Introduction
McGowan Miller was born in Regina, Saskatchewan, Canada, on September 13, 1908. His family moved to Portland, Oregon, in 1904, where he took a correspondence course in cartooning, drew for his school newspaper, and was a member of the swim team. Following the death of his father, the family moved to Los Angeles, where he continued swimming at Hollywood High and became the Southern California free-style champion. He attended University of Oregon and worked toward a journalism degree, but he did not graduate because of financial hardship. At this time, he worked as a staff artist for the Seattle Post Intelligencer.

Mac Miller was a member of the national championship team A.A.U. in 1931. He worked in Palm Springs, California, as a swimming instruction during 1933-1934 and sold caricatures of movie stars to several Hollywood magazines. He then moved to New Orleans where he freelanced for several publications. He next moved to New York City where he sold gag cartoons to several magazines, and in 1941, he joined Associated Press. In the spring of 1942, Miller enlisted in the Army Air Corps. He served in Miami, Florida, Washington DC, and in the Pacific. He was discharged in July 1946 with the rank of major.

King features hired Miller for its comic art department where he did a number of features including Comic Weekly Club Corner, Make It Fun, and Noah Numbskull. He was active in the Air Force reserves and held the rank of lieutenant colonel. He was a charter member of the National Cartoonists Society and received many awards, including the Silver T-Square, from this group. For more than twenty years, he entertained U.S. troops around the world in USO shows that featured National Cartoonists Society members doing chalk talks.

The McGowan Miller Collection was the gift of John K. Ball in 2002.

The McGowan Miller Collection is organized into three general groupings:
