Processing Note: Jeffrey W. Thomas processed and arranged the Deborah Pryce Papers in 2009-2010. A careful effort was made during the processing of the collection to preserve whenever possible the original order and filing systems found within each series. Many files, especially within series containing legislative and committee records, were maintained by staff in large file folders. These large files were divided into smaller folders for preservation and descriptive purposes.

Biographical Sketch

Deborah Denine Pryce was born in Warren, Ohio, on July 29, 1951. In June 1973, she graduated with cum laude honors from The Ohio State University, receiving a B.A. degree from the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences. She received her J.D. from the Capital University Law School in 1976. After passing the bar exam, Pryce worked as an administrative law judge for the Ohio state department of insurance from 1976 to 1978. Starting in 1978, she served as a prosecutor and municipal attorney for the city attorney's office in Columbus, Ohio. In 1985, she successfully campaigned to become the presiding judge in the municipal court of Franklin County. Re-elected to a second term, she served in the court until 1992.

In 1992, Pryce entered the race for the 15th Ohio Congressional District vacated by the retirement from the U.S. House of Representatives of 13-term Republican, Chalmers P. Wylie. Pryce ran unopposed in the Republican primary in a district covering the western half of Columbus, the suburbs in southwestern Franklin County, and rural Madison and Union Counties. In a close general election race, Pryce won with forty-four percent of the vote, defeating Democrat Richard Cordray and Linda Reidelbach, who ran as an independent. Pryce took her first oath of office in January 1993 as a freshman member of the 103rd Congress. Over the next twelve years, she was re-elected with large majorities to the six succeeding Congresses. In 2006, when the Republican Party lost the majority in Congress it had held since the 1994 elections, Pryce barely won a close race by defeating Democratic challenger Mary Jo Kilroy by a 50.2 to 49.7 margin. In August 2007, Pryce announced she would not run for a ninth term. She retired from the House in January 2009 to focus on raising her daughter Mia, who she had adopted as an infant in 2001.

Starting in her first year in Congress, Deborah Pryce became involved in the leadership of the House Republicans. Elected freshman-class president in 1993, she also served on the Planning and Learning Committee that helped craft the GOP's "Contract with America." Following the 1994 elections, Pryce served on the transition team tasked with shifting control of the House to the Republican Party for the first time in forty years. In 1996, she was made a Deputy Majority Whip and two years later was elected secretary of the House Republican Conference (HRC). After serving as conference secretary in 1998 and 1999, Pryce ran unopposed for the position of vice chair of the HRC in 2000. Two years later she won a three-way race for conference chair. Pryce served as chair of the HRC in the 108th and 109th Congresses (2003-2007), making her the highest-ranking Republican woman ever to serve in the House.

As a freshman legislator in the 103rd Congress (1993–1994), Pryce received assignments on the Banking, Finance, and Urban Affairs Committee and the Government Operations Committee. As a member of the Banking Committee she sat in on the hearings held by the committee in July and August 1994 to investigate the Whitewater controversy involving the real estate investments of President William J. Clinton and his wife, Hillary, in the failed Whitewater Development Corporation. In the 104th Congress (1995–1996), Pryce switched her committee assignments to a seat on the more powerful Rules Committee, which has oversight of all legislation headed for floor debate. For the majority of her congressional career, Pryce's committee focus remained on the Rules assignment, where she chaired the Legislative and Budget Process Subcommittee from 2001 through 2004. In 2005, Pryce left the Rules Committee to accept a seat on the newly organized Financial Services Committee, where she became the fourth-ranking member. She chaired the Subcommittee on Domestic and International Monetary Policy, Trade, and Technology during the 109th Congress (2005-2006) and was the ranking minority member on the Subcommittee on Capital Markets during the 110th Congress.

During her career in Congress, Deborah Pryce's major public policy interests and her most noted legislative accomplishments centered around women's issues, children's services, and health care, particularly in the area of cancer research. As the mother of two adopted children, Pryce sponsored numerous bills to promote the practice of adoption. Through her legislative initiatives, she worked to assist foster parents by easing burdensome regulations and provide for adoption tax credits. Spurred by a case involving a family in her district who adopted a pair of twins with Native American ancestry, in 1995, Pryce introduced the Indian Child Welfare Act designed to remove racial barriers to adoption. In 1999, Congresswoman Pryce authored the Child Abuse Prevention and Enforcement Act, a law that boosted federal funding to investigate and prevent child abuse. She also sponsored and successfully passed through Congress the Afghan Women and Children Relief Act of 2001, which authorized funding through non-governmental organizations to provide health and education assistance to women and children living in Afghanistan.

Deborah Pryce's advocacy for children's issues extended most notably into the area of medical care. Her Children's Hospitals Education Equity and Research Act of 2004 secured funding for post-graduate physician training in children's hospitals. Following the death of her nine-year-old daughter, Caroline, from cancer in 1999, Pryce strove to raise awareness of and research funding for pediatric cancer. She and her husband, Randy Walker, founded Hope Street Kids, a pediatric cancer research foundation. As co-chair of the House Cancer Caucus, Pryce held hearings on childhood cancer research and initiated Childhood Cancer Month and Gold Ribbon Day to increase public awareness and support. Her efforts culminated in 2008 with the signing of the Caroline Pryce Walker Childhood Cancer Act, which substantially increased federal funding for pediatric cancer research and established a national childhood cancer database.

Congresswoman Pryce also was a leading advocate for cancer patients regardless of age and for increasing federal money for general cancer research. The Access to Cancer Therapies Act she authored in 2003 provided Medicare patients with the latest in oral cancer drugs, while her Access to Cancer Clinical Trials Act of 2001 eliminated barriers to clinical trials for cancer patients. She also authored the Patient Navigator, Outreach, and Chronic Disease Prevention Act of 2005, designed to assist people in underserved communities overcome cultural, linguistic, and financial barriers to access the health care system.

As a former judge, early in her congressional career Deborah Pryce became involved in legislation pertaining to crime and the criminal justice system. She sponsored bills designed to halt the trafficking of pornography in prisons and to eliminate the availability to inmates of exercise weights. In 1996, she delivered a major speech on crime issues at the Republican National Convention. Congresswoman Pryce also advocated for tougher federal laws and increased diplomatic measures against the national and international trafficking of humans. In March 2005, she headed a congressional delegation on a fact-finding trip to Greece, Moldavia, Albania, and Italy to investigate human trafficking. Later that year, Pryce authored the End

Demand for Sex Trafficking Act, which focused law enforcement efforts on the prosecution of purchasers, sex traffickers, and exploiters in the illegal sex trade that disproportionately victimizes women and children.

In other legislative areas, Deborah Pryce used her assignments on the Rules and Financial Services committees to draft significant provisions to laws designed to modernize the nation's financial services industry. Here, her major focus was on the protection of consumers' personal and financial information. From her position as chairman of the Financial Services Subcommittee on Domestic and International Monetary Policy, Trade, and Technology, she led efforts to reform the review policies and procedures of the Committee on Foreign Investments in the United States.

A moderate on social issues, Deborah Pryce was a supporter of abortion and gay rights and an advocate of gun control. Never one to seek out media attention, Pryce had "one of the smallest egos in the House of Representatives," as stated by former Republican Congresswoman Susan Molinari of New York in a 2003 article in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. Her lack of pretensions gained her respect from members of Congress regardless of party affiliation. This respect by her colleagues, along with her background as a judge, helped Pryce when it came time to broker compromises and reach consensus on major legislation.
