In April of 2002, I realized that summer was just around the corner and I needed to do something," said Julie Riffle, a member of Weight Watchers. "Since then, I have found it easier to stick to the point system in the warm months as opposed to the cold months. My other fellow members feel the same way."

The names of the victims, their date of death and academic major were set up under a white tent on the main Oval from 9 a.m. to 6:45 p.m.

From there, a procession moved, one-by-one, to the Stecker Lounge in the Union, the rain-site for the actual memorial service which was supposed to take place in the Browning Amphitheater. As they passed scattered students on the street, they carried two candles in each hand and a banner that read "We Remember" and listed the names of the deceased.

By the time they made it to the lounge, most of the candles had melted, but their flames continued to burn.

About 30 students, faculty members and friends gathered for the hour-long memorial which included scripture readings and verses of remembrance.

One after the other, ministers of many faiths proceeded to the podium and read prayer scriptures in honor of the students' lives.

"Those who die as having been accepted by God are the brave ones; their death is their right," said Tarunjit Singh Butalia, advisor for the OSU Sikh Student Association.

"What I read was a prayer of remembrance that's typically sung at memorial services in the Sikh faith," he said. "Our lives are transient. We must value it."

Throughout the ceremony, audience members were encouraged to join in intercessory prayers. Still, many opted to say their own, silent prayers.

was seeking to improve cultural diversity of incoming freshman classes, Kraus said.

Figures from the undergraduate admissions office show average ACT test scores of incoming freshman classes have improved.

Since 1995, average ACT test scores of incoming freshman have increased. In 1995, the average ACT test score of incoming freshman were 22.8, and in 2002, the average ACT score for incoming freshman was 25.2.

The undergraduate admissions office also has figures which show, the number of incoming freshman ranked near the top of their graduating high school classes has increased.

In 1995, 21 percent of the incoming freshman came from the top 10 percent of their high school classes, and 46 percent came from the top 25 percent of their high school classes.

In 2002, 32 percent of incoming freshman came from the top 10 percent of their high school class, and 67 percent came from the top 25 percent of their high school class.

Another problem was to many students were placing into remedial level classes, Kraus said.

"The number of students taking remedial level classes has gone down since we sought to improve the academic profile of incoming freshman classes," he said.

In 1995, 23 percent of incoming freshman placed into remedial level math, and in 2002, only 7 percent of incoming freshman placed into remedial level math.

The incoming freshman classes have performed slightly better each year since 1998, according to the university registrar.

After spring quarter of 1998, first year students had an average cumulative GPA of 2.614; after spring quarter of 2000, freshman had an average cumulative GPA of 2.657; and after spring quarter of 2002 freshman had an average cumulative GPA of 2.761.

Martha Stewart indicted for trading scandal

By Erin McClam
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Martha Stewart, the home decorating celebrity who built her fortune by giving advice on gracious living, was indicted yesterday on charges of securities fraud and obstruction of justice in an insider stock trading scandal that could bring big fines or even a jail term.

The indictment also charged Stewart with conspiracy and making false statements. Her stockbroker, Peter Bacanovic, was accused of perjury and obstruction of justice.

U.S. Attorney James Comey scheduled a news conference for later yesterday.

Stewart, 61, has denied wrongdoing in the ImClone stock sale. She claimed to have had an arrangement with her broker for the automatic sale of the stock when it dropped to a certain price.

She arrived at the federal courthouse in Manhattan just before noon, breezing past a crowd of reporters and camera crews without a word. She was due before a federal judge later in the day.

The scandal surrounds Stewart's sale of 4,000 shares of biotech ImClone Systems, Inc. on Dec. 27, 2001 — the day before the government issued a disappointing report on ImClone, sending its stock price tumbling.

In a statement, Stewart attorney Robert Morvillo said the home-decorating maven had done nothing wrong and asked why the government would file the charges after a year and a half of investigation.

"Is it for publicity purposes because Martha Stewart is a celebrity?" he said. "Is it because she is a woman who has successfully competed in a man's business world by virtue of her talent, hard work and demanding standards?"

The Securities and Exchange Commission was expected to file similar civil charges against Stewart later yesterday.

The criminal indictment says Stewart unloaded her shares of ImClone based on illegal inside knowledge that the family of ImClone founder Samuel Waksal was planning to sell its shares ahead of the government news. She saved at least $45,000 by trading with the insider knowledge, the indictment said.

Stewart went so far as to delete a computer log of a phone message in which Bacanovic told her he thought ImClone was "going to start trading downward," according to the indictment.

The government said Bacanovic altered his personal notes about Stewart's portfolio after he learned the government was investigating her, trying to create the impression he and Stewart had a prior agreement to sell ImClone if it fell below $60 a share.

The charges spell not just serious legal headaches for Stewart, but a crisis for her company, which has struggled with a public relations nightmare that has grown since she became involved in the stock scandal a year ago.

A fascinated public has watched Stewart try to keep her highly profitable public persona intact, doling out advice on decorating or preparing a tasty dinner on a television program, while news headlines have focused on the criminal cases of close friends or her legal troubles.

Stewart told The New Yorker magazine in January she has lost about $400 million because of the company's declining value, legal fees and lost business opportunities. And shares of her company, Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia, have fallen from $19 to just over $9.

She is a friend of ImClone founder Samuel Waksal, who is to be sentenced next week after pleading guilty to six counts in the insider-trading scandal.

Waksal could get to six to seven years in prison. His defense team is seeking a lighter sentence, and prosecutors are seeking a heavier one — claiming Waksal cheated ImClone shareholders as far back as 1986.

Waksal has admitted he tipped off his daughter Aliza to sell ImClone stock before it plummeted on the bad news. But he has not implicated Stewart, and his plea was not part of an agreement to cooperate with prosecutors.

Stewart's sale of the 4,000 shares came one day before the Food and Drug Administration announced it would not review ImClone's application for approval of Erbitux, which the company had touted as a promising cancer drug. ImClone's stock subsequently plunged.

Stewart has maintained that she had a standing order with her Merrill Lynch broker, Bacanovic, to sell the shares if the stock fell below $60.

A new study conducted in Europe, found Erbitux worked just as well as a cancer treatment as a disputed study conducted earlier, and sponsored by ImClone, said it did.

Analysts have said an indictment could seriously damage Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia — a company for which Stewart herself is CEO, chief stockholder, inspiration and best-known spokeswoman.

The company produces Martha Stewart Living and Martha Stewart Weddings magazines, a newspaper column, a television show and the popular Martha Stewart Everyday line of home products, like towels and sheets.

Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia reported sales of $295 million and a staff of 580 last year. It includes publishing, television, merchandising, Internet commerce and direct mail.

Tiananmen anniversary stirs unease

By Dirk Beveridge

HONG KONG — Waving candles and singing patriotic Chinese songs, more than 12,000 Hong Kong people yesterday demanded an accounting of the crackdown against pro-democracy activists in Tiananmen Square and voiced fears that local freedoms are being crushed.

The Hong Kong government is about to win approval of an anti-subversion bill. Critics fear the former British colony could find itself subjected to mainland-style suppression of unpopular views, although Hong Kong insists this is not an issue.

Thousands of people gathered for a candlelight ceremony commemorating the Tiananmen incident and hoping they can some day heal wounds that still cut deep here — 14 years after China used tanks and troops to stop the student democracy movement in Beijing on June 4, 1989.

"A democratic China is something that I've wanted since the massacre," said Pauline Wong, a clerk. "But it's going to be a long road before it can become a reality."

Her 8-year-old son, Ernest, agreed. "The people who died on June 4 were heroes," the boy said.

Activists placed flowers around a mock gray monument to honor those who died in the crackdown. Hundreds, if not thousands, were killed.

"They died for liberty," said John Mak, a teacher and devout Christian who fears he may someday need his Canadian passport to flee Hong Kong and keep practicing his religion. "Hopefully, someday mainland China will listen."

This year's Tiananmen demonstration was accompanied by worries among many about how long they can keep speaking out.

"If you say something bad — not bad, something the government doesn't like — you could go to jail or be fined," said Mak's sister, Donna, a legislative assistant. Even for "a gathering like this."

Secretary for Security Regina Ip has called such fears inaccurate and insists Hong Kong's civil rights are untouchable.

Ip says the law is intended to stop people from attempting to violently overthrow the government or to undermine China's national security.

Asked for an opinion, import-export businessman David Ko wrapped his hands around his neck like a noose.

"This is going back 50 years and choking us," Ko said. "It's unacceptable. We should be an inspiration to the whole of China on the road to democracy, but we have a local government that is oppressive."

Activist Law Yuk-kai of the Hong Kong Human Rights Monitor predicted the law will discourage dissent and will eventually be used to silence critics.

Vacant castle offers chance to live royally

By Ed Johnson
Associated Press

LONDON — It's an offer so cheap that only the rich could be tempted: living in a castle next door to the queen — rent free.

Invercauld Castle, a sprawling baronial mansion in the heart of the Scottish Highlands surrounded by thousands of acres of land, is in need of a tenant.

Capt. Alwyne Farquharson, chief of the clan that bears his name, has no male heir and is offering a 20-40 year lease for what the British call a "peppercorn" rent.

Here's the catch: whoever moves in to this grand ancestral home, which borders the Balmoral estate of Queen Elizabeth II, must agree to spend $740,000 on renovations and operating costs of around $165,000 a year.

"There has been a lot of interest from all over the world. It is a truly splendid place," said Guy Galbraith, of the leasing agent FPD Savills in Edinburgh.

"The only fly in the ointment is that you are going to have to come up with a lump of capital to stay there," he said.

Farquharson, the 16th Laird of Invercauld, inherited the estate in 1941. His nearest descendant, a nephew, has no plans to live in Scotland and it will be years before his children are old enough to assume responsibility for the property.

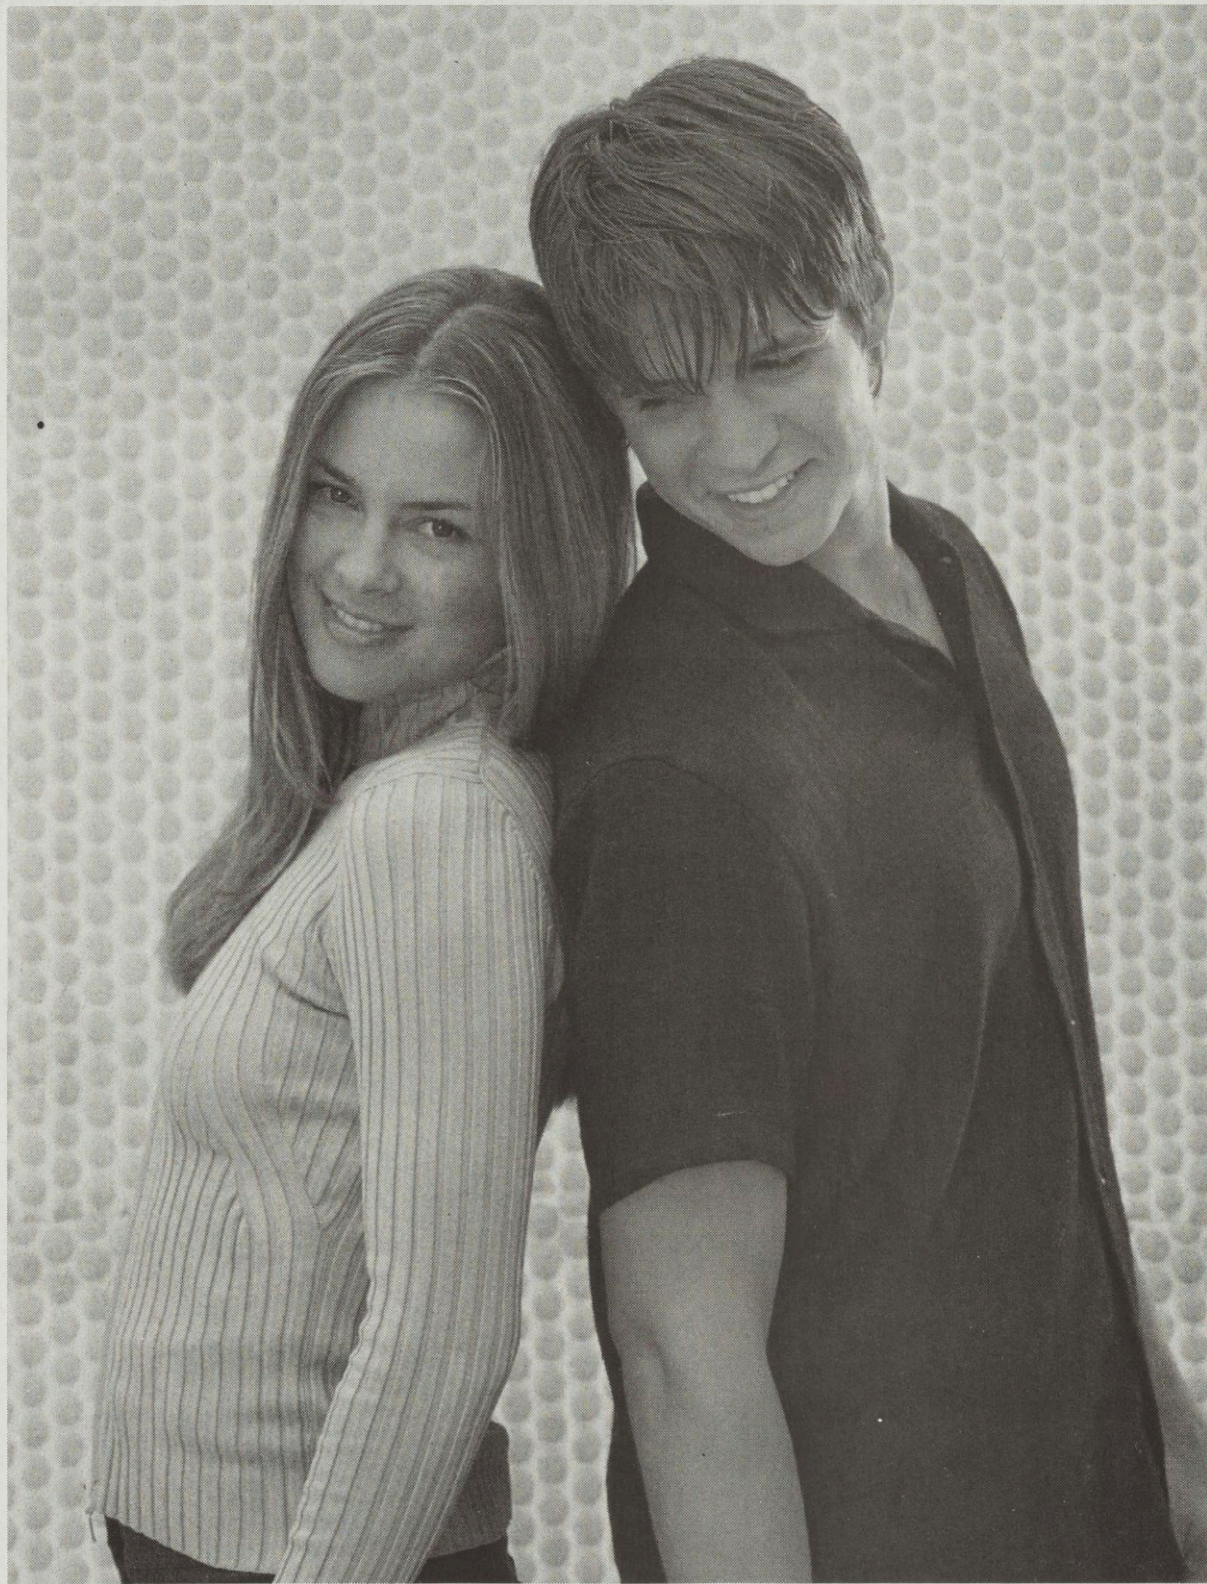

"We are looking for someone to take it on until the next generation can assess what they want to do," said estate manager Simon Blackett.

"We have a number of people, from America, Europe, Great Britain and the Far East who have been to look and are revisiting."

The castle, which dates from the 1700s, sits on an estate of 108,000 acres and has three keepers' cottages. There are red deer in the forests, and tenants can fish for salmon on the River Dee or shoot grouse on the dramatic foothills of the Cairngorm mountains.

The castle, with its paneled dining room, ballroom, butler's accommodation and antique Victorian furniture, lies only nine miles from Balmoral, the queen's Scottish home.

A passenger train and a freight train collided head-on near Chinchilla, central Spain, Tuesday night with 86 passengers aboard. Five people were killed in the collision and 20 are missing and feared dead.

Head-on train wreck kills 19, injures 40 in Spain

By Mar Roman
Associated Press

MADRID, Spain — Rescuers and forensic experts searched through twisted, smoking wreckage yesterday from a head-on train collision in central Spain that killed at least 19 people.

The state-owned rail company, Renfe, said 40 people were injured but most were treated and released. At least eight required hospitalization.

The Tuesday evening crash happened when a passenger train with about 90 people on board collided with a freight train near Chinchilla in Albacete province, 155 miles southeast of Madrid.

The cause of the crash may have been a railway worker who gave a wrong signal, Development Minister Francisco Alvarez Cascos said. Normally, one of the trains would have been diverted to a side track while the other continued on the line.

The locomotive and first few cars of the passenger train caught fire after the crash and TV footage showed flaming cars piled on the tracks. The freight train was not carrying cargo.

"I saved myself because I was in the toilet at the moment of the collision," passenger Nieves Pinto said on National Radio. "I reeled from side to side. When I tried to get out to find my husband there was a tremendous fire, everybody was screaming."

The Castilla-La Mancha regional emergency rescue service renewed the search for the missing after dawn yesterday.

Three large cranes were on either side of the railway line where smoke was still rising from the charred cars. TV footage showed rescue workers and forensic investigators searching amid the blackened wreckage.

Prime Minister Jose Maria Aznar visited the accident site, greeting rescue workers and discussing the accident with officials.

Both locomotive crews died when the trains collided three miles from Chinchilla and nine miles from Albacete underneath high tension wires that fell on the wreck. Other victims included a mechanic, said a spokesman of Spain's state rail way company Renfe.

"I saw horrible scenes," Juan Carlos Garcia Morate, who saw the accident from his home and was one of the first to arrive at the scene, told Radio Cadena Ser.

"I saw people in the cafeteria holding their burnt hands out of the window and screaming help me, help me, and I couldn't get close to them ... I can't forget that image," he said.

After the accident, police warned people in Chinchilla to stay indoors and close their windows, believing the freight train was carrying sulfuric acid. Hours later Renfe confirmed the tanker cars were empty at the time of the crash.

BOOK REVIEW

A quick, important read for parents

By Shelley Davis
For the Lantern

The new book "Language Police: How Pressure Groups Restrict What Students Learn" offers an explanation as to why countless students are turned off reading for good after years of reading dull text books.

Author Diane Ravitch says the call for political correctness in America has reached dangerous lengths, and "Language Police" explores was Ravitch calls a vast conspiracy — the whitewashing of the public school education.

Text book companies and test publishers have for decades now been critically scanning the content they publish, banishing any material that may offend any student for any reason.

Students can't read about growing peanuts, because they might be allergic to peanuts. They can't read about a black family that lives in an urban area, because they might live in an urban area. Instead, any time a black family is mentioned, it must be portrayed as wealthy.

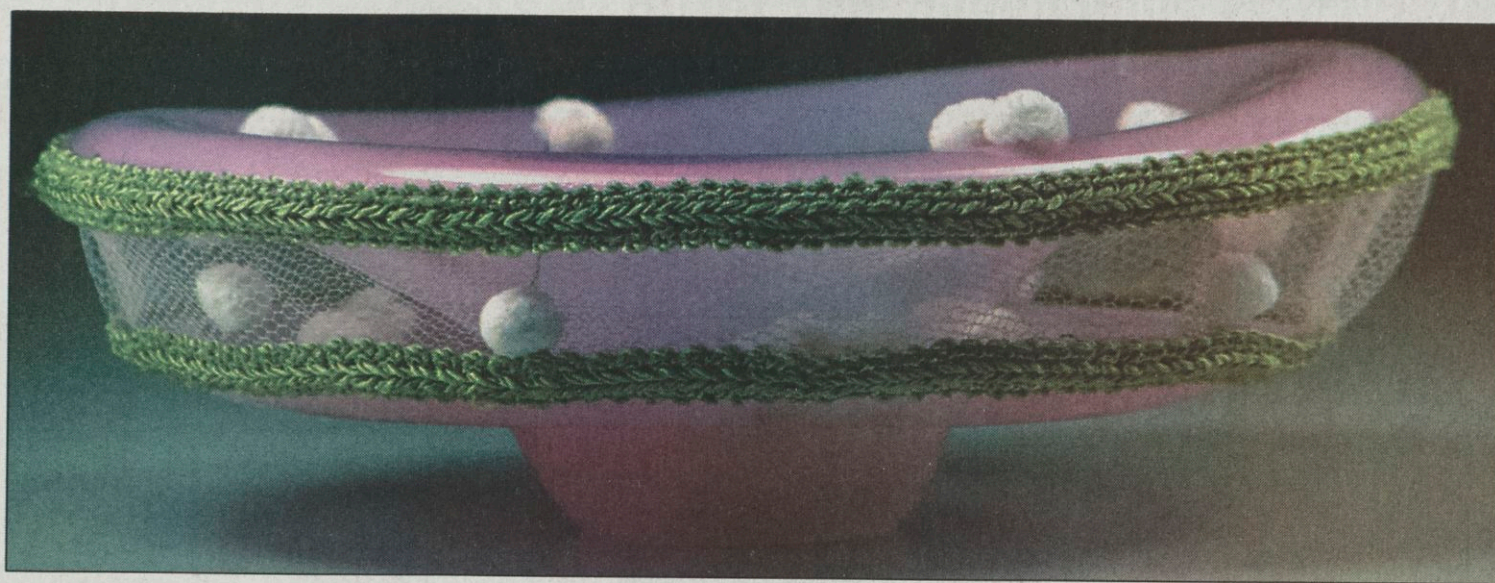

Ravitch calls it censorship. It started out nobly enough, with efforts in the 1960s and '70s to rid text books of race and gender stereotypes. But the changes have grown to become ridiculous.

As she deftly points out, these drastic efforts to protect America's youth are absurd. If students are taught in school that the world is a utopian place where people of all races, genders and classes are treated as equals, how can they reconcile that with what they see on television, or experience anywhere outside the classroom?

Sensitivity panels review all text books and standardized tests before they are published at all, and scrutinize the material for anything that may offend or alarm young minds. The panels have developed extensive guidelines for text book companies to follow, to stave off problems before the review stage.

Sensitivity guidelines explicitly state that women can never be shown as cooking dinner, cleaning or being a "mother" figure. Instead, men must always be shown in those "feminine" roles.

Student organization to display an eccentric collection of glass artwork

By Jessica Hoffman
Lantern arts writer

With subject matter ranging from a wheel of forearms to Klingon-like severed heads, it's obvious this glass collection is far from your grandmother's menagerie of candy dishes.

The students and professors of the Ohio State Student Glass Organization have compiled a collection of their work to display in the pavilion lobby of the OSU Medical Center, 2050 Kenny Rd.

"Specify Glass" includes pieces by glass artists of all levels of experience.

"All of the grad students are represented, but this was (also) a shot for a lot of undergraduate students and even a few beginning glass students to show their work," said Brent Sommerhauser, a graduate student in the OSU Glass Department.

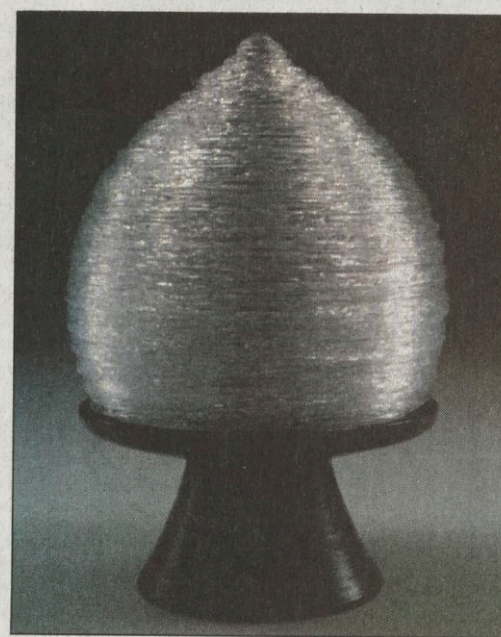

In addition to having pieces from different skill levels, the show features a variety of creative and technical styles.

"We have everything from sculpted glass projects and those using found glass items to glass blowing," Sommerhauser said.

The show is juried, meaning a panel choose which items would make it into the exhibition.

"This helped keep the show representative of all different styles," he said.

Many of the projects were mixed-media, utilizing circular saw blades, plush fabrics and even sugar to enhance the glass pieces.

Yuki Wakamiya, a senior glass student, employed metal wire, tiny fabric pom-poms and thick green trimming to create her surreal piece.

"I cut a ring out of the sides of the piece

Form, function compete at design show

By Jordan Gentile
Lantern arts editor

Those who deride designers as secondary citizens in the world of art need only look to the work of Andrew Ault, an senior in visual communications, to realize their importance.

His project at this year's annual Department of Design Student Exhibition is a signage system that will help warn humans living 10,000 years from now of hazardous waste sights using a series of cognitive symbols Ault traces back to nature.

"Systems in a natural environment — like the yellow and black bands on a yellow jacket or a snake — have the same effect on us as they do on other animals," he said, pointing out that in the future, symbols that evoke our biological tendencies toward fear might be necessary should English become a forgotten language.

Pretty heavy stuff for a graphic designer. But to hear it from Jeff Haase, assistant professor of design, such a project reflects the broad array of ideas that spring forth at this annual exhibit, which will be held Monday through June 13 at the Business Technology Center, 1275 Kinnear Road. "There's a lot of diversity," Haase said. "That's what's exiting — its never the same from year to year."

In addition to Ault's post-nuclear symbols, the show will feature industrial designs ranging from a more user-friendly mailbox to a redesigned golf club head, as well as works of interior design such as the inside of an animal therapy center.

In most cases, the student designers' creative energies were used with the intent of solving a problem. The art produced by these students isn't intended to hang on museum walls behind velvet ropes and security guards. Rather, it is art that we sit on, live in and wear out. But Haase is quick to dispel the idea that functionality negates beauty.

"All of the students have to go out and find clients," he said. But he added, "none of it looks like something you'd have in your house. Some of it really takes it to another level of abstraction."

Form, it turns out, will count every bit as much as function, as the show will be evaluated by a group of judges for the first time in the history of the exhibit.

For Ault, who intends to submit his design to an Oregon University contest held specifically to solve the hazardous waste quandry, the profession he is preparing for with this exhibit represents a higher calling than most realize. "When I get out (of college), I'd like to focus on designs that are not as corporate; that's when staleness sets in," he said. "I want to do something that will help people."

AFI list proves out of touch

Heaven help us, the American Film Institute is back with another list.

In the five years since raising a lot of ire — as well as a hefty chunk of advertising revenue — with 1998's televised "100 Greatest American Movies" special, the government-subsidized organization has taken pains to inform us as to which are America's greatest comedies, thrillers, love stories and movie stars. Now we have the 100 Greatest Heroes and Villains, unveiled during a program which aired Tuesday night on CBS.

The top villain, Hannibal Lector, was hardly a surprise pick — along with Norman Bates and Darth Vader, he was a shoo-in to make the top three. But the favored hero was something of a surprise. Atticus Finch, Gregory Peck's even-tempered, painfully righteous attorney from 1962's "To Kill a Mockingbird," managed to best Indiana Jones and James Bond to gain first place. His selection is as stodgy as it is anticlimactic and will clue viewers into what is intrinsically flawed about the way these lists have been formulated.

We will leave aside for a moment the complaint, oft-cited, that America's leading guardian of film culture should have better things to do than engage in arbitrary listmaking. My main beef is that the "prestigious" film-industry types whose input AFI tabulates in formulating its list have become so hamstrung by political correctness that they are incapable of making interesting choices.

On the "heroes" list, not only is a gay-rights agenda represented ("Philadelphia's" Andrew Beckett), but so too an anti-police agenda (Frank Serpico), an anti-Nixon agenda (Woodward and Bernstein), a feminist agenda (Thelma and Louise) and, in two separate instances, an anti-corporate, environmentalist agenda (Karen Silkwood and Erin Brockovich). Who was polled for this tedious, self-congratulatory list? The Humanities faculty at Ohio State?

None of the aforementioned characters come close to being great heroes because in most cases, their individuality is pushed to the margins of the screen by the importance of their causes. In the end, a hero's actions must be righteous. But as with all great characters, he or she must also be complex, human, sometimes weak. In a moment of rare clarity, AFI got it right by naming to the list Oskar Schindler, a character who was not a demigod with a heroic plan to save thousands from the Holocaust, but rather a selfish opportunist who stumbled onto a great evil and was forced to reassess his priorities.

Another problem with the AFI polls has been a lack of adequate ground rules. "The Graduate" scored high on AFI's list of great comedies because it was on the list of 400 nominees the institute sent out, despite the fact that no reasonable person would consider it a comedy. On the 100 Greatest Heroes and Villains list, such confusion reoccurs, with characters like Travis Bickle from "Taxi Driver" and Alex DeLarge from "A Clockwork Orange" rounded up into the "villains" camp.

True villains must be antagonists who create suspense by challenging the force of good. There is no good to be challenged by Travis and Alex, nor is there any suspense rooted in the outcome of their actions. From the filmmakers' point of view, they are studies in depravity created by the harsh world that surrounds them.

The most galling pick on the "villains" list, however, was that of Michael Corleone — a character of depth and beauty, haunted by guilt and dashed intentions. How is it that AFI — an institute which, in addition to fundraising and producing television specials, purports to teach the craft of storytelling — doesn't understand the difference between villains and tragic protagonists? If Michael Corleone is a villain, so is Hamlet. So is Charles Foster Kane.

There were some aspects of the list that pleasantly surprised me, such as the appearance of Marge Gunderson, the pregnant sheriff from "Fargo," in the "hero" column. Ditto for HAL9000, the brooding computer from "2001: A Space Odyssey," perhaps the most unconventional of all villains. But there is simply too much to this "100 Greatest" enterprise that has become thematically incoherent and tainted by politics. The American Film Institute would do well by American cinema to make the most recent list its last.

Jordan Gentile is a senior in journalism. He can be reached at gentile.38@osu.edu.

AFI chooses 100 best movie heroes, villains

By David Germain
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Atticus Finch from “To Kill a Mockingbird” beat out an army of swashbuckling idols for the top spot on the American Film Institute’s list of top screen heroes. Hannibal Lecter from “The Silence of the Lambs” chewed up the competition to lead the list of film villains.

The institute unveiled its ranking Tuesday night of the top good and bad guys in American film on the CBS special “AFI’s 100 Years ... 100 Heroes & Villains.”

Finch, played by Gregory Peck in the 1962 classic, was a faultlessly noble widower raising a daughter and son amid Southern racial unrest as he defended a black man accused of raping a white woman.

“I think Atticus Finch just represents the goodness all of us want to see in others and feel in ourselves,” said Jean Picker Firstenburg, the institute’s director. “This is a hard time in human history, and we look for the bright spots that show us the way.”

Harrison Ford’s Indiana Jones from “Raiders of the Lost Ark” was No. 2 on the heroes list, and Sean Connery’s James Bond from “Dr. No” came in third.

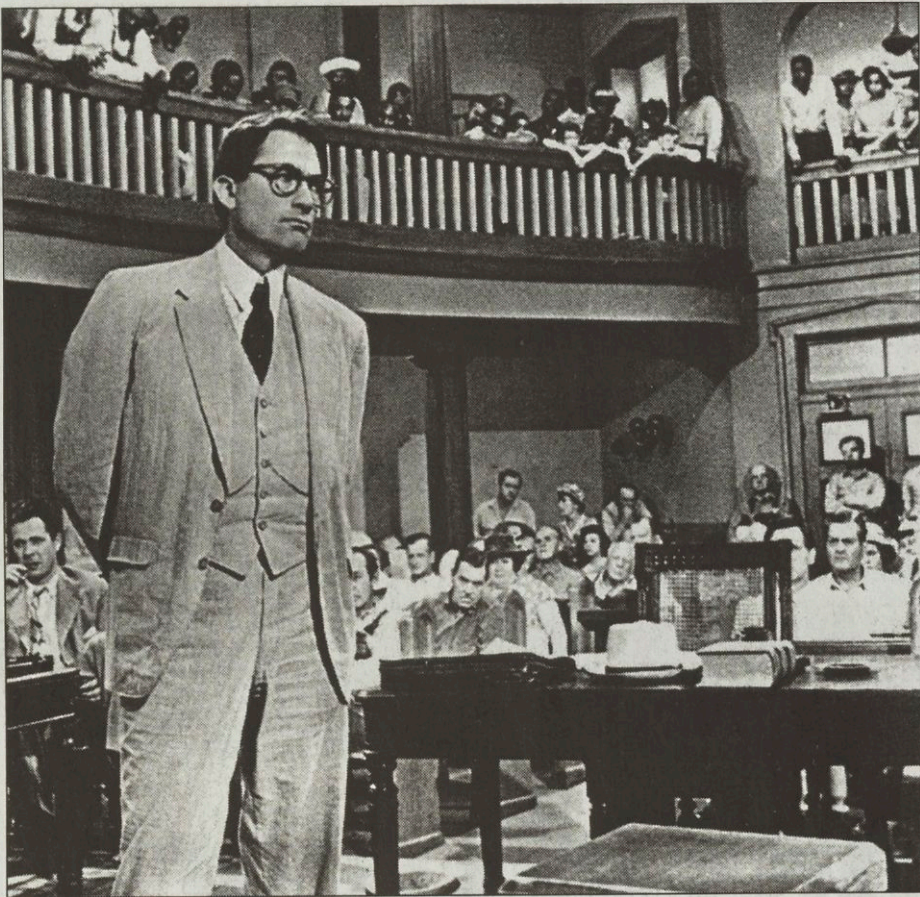

Lecter, played by Anthony Hopkins in the 1991 thriller plus the sequel “Hannibal” and the prequel “Red Dragon,” was a delectably fiendish serial killer who boasted about eating a man’s liver with fava beans and a nice Chianti.

Norman Bates (Anthony Perkins) of “Psycho” was second on the bad-guy list, and Darth Vader (played by David Prowse and voiced by James Earl Jones) placed third for “The Empire Strikes Back.”

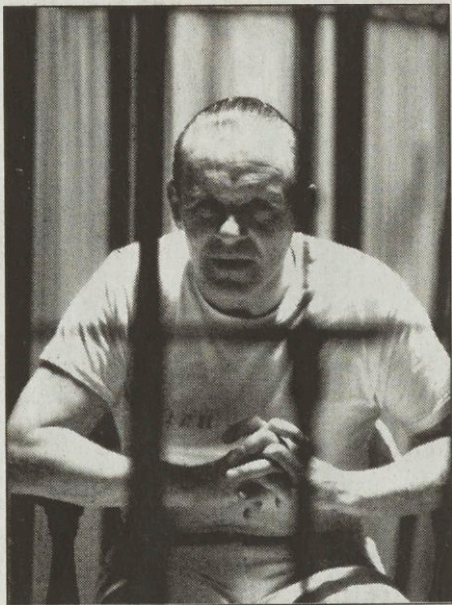

Arnold Schwarzenegger, host of the AFI special, was the only actor to place essentially the same character on both lists. His malevolent cyborg from “The Terminator” was No. 22 among villains, while his nice-guy cyborg in “Terminator 2: Judgment Day” placed 48th among heroes.

“I am absolutely ecstatic about it,” Schwarzenegger said. “To say you are one of the 50 favorite villains and one of the 50 favorite heroes in the history of American motion pictures, that is unbelievable, and I felt very honored.”

Rounding out the top 10 list of heroes, in order: Rick Blaine (Humphrey Bogart), “Casablanca”; Will Kane (Gary Cooper), “High Noon”; Clarice Starling (Jodie Foster), “The Silence of the Lambs”; Rocky Balboa (Sylvester Stallone), “Rocky”; Ellen Ripley (Sigourney Weaver), “Aliens”; George Bailey (James Stewart), “It’s a Wonderful Life”; and T.E. Lawrence (Peter O’Toole), “Lawrence of Arabia.” The rest of the top 10 villains, in order: the Wicked Witch of the West (Margaret Hamilton), “The Wizard of Oz”; Nurse Ratched (Louise Fletcher), “One Flew Over the Cuckoo’s Nest”; Mr. Potter (Lionel Barrymore), “It’s a Wonderful Life”; Alex Forrest (Glenn Close), “Fatal Attraction”; Phyllis Dietrichson (Barbara Stanwyck), “Double Indemnity”; Regan MacNeil (Linda Blair), “The Exorcist”; and the Queen (voiced by Lucille LaVerne), “Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs.”

The 100 heroes and villains were chosen from 400 character nominees by ballots, which were sent to 1,500 actors, directors, critics and others in the movie business.

The heroes list included one dog (Lassie in “Lassie Come Home,” No. 39), two comic-book heroes (Superman in the 1978 movie version, No. 26, and Batman in the 1989 film, No. 46), and loads of real-life figures.

Along with T.E. Lawrence, heroes based on real people included Oskar Schindler (Liam Neeson) in “Schindler’s List,” No. 13; Norma Rae Webster (Sally Field) in “Norma Rae,” No. 15; Mahatma Gandhi (Ben Kingsley) in “Gandhi,” No. 21; Gen. George Patton (George C. Scott) in “Patton,” No. 29; and Erin Brockovich (Julia Roberts) in “Erin Brockovich,” No. 31.

The villains list contained a range of non-humans, including the HAL 9000 computer in “2001: A Space Odyssey,” No. 13; the murderous extraterrestrial in “Alien,” No. 14; the shark in “Jaws,” No. 18; and the Martians in “The War of the Worlds,” No. 27.

Humanity as a whole also made the list: “Man,” whose encroachment menaced forest wildlife in “Bambi,” ranked as villain No. 20.

Good versus evil

The American Film Institute named its 100 greatest heroes and villains Tuesday. Here are the top 25 from each category:

and then played around with different materials,” Wakamiya said.

The piece was initially a part of a series she did. Wakamiya’s classmates said they thought the cotton candy-colored piece didn’t fit in with the others in the series.

“I decided to put it on its own pedestal and realized it looked significantly better by itself,” she said.

The piece is intended to create a fantasy, dream-like environment.

“Like a landscape almost, that housed all these different materials,” Wakamiya said. “It’s about your eye moving from one material to the next and the transformation of glass into metal and fabric.”

Wakamiya has been blowing glass for four years, starting at Urban Glass in Brooklyn, N.Y. She transferred to OSU two years ago and has studied under the program’s visiting-artist instructor, Robert Wiley.

Wiley, an OSU alumnus, has had a great amount of experience with the glass program at OSU.

“I’ve been on all sides of the Ohio State art experience — from an undergraduate student, to graduate student teaching and now to full-time, temporary faculty,” Wiley said.

Although the classes Wiley teaches are for advanced glass majors, there are many beginning classes that any student can take.

“There is a class called ‘Intro to Cold Glass Working’ that involves manipulating glass in kilns, cutting it and constructing it,” he said. “This way people get to have an experience with glass and making art, and also get to be around the studio and learn some of the jargon that’s required.”

The glass program’s instructors encourage students interested in the arts to take one of these introductory courses.

“Anybody can be an artist, anybody can have an art experience and that’s why we offer these entry-level classes,” Wiley said.

“Specify Glass” is being offered from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., Monday through Friday until July 18.

Girls can’t be shown wearing dresses; instead they have to be pictured in jeans or shorts, “perhaps sporting dirt splashes.”

Also, each reading text books have to have an equal number of male and female characters, and minority characters in numbers proportional to minority populations in the country. There must be equal numbers of selections written by men, women, Caucasians, blacks, Hispanics and Asians.

It’s great that students are exposed to literature and viewpoints from minority viewpoints, but Ravitch thinks the practice keeps students from reading the “classics” — Shakespeare, Dickens, Steinbeck, Twain.

Students are forced to read banal, pointless drivel, so it’s no surprise this generations young adults are less likely to read for pleasure, Ravitch says.

The censorship epidemic has deep roots, and will be difficult to change. Textbook companies are pressured by interest groups on both the right, who want students to learn about religion and family values, and on the left, who want to make education as multicultural as possible.

These interest groups are the most outspoken and powerful in the key states of California and Texas. Those two states seek out contracts with textbook companies to provide books for all the school districts in their state.

The number of school districts in those two states is so large that the textbook companies write the books specifically to please the interest groups in those states. So students across the country are stuck reading material that is approved by both the ultra-conservative and ultra-liberal populations of California and Texas. To sum up — pure drivel.

The book is easy to read. It’s written in clear, concise language rather than the typically confusing language of academia.

It was expanded from an essay Ravitch wrote for a magazine, and it shows. The topic is fascinating and has never been explored before, but unfortunately, the author is a little patronizing in tone.

Ravitch only has enough to say to fill about 100 pages, and she managed to stretch the book out to 180 pages. So she explains her argument, then gives example after example to prove it, then reiterates the argument.

But that makes the book a quick read, so there’s no excuse for anyone to avoid learning about the shortcomings of their education. If enough people start talking about the censorship, maybe it will propel some real change in the system.

At the end of the book, Ravitch includes a list of what she thinks should be a required reading list for any American student. By the time readers reach the end of the book, if they aren’t inspired to go seek out some of the classics they missed along the way, they shouldn’t be allowed to call themselves educated.

This book was provided for review by Barnes & Noble Booksellers at the Lennox Town Center.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

The Lantern will not publish illegal advertising or the advertising of illegal products or services. The Lantern reserves the right to reject advertising that denigrates individuals, groups or organizations based on race, gender, nationality, ethnicity, religion, mental or physical capacity, veteran's status, age or sexual orientation. The Lantern Business Manager will refer questionable advertising to the Publications Committee of the School of Journalism and Communication. The committee will recommend a decision on whether to publish the advertising to the Director of the school.

1. Complete name, address and telephone number for each advertiser is required.
2. Copy must be furnished by noon three days before publication, except for special publications whose deadlines will be announced.
3. An advertisement is required to occupy at least as many inches in height as columns in width. Any advertisement exceeding 18 inches in height will be considered a "full column" (21 inches) advertisement and charged accordingly.
4. Make-goods and adjustments will be considered for those advertisements only where errors occur in (a) business or group name, address, or phone number, (b) item price or (c) date, time or place of event. The error must be solely the fault of the Lantern. Adjustments will not exceed the cost of the advertisement and will be based on the portion of the advertisement nullified by the error. Minor spelling errors will not qualify for adjustment. Complaints must be registered with the Business Manager within 45 days of publication to qualify; otherwise the advertiser accepts full responsibility.
5. Guaranteed position is sold at the Business Manager's discretion.
6. A composition charge may apply to any changes, revisions or cancellations made after deadline.
7. No proof will be furnished for any advertisement received after deadline or for an ad smaller than seven column inches.
8. If the Lantern finds it necessary to stop contracted advertising because of nonpayment, the advertising agreement will be violated and the advertiser subject to a "re-bill" fee.
9. The Lantern reserves the right to require prepayment for advertising, or to reject advertising, if the advertiser is delinquent in payment, or if the advertiser's credit is impaired. Advertisers must prepay all advertising until a satisfactory credit rating with the Lantern is established. A certified check or money order is required for out-of-town advertisers.
10. Contract advertisers will furnish the Lantern with a "rate-holder" ad meeting contract minimums for use in any contract period for which the advertiser does not provide an ad.
11. A tearsheet will be furnished for all display advertising run in the Lantern. Additional tearsheets are available (limit 15) provided the advertiser requests them from the Lantern office prior to publication.
12. The advertiser agrees to indemnify and hold harmless the Ohio State University, its Board of Trustees and its officers, agents and employees from and against any and all loss, cost and expense, including reasonable attorney fees, resulting from the publication by the Lantern of the advertiser's advertisement.
13. Advertisers in the Lantern agree that they will not represent themselves in any way as being endorsed by the Ohio State University.
14. A mail-order advertiser is required to submit a sample "proof-of-product" prior to publication.
15. Advertisers must request the return of their original ad materials; the Lantern will dispose of such materials 60 days after their first publication.

MARTY HOMAN

Say it ain't so Sammy

Tuesday night I saw one of the more disturbing images I have ever seen on a baseball field. Each and every time it was replayed, I cringed and wondered if this player's career would ever be the same?

This was not a bone-jarring collision between a shortstop and center fielder going after the same ball. This was not my favorite player Ken Griffey Jr. blowing out his hamstring merely rounding third base. Nor was it Roger Clemens plunking somebody with a 98 mph fastball in the back of the helmet.

This was the game's great ambassador getting caught using a corked bat.

Tuesday night, in the first inning of the Cubs' first inter-league game of the season, Sammy Sosa came to bat with runners in scoring position and only one out. He had been struggling mightily since returning from the disabled list, going 2-for-15 with just one RBI and eight strikeouts.

On a full count Sosa swung at an off-speed pitch. His bat split as the ball grounded weakly to the Tampa Bay second baseman, allowing Mark Grudzielanek to score.

Upon further inspection, it was found that Sosa had used a corked bat at the plate. He was immediately ejected and Grudzielanek's run was taken off the scoreboard, as was Sosa's RBI.

So what are we baseball fans to make of all this?

One of the greatest sluggers in the history of the game was caught cheating. A man with 505 home runs has been caught with a corked bat. The same man, who along with Mark McGwire brought fans back to the game of baseball during their chase for Roger Maris' home run record in 1998, was ejected for using illegal lumber.

Does Sosa even have a reason to have a corked bat? I mean seriously, he's huge. In a post game press conference, Sammy said he used it for batting practice and other hitting exhibitions, both here and in his home country of the Dominican Republic. He uses it to put on a "show," and said he does it for the fans.

Sosa said he brought it to the plate by accident and that "it was a mistake" because it was mixed in with his regular game bats. No kidding it was a mistake. It is a mistake that might tarnish and void everything he has done in his career.

A poll on ESPN.com asked if Sosa's reputation has been harmed as a result of this incident. Just an hour after it happened, with 13,000 fans logging in, 82 percent said yes. By yesterday morning, over 125,000 fans had already logged in — the most I've ever seen that quickly — and 74 percent said yes.

The beer-swilling, pessimistic fan will say "he's probably been doing it for years," and will always associate Sosa with this incident.

The jury is still out in my opinion. Major league officials took all of Sosa's bats in the hope of finding out if any more of them are corked. To me, if they find no more of his bats are corked, he should be suspended seven games — the standard punishment for using a corked bat. There should be no further talk of Sosa being a cheater.

Sosa did address the media and apologized sincerely to teammates, fans and the game as soon as the Cubs won. He admitted his wrongdoing as he should have. He has done nothing but good things for the game up to this point. If he is cleared of having more illegal bats he should eventually be detached from the stigma of being a cheater.

In the mean time, say it ain't so Sammy. Say it ain't so.

Marty Homan is graduating in journalism next week. He hopes Sammy can return to being the superstar he really is soon. He also can be e-mailed and offered jobs at homan.26@osu.edu.

Rowing team takes eighth

Women's rowing team weathers the storm of the NCAA Championships

The Ohio State women's rowing team was just happy to have made it to the 2003 NCAA Championships last weekend. But given the 25-30 mph winds and three-foot waves crashing down on the Buckeyes' boats, they might have thought otherwise.

Despite the unbearable weather conditions, OSU placed eighth out of 12 teams, scoring 38 points overall at Eagle Creek Reservoir in Indianapolis.

"I thought we did well; eighth in the country," said OSU women's rowing coach Andy Teitelbaum. "This program has achieved some great things, and we are truly one of the elite teams in the country."

Leading the way for the No. 8 Buckeyes was their first varsity 4, which came in fourth (7:30.02) and was six seconds away from ousting

"The racing was so crazy — it was exciting and interesting."

Michigan. The fourth-place finish ties the best first varsity 4 performance for OSU in the program's eight-year history.

"It was a really great race," said sophomore Jamie Berning, coxswain of the first varsity 4. "Everybody was fast, and we were happy with our finish."

The closest race came with the Buckeye first varsity 8, which rowed to a ninth-place finish, taking third in the Petite Final (6:23.95). Princeton nipped OSU by 0.47 seconds (6:23.48) in the first varsity 8 competition. That score allowed the Tigers to take the seventh-place spot in the overall standings because both teams compiled 38 points.

"We were in fifth place until the 500-meter mark, then sprinted past Yale and California," said senior Maxi Meissner, stroke of the first varsity 8. "All the boats performed really well in the last races, which really matters."

Rounding out OSU's strong outing was the second varsity 8. The rowers took sixth overall, but the performance (6:43.80) was the second-best national finish in program history. Two seconds faster, and the second varsity 8 would have jumped up to fourth, where Princeton sat with a 6:41.99 time.

"The racing was so crazy — it was exciting and interesting," said sophomore Maggie Kathman, stroke of the second varsity 8. "You easily had a chance to get last or first place."

Postseason Awards

Teitelbaum was named Central Region Coach of the Year for the second-straight season. Meissner, senior Karla Fiserova and sophomore Franziska Schubert made First Team All-Central Region. Junior Natalie Legge was named to the second team. Meissner and Fiserova also gained First Team All-Big Ten honors.

Cubs stand by Sosa, others speak out

By Nancy Armour
Associated Press

CHICAGO — After being peppered with question after question about Sammy Sosa's corked bat, Chicago Cubs starter Mark Prior had had enough.

"I'm not answering any more," he said testily. "Anybody need to ask me about pitching?"

While Sosa's stunning gaffe Tuesday night was hotly debated by fans and the rest of baseball, his teammates stood solidly behind him. The slugger maintains he used a batting practice bat by mistake, and the Cubs say they will believe him unless evidence proves otherwise.

Yesterday, baseball officials announced that all 77 of Sosa's bats they seized were free of corks.

"In our society, you're supposed to be innocent until you're proven guilty," said Cubs manager Dusty Baker, who gave Sosa an encouraging pat on the back as they passed at a postgame news conference.

"We have to wait and see whatever verdicts come down and try not speculate," Baker added. "Try to give the guy an honest chance, and believe him until you've proved otherwise."

"Unfortunately, it's a dirty mark, when you consider all he's accomplished," Yankees manager Joe Torre said. "It's really unfortunate for the game. Everybody's scratching their heads right now. It's embarrassing. He's too good of a player. It's too bad."

And it's not just Sosa who may have to deal with the fallout.

"Everyone who hits a home run now, they're going to think you're using a corked bat," said Atlanta's Andruw Jones, who hit a game-winning, two-run homer against Texas. "It just makes home-run hitters look bad."

But Seattle second baseman Bret Boone said Sosa's career shouldn't be judged on this one night.

"I just hope it doesn't taint what he's done," Boone said. "Corked, not corked, he's got as much power as anyone in baseball. He's probably got as much power, outside Mark McGwire, as anyone in history. It's probably embarrassing for him."
