The College of Education
announces
Dear Alumni,

I am pleased to announce the creation of the College of Education Hall of Fame. As recommended by the College’s Alumni Advisory Board, membership in the Hall will be the highest honor the College can bestow upon its graduates and faculty. I am seeking your assistance in identifying those individuals who should be the charter inductees to the Hall of Fame. Thanks largely to the quality of our graduates and faculty, this College has earned an outstanding reputation. Let us now celebrate the achievements of those who have helped build the reputation of the College.

Please review the full criteria and procedures described in this brochure and send in your nominations. Then mark your calendars for the gala opening of the Hall of Fame on May 16—but more about that later.

Sincerely,

Donald P. Anderson
Dean

GUIDELINES

PURPOSE
— Induction into the Education Hall of Fame is the highest award that the College can bestow, and inductees will be enshrined annually. The honor will be reserved for those educators who have made such significant contributions to education as to be “models” for all others in the field.

CRITERIA
— (1) The nominee may be living or deceased and must have been a faculty member in the College of Education or must have graduated from a program in the College.
(2) The nominee must have distinguished himself/herself in some way, must have made a positive contribution to society, and must have reflected positively on the University.
(3) The nominator must explain his/her reasons for making the nomination.

SELECTION
— A committee made up of members of the Alumni and Development Advisory Board and current College of Education staff members will make the final selections.

DEADLINE
— Nominations must be postmarked by Saturday, March 15, 1986.

Opening of education hall

The Ohio State College of Education Hall of Fame will open autumn quarter in Arps Hall. In a recent ceremony, six late faculty members were made charter inductees.

Boyd H. Bode, Edgar Dale, H. Gordon Hullfish, Delbert Oberteuffer, John Ramseyer and Laura Zirbes were chosen by a group of alumni from more than 250 nominations for their outstanding achievements in education.

"This award is intended to be the highest award ever to be given in the College of Education," says Richard Sentieri, director of academic studies and coordinator of the Hall of Fame awards banquet.

Family members of the inductees accepted the awards.

Bode was a faculty member from 1922-44. Following his retirement from Ohio State he taught in Egypt and lectured in the U.S. and abroad.

He stressed the need for an education in America that would exemplify democratic values at their best. He died in 1953 at age 79.

Dale, who died in 1985 at age 84, was a faculty member from 1929-1970. He specialized in audio-visual communications. His book, Audio-Visual Methods in Teaching, greatly influenced teaching techniques and his vocabulary studies led to development of the Dale-Chall readability formula, widely used to test reading levels of instructional materials.

He received Ohio State's Alumni Award for Distinguished Teaching in 1963 and received an honorary degree from the University in 1980.

Hullfish, a specialist in the philosophy of education, was a faculty member from 1922 until his death in 1962 at age 68.

He was a Fulbright lecturer in the history and principles of American education at the Tokyo University of Liberal Arts and at Ochanomizu Women's University in Japan and Korea. He received the Alumni Award for Distinguished Teaching in 1960.

Oberteuffer, an authority in health and physical education and star of the WBNS television series "The Judge," was a faculty member from 1932-66. From 1929-32 he was state supervisor of physical and health education for the Ohio Department of Education.

In 1969 he received Ohio State's Distinguished Service Award. He also received numerous other awards. He died in 1981 at age 79.

Ramseyer joined the staff of University School in 1938 and was its director from 1948-51, was a professor of educational administration from 1951-68 and director of the School of Education from 1965-67. He also directed the five-year School-Community Development Study, aimed at improving the training of school administrators and researching interrelationships of schools and their communities.

He also helped develop the University Council for Educational Administration composed of U.S. and Canadian universities doing research in educational administration. He died in 1968 at age 60.

Zirbes came to the University in 1928 to direct the summer demonstration school. She guided pioneer studies in the developmental approach to elementary education, inspiring teachers to embrace progressive ideas by relating education to life and changes in society.

She helped develop the college program for the professional preparation of elementary school teachers before retiring in 1954. In 1946, President Harry S. Truman conferred upon her the National Women's Press Club title of Woman of the Year. She died in 1967 at the age of 83.

2002 Hall of Fame Induction Ceremony

Friday, March 8
Hall of Fame

Established in 1986, the College of Education Hall of Fame celebrates the achievements of those who have helped build the reputation of the College. At the Hall’s opening Donald Anderson, then Dean of the College, stated that “membership in the Hall will be the highest honor the College can bestow upon its graduates and faculty.” This honor is reserved for educators who have made such significant contributions to education as to be models for all others. Recipients of this honor are chosen biennially by the College’s EdLums Advisory Board.

2002 Inductees

ROBERT L. BARTELS, OSU Faculty Member from 1959-1989 in Exercise Science. He received three degrees from Ohio State: B.S. ’51, M.A. ’52 and Ph.D. ’61. A well-regarded figure in exercise physiology, he researched the effect of training on male and female athletes and on men prone to heart disease. He founded the OSU Faculty and Staff Fitness Program and was a towering figure in competitive swimming in the United States and abroad.

WILLIAM J. HOLLOWAY, OSU Faculty Member from 1970-1982 in Educational Administration and OSU Vice Provost for Minority Affairs from 1970-1978. He began as an English and history teacher in a segregated Georgia school and rose to be a national leader in diversity issues. He was Ohio State’s first vice provost of minority affairs following unrest on the Columbus campus, and was director of the Nigerian Education Program.

KATHRYN M. MOORE, Dean, College of Education at North Carolina State University from 2000 to present and Professor at Michigan State University from 1988-2000. She graduated from Ohio State with a B.A. and B.S. in 1965 and an M.A. in 1966. She developed a project to describe the work and careers of higher education administrators and her study of women’s experiences became a prototype for equity accountability. She launched the advanced learning systems center at Michigan State University.

Robert L. Bartels is both an alumnus of the College of Education and a well-regarded figure in the field of exercise physiology. He was a strong influence in teaching, research and service in the three decades he served on the exercise physiology faculty before retiring as professor emeritus from the College’s School of Health, Physical Education and Recreation. He became known for his research on the effect of training on young athletes and men who are prone to heart disease. He founded The Ohio State University’s Faculty and Staff Fitness Program. He also was a towering figure in competitive swimming in Ohio, the United States and abroad.

William J. Holloway has had a long and distinguished career in public and higher education. He began as an English and history teacher in a segregated Georgia school and rose to be a national leader in diversity issues. Among his posts was the position of Ohio State’s first vice provost of minority affairs following the unrest on campus in 1970. His tenure was characterized by high academic values, integrity, wise judgment, and gracious leadership. His honors include the Freedoms Foundation Medal; the Superior Accomplishment Award from the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare; and Ohio State’s Distinguished Service Award.

Kathryn M. Moore has distinguished herself as a brilliant and versatile scholar as well a leader of higher education since graduating from Ohio State. She developed the Leaders in Transition Project to describe the work and careers of higher education administrators. She led a study of women’s experiences at Pennsylvania State University that became a prototype for university equity accountability studies and policy reform. Also, she launched the Center for the Study of Advance Learning Systems at Michigan State to link technology, diversity, globalization, human capacity and leadership. She is dean of the College of Education at North Carolina State University.
