Fulbright Scholarships

Six Ohio State graduate students have been awarded Fulbright scholarships for foreign study in 1951-52. Martha V. Krauss, of Louisville, who received a master's degree from Ohio State in June, will go to France to study literature at the University of Aix. Robert J. Hahn, of Hamilton, graduate assistant in history, will go to the University of Strasbourg, France.

Florence McCracken, a member of the voice faculty in the School of Music, a graduate of the University of Michigan, has received a fellowship for study in Italy.

Three additional Columbus residents who have won scholarships are: Suzanne S. Williams, graduating senior in Arts who will study at the University of Vienna; Andrew H. Wright, graduate student in English who will study at the University of London; and Eugene H. Price, who will continue his studies in the romance languages at the University of Montpellier, France.

Another graduate student, Eugene A. Fitzpatrick, Milford, N. J., has been granted a Fulbright award and is studying at the University of Sydney in Australia.
ANNOUNCEMENT OF FULBRIGHT AWARD

The United States Department of State has announced the awarding of a grant to:

Name: Abraham S. Friedman

Title: Research Associate in the Department of Chemistry

Institution in U.S.: Ohio State University

Purpose of Grant: Research in physical chemistry

Institution Abroad: University of Amsterdam, Amsterdam, the Netherlands

The award is made by the Department of State under the provisions of Public Law No. 564, 79th Congress, the Fulbright Act. It is one of approximately 340 grants for lecturing and research abroad included in the program for the academic year 1951-52. As provided by the Act, all candidates are selected by the Board of Foreign Scholarships, the members of which are appointed by the President. Lecturers and research scholars are recommended for the Board's consideration by the Conference Board of Associated Research Councils, which has been designated to receive and review the applications of candidates in these categories.

The funds used in the Fulbright program are foreign currencies realized through surplus property sales abroad. Under executive agreements with foreign governments, programs are currently in effect in nineteen countries: Australia, Austria, Belgium and Luxembourg, Burma, Egypt, France, Greece, India, Iran, Italy, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Philippines, Thailand, Turkey, and the United Kingdom.

Osborn Fuller, Ph.D.,
Ohio State University,
Columbus, Ohio.
May 22, 1951

My dear: Dr. Davis:

It gives me pleasure to inform you that a member of your staff, Abraham S. Friedman, has been selected by the Board of Foreign Scholarships to receive an award in the Department's international educational exchange program under the Fulbright Act. Enclosed is a copy of an announcement giving details of this award.

A copy of this letter and three copies of the announcement are being sent to the Fulbright representative on your campus with the request that he arrange suitable publicity for this award.

From time to time you may receive announcements of similar grants to other individuals connected with your institution. Applicants for lecturing and research grants who have not yet been notified of the outcome of their candidacies may be assured that applications are being processed as rapidly as possible and that they may expect to be informed of decisions within the near future.

The Department and the Board of Foreign Scholarships appreciate the cooperation of the colleges and universities in this educational exchange program.

Sincerely yours,

For the Secretary of State:

George T. Moody
Acting Chief
Professional Activities Branch
Division of Exchange of Persons

Enclosure:

Announcement of Fulbright Award.

Howard L. Davis, Ph.D.,
President, Ohio State University.
Columbus, Ohio.
Six faculty receive Fulbright awards

"ON CAMPUS" - 11-5-81

The University Center for International Studies reports that six more Ohio State faculty members have received Fulbright-Hays grants for teaching or research abroad during 1981-82.

Michael L. Benedict, associate professor of history, Kenneth E. Naylor, professor of Slavic language, and Lars G. Sandberg, professor of economics, received Fulbrights sponsored by the Council for International Exchange of Scholars.

Benedict will lecture on American legal and constitutional history and race relations at Hokkaido University and Hokusei Gakuen University in Japan from April 1982 through February 1983.

Naylor will lecture on the history and structure of the Serbo-Croatian language and Serbo-Croatian morphology at the University of Novi Sad, Novi Sad, Yugoslavia, during spring quarter 1982.

"It's very nice to be invited back to the university where I was a student," Naylor said. While working on his dissertation in 1962-63, he was the first American student to study at the University of Novi Sad.

Sandberg will lecture on economic theory and quantitative methods in economic history at Uppsala University in Sweden for three months during this academic year.

Receiving Fulbright awards sponsored by the U.S. Department of Education were Samuel C. Chu, professor of history, Carter V. Findley, associate professor of history, and Bradley H. Richardson, professor of political science.

Chu, who is in the People's Republic of China now through next August, is conducting research into the Sino-Japanese War of 1894 and the culmination of 19th century China's "Yangwu Reforms."

Findley will do research in Turkey during spring quarter 1982 on the social history of the Ottoman bureaucracy of the reform era (1789-1922). He is conducting similar research in the Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton, N.J. He is being supported there by a grant from the institute and by a faculty professional leave from Ohio State.

Richardson will be in Japan during spring quarter 1982 to study the economic policy of that nation.

Fulbright awards to Fred A. Zimmer Jr., professor emeritus of industrial design, Charles W. Hoffmann, professor of German, and Richard W. Bjornson, professor of comparative studies in the humanities, were announced earlier.
COLUMBUS, Ohio -- Five Ohio State University faculty members and one student have received Fulbright awards to teach and conduct research abroad for the 1984-85 academic year.

Ernest G. Arias, assistant professor of city and regional planning, will lecture in three universities in Colombia through a three-month Fulbright scholarship funded by the Council for International Exchange of Scholars.

Arias, of 396 King Ave. (43210), teaches growth management and land use planning, urban design, housing, and the relationship between people and the environment.

While in Colombia, he hopes to expand his research on the condition of public housing projects in the United States by studying the evolution of squatters' settlements in Bogota.

Mansel Blackford, professor of history, has received a Fulbright senior lectureship at the University of Hiroshima in Japan. He will teach American studies and business history and comparative business history from April 1985 to February 1986.

During his visit, Blackford, of 1578 College Hill Drive (43221), plans to meet with business and academic leaders to continue his study of Japanese business systems.

John M. Hellmann Jr., associate professor of English at the Lima campus, has been awarded a Fulbright to lecture in American literature in Belgium for six months during 1985. Hellmann will teach at the University of Antwerp, the University of Brussels and an institute for translators and interpreters in Brussels.

Hellmann, of 1315 W. Market St., LIMA, teaches courses on American literature, American studies, the relationship between literature and film, and writing. He is the author of "Fables of Fact: The New Journalism as New Fiction," published in 1981 by the University of Illinois Press.

Beverly Kahn, associate professor of political science at the Mansfield campus, has been awarded a one-year Fulbright to research the political philosophies of Antonio Labriola. Her efforts will concentrate on the influence Labriola has had on the Italian Communist Party. Kahn said Labriola was the first Italian to explain Marxism and present it as a system of political philosophy to the Italian people.

Kahn, of 83 Glenwood Blvd., MANSFIELD, also is the recipient of the Rome Prize, enabling her to conduct a concurrent one-year fellowship at the American Academy in Rome. The Rome Prize is funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities.

A three-time recipient of the Fulbright awards, Bradley Richardson, professor of political science, is continuing his research on the political economy of Japan through June 1984. His grant, sponsored by the U.S. Department of Education, will support three months of study.

Richardson will evaluate the effects of Japanese government policies on the country's industrial success over the past 30 years. His findings will be compared to research on American industries and related government support.

Patricia Joy Horvath, a Ph.D. student in mathematics education from PARMA, has been awarded a one-year Fulbright grant, sponsored by the Institute of International Education, to conduct research on methods of mathematics education in Japan.

Horvath will compare the daily activities of junior high school math teachers in Japan and the United States, focusing on preparation time, classroom interaction and research. She hopes to identify factors that explain the higher math achievement of Japanese students in comparison to American students as reflected in a 1981 international math survey involving 24 countries.

Additional Fulbright winners may be announced at a later date after several host countries give final approval to candidates seeking to visit their countries.

Fulbright scholarships are awarded to U.S. graduate students, teachers and scholars for study abroad and to foreign nationals for study in the United States. Selection is based primarily on academic and professional qualifications.

Some 2,100 Americans will be sent abroad for the 1984-85 academic year under the Fulbright Exchange Program. Established by Congress in 1946, the program is designed to increase understanding between people of the United States and the people of other countries.

COLUMBUS, Ohio -- Patricia Liddle, the coordinator of Academic Programs Abroad in the Ohio State University Center for International Studies, has received a Fulbright award to participate in a three-week study tour to West Germany.

Liddle, a resident of Upper Arlington, is one of 20 administrators from across the nation who will participate. The Fulbright award is under the U.S. Administrators in International Education Program with the Federal Republic of Germany.

The group of Americans will be in Germany from April 23 to May 17. After an orientation week in Bonn, the group will visit several other cities in Germany, meeting with administrators in German colleges and universities, as well as officials in agencies for educational administration and exchange.

The program will provide opportunities for discussion of the educational, cultural and political issues involved in developing foreign student exchange programs between the United States and Germany, Liddle explains.

A comparable group of German administrators in international education will visit the United States from May 11 to 31.

Fulbright winner carries OSU's reputation abroad

By Kevin S. Kellems
Lantern staff writer 4-24-85

Ohio State's coordinator of study abroad left for West Germany Tuesday as one of only 20 recipients in the United States of the Fulbright Award for student exchange administration.

Patricia J. Liddle is attending an orientation session in Bonn, West Germany before crossing the country, visiting various universities and exchanging ideas for improving study abroad programs.

The energetic administrator is also one of only two award winners who are not a college dean or school director.

After the tour, Liddle will attend a wrap-up meeting in Berlin, and take a side trip into East Berlin before returning to Ohio May 17.

Ohio State does not yet have a student exchange program with Germany.

"The administration is very interested in setting up a program with Germany," she said. "I do think that the university has a commitment to expanding study abroad."

With Liddle as coordinator, study abroad at Ohio State has expanded from six to 20 programs in the last five years, sending students to Canada, China, England, Greece and Spain.

She said the programs, administered by the University Center for International Studies, do not just strive to increase students' knowledge of the world outside the U.S., but also to improve students' understanding of what it is to be American.

Before students leave to study in a foreign country, she attempts to prepare them with orientation sessions.

"She tries to instill an attitude whereby one can adapt to the new surroundings," said Dirk Baltzly, a senior from Zanesville who studied at Oxford University in England.

"There is no way to completely pre-package a person for that type of thing," he said.

Linda Miller, a senior from Wheelersburg who also went to Oxford, said, "She is very open; she is good at persuading people because she wins them over."

When a misty-eyed student walks into her office with a foggy desire to study overseas, Liddle said she attempts to pin down the person's interests and abilities, and point them on a steady track toward personal and educational fulfillment.

"I am a true Thursday's child," Liddle said, referring to the saying, "Thursday's child has far to go."

"I was destined for this job," she said.

Liddle's present job is one of promotion and coordination.

Liddle has traveled extensively throughout the world, and has lived in Singapore, Indonesia and the Netherlands.

"I have been to most of the places where the students go," she said.

While flying to and from Asia in the 1960s, she landed in Saigon three times.

"I never left the plane. I am a chicken," she said.

Liddle said she was shocked by what she saw from the plane in 1964.

"That was when no one in the U.S. was talking about the war much and I saw at least 300 maimed helicopters."

Liddle's life has not always been full of adventure.

After growing up in Pittsburgh, she attended small Westminster College in New Wilmington, Pa., where she majored in communications.

"My parents told me I had to choose a school within a 50-mile radius of home," she said. "It (Westminster) was like a Protestant convent."

Through the past two decades, Liddle said she has watched changes in student attitudes with fascination.

"Students have become more preppy in the last five years," she said.

Liddle said she thinks young people are less mature now than they were during the Vietnam War and the Civil Rights movement in the 1960s.

"Because life was more intense then, they grew up more rapidly. The students now, who are experiencing more peace, are less creative; they want more things done for them."

Liddle said her opinion is supported in the movie "The Third Man," in which a comparison is made of two cultures.

She said that Italy, whose history is laden with war and violence, produced great art such as that by DaVinci and Caravaggio, while 500 years of peace in Switzerland yielded the cuckoo clock.

Liddle said that students who study overseas today want more help, but they are encouraged to be independent and to immerse themselves in the foreign culture.

It is important for American youth to learn about other nations because we are becoming increasingly interdependent, she said.

"It is my intention to make them care because we do live in an interdependent world and they have to," Liddle said.

She said the state of international study is changing.

"I know it will be expanding, I think more will be going to Third World countries."
COLUMBUS, Ohio -- Thomas F. Heck, head of the music/dance library at Ohio State University, has received a Fulbright Research Award through the Council for International Exchange of Scholars.

Heck, a resident of Upper Arlington, received the award for research throughout Italy in the 1985-86 academic year. His research will center on the "commedia dell'arte," an interdisciplinary topic that involves theater and dance history as well as cultural and music history of the 17th and 18th centuries.

The "commedia dell'arte" was essentially street entertainment presented by traveling troupes of Italians actors, Heck explains. Instead of having written scripts, they worked from "scenarios," a kind of outline of the performance. Actors usually used masks to represent various stock characters. Harlequin and the sad-faced clown, Pierrot, are derived from these street entertainments.

Some pictures of these performers have been preserved, as have some of the scenarios, Heck says. The pictures frequently show musical instruments such as guitars being used, but there is no record of what the music was like, he adds.
Heck’s research will attempt to learn something about the music of the commedia. He also will develop an annotated bibliography of commedia materials for publication in 1987.

Heck held a graduate fellowship under the Fulbright program in 1968-69 to Austria. His research, done for his doctoral dissertation, resulted in several publications on the early history of the classical guitar.

The Fulbright program was initiated in 1946 with the dual purpose of promoting academic and professional development and increasing understanding between the United States and other participating nations.

COLUMBUS, Ohio -- Beginning July 1, an Ohio State University professor will be helping to develop a graduate program in comparative education in Malaysia.

J. David McCracken, professor of agricultural education, has been granted an award under the 1985-86 Fulbright Program. As a Fulbright Scholar, McCracken will be spending 10 months assisting the Universiti Pertanian Malaysia in Serdang, Selangor. Pertanian is the agriculture university in Malaysia.

He will assist agriculture officials developing their educational program.

"I'll be teaching one graduate seminar each semester in comparative vocational education," he said. "I'll also have responsibility to help them develop their graduate program in vocational education in agriculture."

He will spend 70 percent of his time on research. "They want me to do a comparison of vocational education programs among the United States and the various southeast Asia countries and to come up with a recommended model for vocational education in Malaysia."

McCracken, who applied for a nomination to the position last summer, said countries participating in the Council for International Exchange of Scholars make the actual selections based on council nominations.

Malaysia was one of McCracken's choice countries because he had been there before. "Two years ago they brought me over as an external examiner to evaluate their program at the university. I spent a couple of weeks there and wrote a report to them. They knew who I was and I had an interest in returning because I knew the nature of the university there."

McCracken, of 6641 Millbrae St., WORTHINGTON, will be accompanied by his wife, Jacqueline. Daughter Diane and son Stephen are Ohio State students and will remain home.

McCracken attended high school in Iowa and earned two degrees at Iowa State University. He received his doctor of philosophy degree in 1970 while working for the National Center for Research in Vocational Education at Ohio State. He left as assistant director in 1973 to join the faculty of the Department of Agricultural Education.

He teaches several courses, advises the Agricultural Education Graduate Council, and conducts research on trends influencing the nature of the curriculum of public school education in agriculture. He is also on the International Advisory Committee of the College of Agriculture and has written several papers and articles.
MANSFIELD, Ohio -- Michael Szporer, assistant professor of English at the Mansfield campus of Ohio State University, has been awarded a Fulbright grant for the 1985-86 academic year. He will hold a lectureship in American literature at the University of Skopje, Republic of Macedonia, Yugoslavia. The Fulbright award comes through the Council for International Exchange of Scholars, one of three Fulbright granting agencies.

At the University of Skopje, he will teach courses in contemporary American poetry, American literary criticism and traditional masterpieces of American literature.

He also may be engaged in research. One research project would be a collaborative effort to organize video-taped material from the Struga Poetry Evenings International Festival, Struga, Yugoslavia, for use in poetry courses and programs for public television. Szporer was one of three U.S. representatives invited to the 23rd festival last August. Poets from some 40 nations participated.

He also is considering collaborating in translations of Yugoslavian works of literature into English. Szporer has already begun a translation of the novel "Water," by Jovan Strezovsky.

This is Szporer's second Fulbright award. In the 1982-83 academic year, he held a grant through the U.S. Department of Education. Initially intended for study in Poland, the grant was changed to support Szporer's study in France because of the tension caused by martial law in Poland.

Szporer will be in Spain in June, to present two papers. He will present one paper at a colloquium in Sitgus, which is sponsored by UNESCO, and another at the Congress of Applied Psycholinquistics, at the University of Barcelona. The paper he will present in Barcelona is a collaborative effort by Szporer with Lynn Johnson and Duane Tovey, both of the Department of Educational Theory and Practice in the College of Education, Mansfield campus.

COLUMBUS, Ohio -- Ten Ohio State University faculty members will be traveling, lecturing, or conducting advanced research abroad during the 1985-86 academic year as Fulbright Scholars.

Nine of this group are among 870 scholars from 320 American colleges and universities chosen this year for awards under the Fulbright Scholar Program administered by the Council for International Exchange of Scholars, an affiliate of the American Council on Education. The national total of awards is 100 more than last year.

Another Ohio State faculty member has received a Fulbright Award from the U.S. Department of Education.

The prestigious Fulbright Scholar program is named for former Sen. J. William Fulbright who introduced legislation in 1946 establishing the award program in order "to increase mutual understanding between the United States and the people of other countries."

In addition to scholars from the United States who teach and study in other nations, scholars from other nations study in the United States under the Fulbright program.

Spain and Ecuador, says Mary Lou Neff, international grants advisor.

Ohio State faculty who have received the CIES Fulbrights and their country of destination are:

--Donald R. Cruikshank, Upper Arlington, professor of education, Brazil;

--Thomas F. Heck, Upper Arlington, associate professor and head of the music and dance library, Italy;

--William L. Heward, Dublin, professor of human services education, Portugal;

--Yung-Hee Kwon, Columbus, assistant professor of East Asian languages and literatures, South Korea;

--R. William Liddle, Upper Arlington, professor of political science, Indonesia;

--J. David McCracken, Worthington, professor of agricultural education, Malaysia;

--Paul G. Nevai, Upper Arlington, professor of mathematics, Hungary;

--Robert A. Rapp, Columbus, professor of metallurgical engineering, France;

--Michael Szporer, Mansfield, assistant professor of English at Ohio State's Mansfield campus, Yugoslavia.

Last year Ohio State had five Fulbright Scholars, Neff says.

Ten faculty expected to travel on Fulbrights

Ten Ohio State faculty will be traveling, lecturing, or conducting advanced research abroad during 1986 as Fulbright scholars.

Nine of this group are among 870 scholars from 320 American colleges and universities chosen this year for awards under the Fulbright Scholar Program administered by the Council for International Exchange of Scholars (CIES), an affiliate of the American Council on Education. One hundred more awards were made this year than were last year.

Another Ohio State faculty member has received a Fulbright award from the U.S. Department of Education. Kenneth J. Andrien, associate professor of history, received a DOE grant this year for research in Spain and Ecuador.

Last year, five Ohio State faculty were selected as Fulbright scholars. Those from Ohio State who have received the CIES Fulbrights and their country of destination include:

- Donald R. Cruickshank, professor of education, Brazil;
- Thomas F. Heck, associate professor and head of the music and dance library, Italy;
- William L. Heward, professor of human services education, Portugal;

- J. David McCracken, professor of agricultural education, Malaysia;
- Paul G. Nevai, professor of mathematics, Hungary;
- Robert A. Rapp, professor of metallurgical engineering, France;
- Michael M. Szporer, assistant professor of English, Yugoslavia.

An administrator, Patricia J. Liddle, coordinator of Academic Programs Abroad in the University’s Center for International Studies, also held a Fulbright CIES Award last spring for three weeks of study in Germany.

The Fulbright Scholar Program is named for former Arkansas Senator J. William Fulbright, who introduced legislation in 1946 establishing the award program in order “to increase mutual understanding between the United States and the people of other countries.”
Students should prepare now for fall scholarship deadline

By Chuck Sudelic
Lantern staff writer

The September deadline on Fulbright scholarship applications may seem distant, but interested students should start preparing soon.

Fulbright scholarships generally pay all expenses for a year of postgraduate study or research in virtually any foreign country except the Soviet Union.

"Juniors, seniors and graduate students at any level are strongly encouraged to apply," said Mary Lou Neff, International scholarships adviser.

Last year, Fulbright scholarships were awarded to 56 of 64 applicants in the national competition for study in Bulgaria, Turkey, Yugoslavia and some countries of the Near East and South Asia. According to Fulbright program statistics, applicants for Finland, Iceland, Indonesia, Korea, Romania, Sweden and some Asian countries had about a 50 percent chance of receiving a scholarship, while the odds were better than one in five for Austria, Denmark, France, West Germany and Switzerland.

To apply for the 1986 competition, students must submit a one-page autobiography, a one-page study plan or research proposal, letters of recommendation and college transcripts before Sept. 22. Applicants are then interviewed by the OSU Fulbright screening committee.

In 1985, five OSU undergraduates and 17 graduate students applied for Fulbright scholarships. In recent years the university has had as few as two and as many as 11 scholarship recipients.

"There are many, many more people who should apply — especially seniors," Neff said. "Students with lower point averages should not count themselves out," Neff said. "And the language and area-studies people are not the only ones who should think about applying for awards."

Past OSU Fulbright scholars have studied mathematics education, dance, art history, music history, journalism, anthropology, law and food science.

Students in business, history, economics and the sciences can benefit from study abroad, said Edward J. Ray, chairman of the Department of Economics and a member of the OSU Fulbright screening committee.

A Fulbright scholarship is also a real plus for a student's resume, said Henry L. Hunker, professor of geography and also a member of the screening committee. "(Experience abroad) is an extremely valuable asset, something you never, never lose," he said.

Fulbright applicants are normally required to show proficiency in the language of the country for which they are applying. However, English is the language of instruction at many foreign universities, and in many countries language training is provided after the student's arrival.

The Fulbright program also offers English-language teaching assistantships and separate scholarships for students of the visual and performing arts.

Application forms and detailed information on study-abroad scholarships, including sample copies of successful proposals, are available in Dulles Hall 338.
OSU to honor anniversary of Fulbrights

There will be a Fulbright 40th Anniversary Celebration at the Ohio Union April 9-10. The celebration offers students and faculty an opportunity to learn about international study with a Fulbright Grant.

Representatives from the Institute of International Education, Council for International Exchange of Scholars and the U.S. Department of Education, as well as former Fulbright scholars will attend.

Panel discussions will be held both days. Undergraduates can attend one from 3-5 p.m. April 9 in the Stecker Lounge on the third floor. On April 10 in the Memorial Room, faculty meets from 10 a.m.-noon and graduate students from 2-4 p.m.

Also on April 10, there will be a reception from 4-6 p.m. for participants and Fulbright alumni and faculty in the Main Lounge.

The celebration is sponsored by the Office of International Affairs and the University Center for International Studies.

40th anniversary celebrated by former Fulbright winners

By Karen Gold Anisfeld
Lantern staff writer

In 1947, the nations of the world were beginning to settle the debts generated by World War II. A number of countries owed the United States money for war reparations.

Sen. J. William Fulbright initiated a bill in Congress "to permit those countries to repay their debts in local currency through programs to support scholars and students in their studies," said Thomas Hecks, a two-time recipient of the Fulbright scholarship and member of the Fulbright Resource Committee.

Former recipients of these scholarships joined prospective applicants in celebrating the 40th anniversary of the Fulbright Scholarship program Thursday and Friday at the Ohio Union.

Now, jointly funded by the United States and participating countries, the Fulbright program enables students and faculty to travel abroad in order to work with primary sources on location or, for those with proven experience, to explore a new field of study, Hecks said.

Michael Weis, a graduate student from Cleveland, researched United States-Brazilian relations between 1950 and 1961 for his dissertation. He spent the 1985-86 academic year in Rio De Janeiro, Brazil on a Fulbright scholarship.

He received a round-trip ticket, a $300 travel allowance, a $300 book subsidy and a $910 monthly stipend, to support his studies and his wife Carol and four-year-old son Gabriel.

Weis identified three stages of culture shock he went through while in Brazil.

The first occurred when he looked at all the cultural differences as "neat." Secondly, he rejected and began to complain about all of those things he previously enjoyed. He said the third stage is the month it takes to accept the cultural differences and function comfortably within the new system.

"The experience tends to make one a better person and it broadens one's horizons," Weis said.

He said participating in the conference was an opportunity to share his enthusiasm with others who have shared similar experiences and those who may be interested in a Fulbright experience in the future.

Heck received a Fulbright scholarship as a graduate student and studied music history and musicology in Vienna, Austria during the 1968-69 academic year.

Now an associate professor in music and library administration and head of the music/dance library, Heck received a research fellowship to study theater history and music in Florence, Italy during the 1985-86 school year.

Heck studied paintings, drawings and prints throughout Europe in order to determine what kind of music was being performed during the 16th to 18th centuries.

The results of his studies will be published this year in a book called "Commedia Dell'arte: A Guide to the Primary and Secondary Literature."

"I only wish that there was more support for these things," Hecks said. "For the cost of one military helicopter you could send 100 scholars abroad for a year and have change leftover."

The limited number of awardees, however, is one of the features that makes the Fulbright scholarships so prestigious, according to those who have participated in the program.

"The Fulbright program is prestigious," Weis said. "It opens doors."

The 40th anniversary celebration was one way to attract more prospective applicants to benefit from the program, said Steven Summerhill, assistant vice provost for international affairs and administrator of the Fulbright program at Ohio State.

"We need people (studying) in Burma," Summerhill said.

Too many students want to study in English-speaking countries, so the competition for those places is much steeper, he said.

"The students on this campus tend to sell themselves short," Summerhill said. "They tend to look at a program and say 'that's too exotic, I could never qualify for that.' And, in fact they can qualify.

"There really is a system here to help them to get together a really good application."

Mary Lou Neff, Fulbright advisor, said between one-third and one-fourth of the applicants from Ohio State receive grants or scholarships each year.

For the 1982-83 academic year, one-half of the applicants at Ohio State received the awards.

"The best advice I can give is to get started early, even though the proposal is short (one page for students, five-pages for faculty)," Neff said.

This will give applicants time to consult with members of the resource committee, so they can submit the best application possible, she said.

Language preparation is also important. Applicants need to be fluent in the language of the country they would like to study in, so they can do better than just get by, Neff said.

Students and faculty interested in applying for 1988-89 Fulbright scholarships should contact Mary Lou Neff at the University Center for International Studies at 292-9660.
Fulbright fellow to study in Egypt

By Judy Wiseman
Lantern staff writer

It will be warm and dry this September in Egypt, but Caroline Seymour, a Fulbright fellowship recipient, won't have much time to think about the weather. Seymour will spend one year taking courses in Arabic languages and anthropology at the American University at Cairo.

The Fulbright award is a national fellowship that allows select students to study for one year in a specific country. Approximately 100 countries accept the fellowships.

Seymour, a senior from Gambier who is double majoring in Greek and Arabic languages, enjoys archaeological surveying. She hopes to go to graduate school at the University of Chicago to study contemporary cultural anthropology.

She is interested in studying the differences of new cultures with respect to the historical values of the Middle East, said Jack Cooley, assistant dean and honors director of the College of Arts and Sciences.

"She is looking at Middle Eastern cultures and the nuances of languages with respect to how they influence one another," Cooley said.

"She will know the country and cultures so well that people who set political policies, pertaining to Middle Eastern countries, will seek her advice and counsel."

Vassilios Lambropoulos, professor of Greek, said Seymour has always had a systematic approach to her studies at Ohio State.

"Very few students plan their futures with a set plan. She is a student with drive," he said.

She has set a straight path for herself, with no uncertainty about where she is going and what she is going to do.

"I realized that I was responsible for myself," said Seymour, explaining that her parents had never pressured her, but "encouraged me to do whatever I wanted."

"If you want to study the culture of a country, it is necessary to study the language intensely," Seymour said.

Anthropology is the study of mankind, she said, involving areas such as languages, contemporary cultures, and archaeology. Seymour said all of these areas interest her.

Travel is one vehicle she has utilized to further her studies while at Ohio State.

"The most interesting thing about my career at Ohio State is that I have gotten to travel a lot," she said.

On scholarship, in 1984, she spent her summer in Jordan studying the Arabic language. In 1985, she spent seven weeks in Greece as part of a scholarship sponsored by the Center for International Studies. During this time, she studied the art, history, and archaeology of Greece.

In order to research a senior honors thesis on Greek religious beliefs, she returned to Greece last summer for 10 weeks. She said doing a thesis while still in the undergraduate program will allow her to graduate with distinction.

Seymour said the archaeological surveys she has participated in have helped her to not only look back into time, but also to explore her present surroundings.

She talked to villagers about their lives and beliefs, while also spending hours surveying the land, Lambropoulos said.

Seymour, who will graduate this spring with a 3.94 grade point average and summa cum laude honors, was exposed to other cultures early in her life.

"My mother is from Belgium and my father is from Bermuda," said Seymour, explaining why she has a natural interest in other cultures. She traveled as a youth to her parents' birthplaces and also throughout Europe.

Describing herself as "serious, introverted and curious," she said her only regret in the last four years was not getting more involved in extra-curricular activities.

"I like to hike in the country," Seymour said. She added that other hobbies she enjoys are pen-and-ink painting, water-color painting and reading historical novels.

Mary Lou Neff, Fulbright adviser at Ohio State, said Seymour has had many major academic accomplishments.

"She is a member of Phi Kappa Phi, has been on the dean's list every quarter, and has received numerous awards and grants while at Ohio State," she said.

Seymour was also a founding member of the Arabic and American Friendship Society.

Frederic Cadara, Seymour's adviser in Arabic Studies and chairman of the Department of Judaic and Near Eastern Languages and Literatures, said Seymour's academic achievements rank her with the top three students he has had in his 20 years with the university.

"It is rare to find a student who excels in both programs, (Arabic and Greek languages)," he said.

"Her total intellectual curiosity and profound accomplishments in Arabic," will assist her in making a significant contribution to her field, Cadara said.
COLUMBUS -- David R. Blanks of COLUMBUS, a graduate student at Ohio State University, has been awarded a Fulbright scholarship to research medieval history in France.

Blanks and his wife, Natalie Novak, live at 2657 East Ave. (43202).

He is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Robert J. Shaver, 5600 Sturgeon Creek Parkway, MIDLAND, MICH., and a 1979 graduate of Naperville North High School in NAPERVILLE, Ill.

Blanks was among 1,000 students chosen nationwide to receive Fulbright grants for the 1988-89 academic year.

The Fulbright Exchange Program, administered by the U.S. Information Agency, enables American students, teachers and scholars to study, teach and conduct research abroad. Foreign nationals are given the opportunity to do the same in the United States.

Award recipients are chosen on the basis of their academic and professional credentials as well as their desire and ability to interact with people of diverse cultures.

The program was established in 1946 through Congressional legislation introduced by former Sen. J. William Fulbright of Arkansas. Guidelines established by the presidially appointed Board of Foreign Scholarships ensure that the program serves, in Fulbright's words, "to increase mutual understanding between the people of the United States and the people of other countries."

Twenty-seven foreign governments share in the funding of the grants, which are awarded through open competition with final selections made by the Board of Foreign Scholarships.

COLUMBUS, Ohio -- Petar Milich of ST. LOUIS, a graduate student at Ohio State University, has been awarded a Fulbright scholarship to study Byzantine medieval Slavic history at the Byzantine Institute in Belgrade, Yugoslavia.

A 1977 graduate of Roosevelt High School, he is the son of Ludmila Milich, 2838 Shenandoah Ave., St. Louis (63104), and the late Petar Milich.

Milich was among 1,000 persons chosen nationwide to receive Fulbright grants for the 1988-89 academic year.

Graduate student program gives overseas experience

By Denise Begeman
Lantern staff writer

While most OSU students will be spending Autumn Quarter in Columbus, six Fulbright Grant recipients will be studying abroad.

The Fulbright Grant program, administered by the U.S. Information Agency, gives graduate students the opportunity to study or conduct research overseas.

The students are chosen on the basis of their academic credentials as well as their ability to communicate with the culture,' said Mary Lou Neff, International Studies advisor and staff assistant.

"One thing they look for in a student is their ability to be a good representative of the United States and Fulbright, and their awareness of the activities going on in the host country," she said.

The sole requirement for a Fulbright candidate is that the student must have earned a bachelor’s degree, Neff said.

"There are approximately 100 countries to choose from," Neff said. "The United Kingdom is one of the most highly applied to nationwide."

Neff said a large portion of funding is furnished by the federal government. Additional funds are contributed by the host governments.

She said the grant provides round-trip air fare, orientation courses, tuition, books, maintenance for one academic year and limited health and accident insurance.

Susan McCabe, an anthropology major, is scheduled to leave Sept. 1 for Montserrat, an island located in the Caribbean.

"I’ll be looking at the impact of both contemporary and historic labor migration on Montserrat," McCabe said.

She said studying in Montserrat through the Fulbright Grant program will allow her the diversity not available at Ohio State.

"A lot of social science research is too concentrated on what is going on here," McCabe said. "We need more of a contrast and that is what the Fulbright allows."

McCabe is working on her dissertation in cultural anthropology and chose Montserrat because of its excessive history of labor migration.

Neff said Fulbright applicants go through a rigorous application process.

The initial stage of the process involves filing out an application, getting recommendations from three professors and a language reference, she said.

Following these requirements, applicants interview with a Fulbright screening committee made up of OSU faculty members, who then make a recommendation to a national committee, Neff said.

"If the applicant passes the national screening, their application is sent to the particular country and the Fulbright commission there makes a final decision," she said.

John McIntosh, an instructor of East Asian culture, studied through the Fulbright Grant in Korea in 1985-86.

McIntosh said without the Fulbright Grant program he would not have received the Korean education he desired.

"I was there to study the Korean language," he said.

McIntosh first became interested in the Korean language while in the Air Force from 1977-79. In 1980, when he enrolled at Ohio State, only Japanese and Chinese language classes were offered.

"I decided to go into Chinese because the South Koreans use Chinese writing in their newspapers and on their road signs," he said.

"It is fairly difficult to learn a foreign language, especially if there is no class available," McIntosh said. "If you have a chance to go to that country, it makes your task a lot easier. It was also a good chance to get to know the culture much better than I had been able to before."

Students interested in a Fulbright Grant application should contact Mary Lou Neff at the International Studies Department in Dulles Hall.
TWO STUDENTS RECEIVE FULBRIGHT FELLOWSHIPS

COLUMBUS -- Two graduate students at The Ohio State University have received Fulbright Fellowships for international study in the 1989-90 academic year.

Susan Anne Carlson, a Ph.D. candidate in English, will lecture in English as a second language at Anadolu University in Turkey.

Carlson, who earned her master's degree in English from Ohio State in 1987, has been a graduate teaching assistant at Ohio State since 1984. She holds a bachelor's degree from Drew University in New Jersey.

A 1980 graduate of Hanover Park High School in East Hanover, N.J., she is the daughter of Joan Marie Carlson of Basking Ridge, N.J., and Clifton Carlson of Summit, N.J.

Robert Vocca, a Ph.D. candidate in German, will study at the Free University of Berlin, where he will conduct research on German literature.

Vocca, a 1972 graduate of Harbor High School in Ashtabula, is the son of Marie Vocca, 1813 W. Fifth St., Ashtabula (44004). Fulbright scholarships are awarded to U.S. graduate students, teachers and scholars for study abroad and to foreign nationals for study in the United States. Selection is based primarily on academic and professional qualifications. Established by Congress in 1946, the program is designed to increase understanding between people of the United States and people of other countries.

Organizers seek to boost Fulbrights

By David Tull

Ohio State has about 12 graduate students in other countries on Fulbright study programs and more than 30 recipients from other countries studying here.

Nearly a dozen Ohio State faculty are lecturing or researching abroad this year under the Fulbright auspices.

That's good, but it could be expanded.

"We have an active program and a good program," says James Siddens, the University's Fulbright adviser. "We'd like to have more people participating and representation from more (academic) areas."

Siddens, assistant dean of the Graduate School, has administered the Fulbright program since July when it was moved to the Graduate School from the Center for International Studies. Dean Roy Koenigsknecht is director. The office provides opportunities for Ohio State faculty, administrators and students to study abroad.

"Mary Lou Neff (the former adviser who retired in July) did an outstanding job," says Siddens. "The number of students is higher than the year before and the highest in several years."

A Fulbright Alumni Association was formed here about three years ago. In early November, the association held a reception, inviting the 167 faculty and administrators known to have participated in the past, as well as the 32 international students currently enrolled here on Fulbright grants.

The Fulbright Alumni Association aims at supporting and promoting the program to strengthen Ohio State's international education efforts, says Cres Ricca, coordinator of international students. Ricca is secretary-treasurer of the alumni association.

"The alumni association is composed of faculty and administrators who have come back from (Fulbright study) abroad," Ricca says. "Our goal is to promote international exchange and serve as host to international students here on exchange. We want to provide the same hospitality, courtesy and friendship that we enjoyed when we were in other countries."

The association is seeking names of Ohio State faculty and staff who have held Fulbrights, Ricca stresses. Fulbright alumni should contact her at 292-6101, or one of the other association officers.

The organization plans to have a special event at least once a quarter, says association president Henry Hunker. Acting dean of the School of Public Policy and Management and professor of geography, Hunker held a Fulbright grant to Australia in 1957.

The association hopes to reach out to students and faculty interested in applying for a grant, Hunker says. The Fulbrights are "very prestigious and important opportunities for overseas study," says Hunker. "We should have many more overseas."

Since the Fulbright program was initiated by the federal government in 1947, more than 24,000 Americans have taught, lectured, conducted research and studied overseas. The name honors former Sen. J. William Fulbright, a principal founder.

The program was launched as part of the nation's foreign policy aimed at improving world understanding, says Ricca, herself a Fulbright alumna.

"The thrust of the program originally was in Europe just after World War II. In rebuilding, it was intended to develop a new generation of faculty and educators geared to sharing knowledge in all areas of endeavor," Ricca says.

The grants provide generous support, covering most of the costs, including books and occasional field trips. There is a stipulation that international students must return to work in their own countries for at least two years.

Fulbrights include three distinct aspects, notes Siddens. The program is administered by the Institute of International Education. It provides a year of graduate study abroad or a teaching assistantship (France and Germany only). Typically, the students are graduate students, Siddens adds. Ohio State students apply through the University.

A second component, Fulbright Scholars, offers grants for research and lecturing abroad. Most recipients are faculty who have their doctoral degrees. They apply directly to the Council for International Exchange of Scholars, Washington, D.C. Some non-faculty also are accepted.

A third component is administered by the U.S. Department of Education and is largely limited to foreign language studies and studies of a geographic area. Candidates apply through the University and, in contrast to the other two programs, grants are disbursed by Ohio State to the faculty members.

"When you're studying a country, there is no substitute for actually working in that country," says David F. Robinson, associate professor of Slavic and East European languages and literatures. "You can meet people in that country who are in your field, talk to them and see how they work."

Robinson, a member of the alumni association board, in 1968 studied in Italy, France and the United Kingdom under a Fulbright grant. He was chosen a second time in 1982, but declined. In 1988, he once again was chosen and studied mediaval manuscripts in the Serbian National Libraries, Belgrade, Yugoslavia.

The Fulbrights enable a scholar to concentrate on research, knowing that his or her basic material needs are taken care of, Robinson says. Faculty grants attempt to match the individual's normal salary as nearly as possible.

For information and applications for the various overseas opportunities, call Siddens at 292-6031.

NINE OHIO STATE STUDENTS, PROFESSORS RECEIVE FULBRIGHT AWARDS

COLUMBUS -- Five Ohio State University students and four faculty members have received American Fulbright Scholar Awards for teaching and conducting research abroad.

The awards are for the 1991-92 academic year. They were chosen by the J. William Fulbright Foreign Scholarship Board. Appointed by President Bush, the board is responsible for providing policy guidance for the program and making the final selection of all grantees.

The students are:
- David E. Aldstadt Jr. of GALLOWAY, who will teach and study French government in France.
- Laurel Davis of TIPP CITY, who will study modern history in Germany.
- Sarah M. Rehfeldt of COLUMBUS (43202) who will teach and study German in Germany.
- Clifford Rogers of COLUMBUS (43201), who will study history in the United Kingdom.
- Andrew Saperstein of COLUMBUS (43211), who will study linguistics and the Uzbek dialectology in Pakistan.

The faculty members are:
- William I. Ausich of WORTHINGTON, professor of geology and mineralogy. Ausich will do research at Trinity College in Dublin, Ireland, next spring and summer.
- Lee B. Becker of COLUMBUS (43214), professor of journalism and communication. Becker is conducting research at the Hanover College of Music and Theater in Germany.
- Douglas E. Graf of COLUMBUS (43201), associate professor of architecture. Graf is lecturing and doing research at Tampere University of Technology in Tampere, Finland.
- James Morganstern of COLUMBUS (43214), associate professor of history of art, is conducting research at the Archives Departementales in Rouen and the Caisse Nationale des Monuments Historiques et des Sites in Paris.

Will Ohio scholars make mark elsewhere?

Mark Harper, 33, is a perfect example of what is right with higher education in this state.

Harper was one of the three college students in the nation selected as outstanding young inventors in an annual BF Goodrich program.

A 1989 graduate of Ohio State University who soon will earn a doctorate there, Harper will be traveling to the University of New South Wales in Sydney, Australia, on a Fulbright Scholarship to do additional research for a year.

OSU shares the honor with Harper, because another student from its campus also was selected last year by the BF Goodrich Collegiate Inventors Program.

Harper said he came to Columbus because of the university’s nationally recognized welding engineering program, although he switched into metallurgical engineering later.

He is waiting for a patent on his invention, a process for depositing chromium and silicon as a diffusion coating on steels to improve their resistance to corrosion.

When Gordon Gee took over as president of OSU in 1990, he vowed to push academics and recruit promising scholars. He made remarkable progress, pushing the university in one year from 79th to ninth in the nation in the number of National Merit Scholars enrolled as freshman.

Unfortunately in April, undoubtedly as a consequence of impending cuts in state funding, OSU decided it would have to limit full-ride scholarships for National Merit Scholars coming in as freshmen in the fall.

There are 122 finalists in the program who have indicated the university as their first choice; 102 enrolled last year. In addition, about 160 high-school valedictorians and 880 University Scholars are headed to OSU in the fall.

The university is attracting high achievers, but the ability of it and other state-supported post-secondary schools to continue to provide for the best and the brightest is being threatened by the budget impasse in the Statehouse.

The governor has targeted state schools for more than their fair share of cuts, as he and the legislature failed to agree on how to raise additional revenues.

The state’s priorities are horribly out of whack when it can’t provide the money to help its fine colleges nurture the young people who hold the promise of becoming society’s most productive citizens.

Truly, education of self-starters like Harper is the key to keeping this nation’s economy healthy and growing.

Retiring faculty? Apply for Fulbright Program

By John W. Frees

Faculty members who are taking advantage of the Early Retirement Incentive might consider applying to the Fulbright Program.

Last year, 13 Ohio State faculty became Fulbright scholars, spending all or part of the school year teaching in places like Greece, Ireland and Mexico, said Kevin Harty, Ohio State's Fulbright program adviser. The Fulbright Program offers faculty a chance to live and teach abroad for two months to a year. Many assignments are flexible.

Virtually all disciplines participate, including those in the humanities, social sciences, natural and applied sciences, the arts, journalism, the law, and more, Harty said.

"With so many faculty retiring, I would hope that many consider Fulbright, an exciting time in another country's culture, as a possibility," Harty said.

Nationwide, about 1,000 Fulbright scholars are chosen for overseas assignments every year by the Council for International Exchange of Scholars (CIES). The basic eligibility requirements are a Ph.D. or comparable professional qualifications, and U.S. citizenship. All expenses are paid and spouses are invited.

Deadline for application is Aug. 1 for the 1994-95 school year. Those interested should read the CIES booklet that lists all the countries seeking scholars next year, Harty said. For the booklet or more information, call Irene Sova, administrative secretary in Office of International Education, 292-6101, or the CIES directly at (202) 686-7877.

Ohio State boasts record number of Fulbrights

By: Encarnita Pyle

The Columbus Dispatch - October 30, 2013 05:23 PM

Ohio State University is the nation's top-producer of Fulbrights and ranks 14th in producing U.S. Fulbright students, officials announced today.

As the U.S.'s government's premiere international exchange program, the Fulbright Program provides grants for students and scholars to study, teach or do research in 155 countries across the globe.

This school year, 14 Ohio State faculty members earned Fulbright Scholar grants. Another 16 Buckeyes, including recent graduates and current graduate students, will represent the school and the nation as winners of the student awards. These students will teach others around the world, sharing American culture and researching topics from physics to post-war Russia.

"The Fulbright Program is among our faculty's most important gateways to opportunities abroad," Ohio State Provost Joseph E. Stainton said in a written statement. "Fulbright funding helps faculty members carry out work in international settings that simply can't be accomplished elsewhere.

"They then come back to Ohio State and share the benefits of what they've discovered with our students -- many of whom, as our numbers attest, are then inspired to seek their own Fulbrights."

Ohio State officials credit the school's success to increased emphasis on the opportunities, including the hosting a Fulbright Week.

"International experience has long been a crucial part of graduate education and graduate research, and it will be increasingly more important in this globalized world," said Patrick S. Osmer, OSU's vice provost for graduate studies.

14 FROM OHIO STATE EARN FULBRIGHT SCHOLAR GRANTS FOR 2013-2014

Fourteen faculty members from The Ohio State University have been selected as recipients of prestigious Fulbright fellowships. Recipients are selected by the Council for International Exchange of Scholars, which administers the program for the U.S. Department of State. The Fulbright Scholar Program offers U.S. faculty, administrators and professionals grants to lecture, conduct research or participate in seminars abroad. Approximately 1,100 U.S. faculty and professionals travel abroad on Fulbright Scholar Programs each year.

2013-2014 Ohio State U.S. Fulbright Scholars

- Carol Boram-Hays (lecturer, art history, The Ohio State University Marion), for "Art, Power and Zulu Beadwork: A Collaboration with the University of Witwatersrand," at the University of Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, South Africa, January - June 2014
- Phillip Brown (professor, Japanese and East Asian history), for "Dam Imperialism: The Case of the Wusantou Dam, Taiinan, and Related Projects," at the Institute for Taiwan History at Academia Sinica in Taipei, Taipei, Taiwan, February - May 2014

"I am thrilled to continue my ambition of lifelong learning as a Buckeye graduate. I look forward to returning from Brazil with an enriched worldview and a deeper understanding of the everyday people from this rising global player."

The Fulbright ranking is the latest sign that Ohio State is a university on the rise.

"Ohio State is really increasing its participation with the Fulbright and gaining national recognition for our efforts," says Dana Kuchem, who manages Ohio State's Undergraduate Fellowship Office (http://fellowships.osu.edu) and was a Fulbright recipient.

This academic year, 16 Buckeyes--recent alumni and graduate students--will represent the United States as student Fulbrights. They'll be teaching students around the world, sharing American culture and researching topics from physics to post-war Russia.

"Our students are a perfect fit for the Fulbright program," says Linn Van Woerkom (http://hedp.osu.edu/people/van-woerkom), associate provost at the University Honors and Scholars Center (http://honors-scholars.osu.edu/) and recipient of the prestigious Fulbright International Education Administrators award (http://hedp.osu.edu/news/professor-linn-van-woerkom-receive-fulbright-international-education-administrators-award). "They're born ambassadors: outgoing, engaged in their communities and eager to learn about the world around them."

Ohio State has had 173 student grantees since 1986, averaging 10 recipients a year in the last five years.

In recent years, Ohio State has worked hard to make students aware of the opportunities. Ten years ago, Kuchem says, Ohio State might have submitted a dozen applicants for the grants; last year, the university forwarded 72 completed applications.

"Once we began encouraging students to throw their hat in the ring, more and more students began winning Fulbright grants, and the success has snowballed," Van Woerkom says.

Patrick S. Osmer (http://paa.osu.edu/vice-provost-for-graduate-studies.html), vice provost for graduate studies and dean of the Graduate School (http://gradsch.osu.edu/), says international experience has always been an important part of a graduate school education--but is increasingly important "in this globalized world."

"The Fulbright programs provide critical support to our graduate students who are conducting research in other countries," Osmer says. "I'm delighted to see that Ohio State graduate students are successfully competing for these prestigious awards."
